MESSAGE.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The foreign relations of the United States actually and potentially affect the state of the Union to a degree not widely realized and hardly surpassed by any other factor in the welfare of the whole Nation. The position of the United States in the moral, intellectual, and material relations of the family of nations should be a matter of vital interest to every patriotic citizen. The national prosperity and power impose upon us duties which we can not shirk if we are to be true to our ideals. The tremendous growth of the export trade of the United States has already made that trade a very real factor in the industrial and commercial prosperity of the country. With the development of our industries the foreign commerce of the United States must rapidly become a still more essential factor in its economic welfare. Whether we have a far-seeing and wise diplomacy and are not recklessly plunged into unnecessary wars, and whether our foreign policies are based upon an intelligent grasp of present-day world conditions and a clear view of the potentialities of the future, or are governed by a temporary and timid expediency or by narrow views befitting an infant nation, are questions in the alternative consideration of which must convince any thoughtful citizen that no department of national polity offers greater opportunity for promoting the interests of the whole people on the one hand, or greater chance on the other of permanent national injury, than that which deals with the foreign relations of the United States.

The fundamental foreign policies of the United States should be raised high above the conflict of partisanship and wholly dissociated from differences as to domestic policy. In its foreign affairs the United States should present to the world a united front. The intellectual, financial, and industrial interests of the country and the publicist, the wage earner, the farmer, and citizen of whatever occupation must cooperate in a spirit of high patriotism to promote that national solidarity which is indispensable to national efficiency and to the attainment of national ideals.

The relations of the United States with all foreign powers remain upon a sound basis of peace, harmony, and friendship. A greater insistence upon justice to American citizens or interests wherever it may have been denied and a stronger emphasis of the need of mutuality in commercial and other relations have only served to strengthen our friendships with foreign countries by placing those friendships upon a firm foundation of realities as well as aspirations.

Before briefly reviewing the more important events of the last year in our foreign relations, which it is my duty to do as charged with their conduct and because diplomatic affairs are not of a nature to make it appropriate that the Secretary of State make a formal annual report, I desire to touch upon some of the essentials to the safe management of the foreign relations of the United States and to endeavor, also, to define clearly certain concrete policies which are the logical modern corollaries of the undisputed and traditional fundamentals of the foreign policy of the United States.

REORGANIZATION OF THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

At the beginning of the present administration the United States, having fully entered upon its position as a world power, with the responsibilities thrust upon it by the results of the Spanish-American War, and already engaged in laying the groundwork of a vast foreign trade upon which it should one day become more and more dependent, found itself without the machinery for giving thorough attention to, and taking effective action upon, a mass of intricate business vital to American interests in every country in the world.

The Department of State was an archaic and inadequate machine lacking most of the attributes of the foreign office of any great modern power. With an appropriation made upon my recommendation by the Congress on August 5, 1909, the Department of State was completely reorganized. There were created Divisions of Latin-American Affairs and of Far Eastern, Near Eastern, and Western European Affairs. To these divisions were called from the foreign service diplomatic and consular officers possessing experience and knowledge gained by actual service in different parts of the world and thus familiar with political and commercial conditions in the regions concerned. The work was highly specialized. The result is that where previously this Government from time to time would emphasize in its foreign relations one or another policy, now American interests in every quarter of the globe are being cultivated with equal assiduity. This principle of politico-geographical division possesses also the good feature of making possible rotation between the officers of the departmental, the diplomatic, and the consular branches of the foreign service, and thus keeps the whole diplomatic and consular establishments under the Department of State in close touch and equally inspired with the aims and policy of the Government. Through the newly created Division of Information the foreign service is kept fully informed of what transpires from day to day in the international relations of the country, and contemporary foreign comment affecting American interests is promptly brought to the attention of the department. The law offices of the department were greatly strengthened. There were added foreign-trade advisers to cooperate with the diplomatic and consular bureaus and the politico-geographical divisions in the innumerable matters where commercial diplomacy or consular work calls for such special knowledge. The same officers, together with the rest of the new organization, are able at all times to give to American citizens accurate information as to conditions in foreign countries with which they have business and likewise to cooperate more effectively with the Congress and also with the other executive departments.

MERIT SYSTEM IN CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC CORPS.

Expert knowledge and professional training must evidently be the essence of this reorganization. Without a trained foreign service there would not be men available for the work in the reorganized Department of State. President Cleveland had taken the first step toward introducing the merit system in the foreign service. That had been followed by the application of the merit principle, with excellent results, to the entire consular branch. Almost nothing, however, had been done in this direction with regard to the Diplomatic Service. In this age of commercial diplomacy it was evidently of the first importance to train an adequate personnel in that branch of the service. Therefore, on November 26, 1909, by an Executive order I placed the Diplomatic Service, up to the grade of secretary of embassy, inclusive, upon exactly the same strict nonpartisan basis of the merit system, rigid examination for appointment and promotion only for efficiency, as had been maintained without exception in the Consular Service.

STATISTICS AS TO MERIT AND NONPARTISAN CHARACTER OF APPOINTMENTS.

How faithful to the merit system and how nonpartisan has been the conduct of the Diplomatic and Consular Services in the last four years may be judged from the following: Three ambassadors now serving held their present rank at the beginning of my administration. Of the ten ambassadors whom I have appointed, five were by promotion from the rank of minister. Nine ministers now serving held their present rank at the beginning of the administration. Of the thirty ministers whom I have appointed, eleven were promoted from the lower grades of the foreign service or from the Department of State. Of the nineteen missions in Latin America, where our relations are close and our interest is great, fifteen chiefs of mission are service men, three having entered the service during this administration. The thirty-seven secretaries of embassy or legation who have received their initial appointments after passing successfully the required examination were chosen for ascertained fitness, without regard to political affiliations. A dearth of candidates from Southern and Western States has alone made it impossible thus far completely to equalize all the States' representations in the foreign service. In the effort to equalize the representation of the various States in the Consular Service I have made sixteen of the twenty-nine new appointments as consul which have occurred during my administration from the Southern States. This is 55 per cent. Every other consular appointment made, including the promotion of eleven young men from the consular assistant and student interpreter corps, has been by promotion or transfer, based solely upon efficiency shown in the service.

In order to assure to the business and other interests of the United States a continuance of the resulting benefits of this reform, I earnestly renew my previous recommendations of legislation making it permanent along some such lines as those of the measure now pending in Congress.

LARGER PROVISION FOR EMBASSIES AND LEGATIONS AND FOR OTHER EXPENSES OF OUR FOREIGN REPRESENTATIVES RECOMMENDED.

In connection with legislation for the amelioration of the foreign service, I wish to invite attention to the advisability of placing the salary appropriations upon a better basis. I believe that the best results would be obtained by a moderate scale of salaries, with adequate funds for the expenses of proper representation, based in each case upon the scale and cost of living at each post, controlled by a system of accounting, and under the general direction of the Department of State.

In line with the object which I have sought of placing our foreign service on a basis of permanency, I have at various times advocated provision by Congress for the acquisition of Government-owned buildings for the residence and offices of our diplomatic officers, so as to place them more nearly on an equality with similar officers of other nations and to do away with the discrimination which otherwise must necessarily be made, in some cases, in favor of men having large private fortunes. The act of Congress which I approved on February 17, 1911, was a right step in this direction. The Secretary of State has already made the limited recommendations permitted by the act for any one year, and it is my hope that the bill introduced in the House of Representatives to carry out these recommendations will be favorably acted on by the Congress during its present session.

In some Latin-American countries the expense of government-owned legations will be less than elsewhere, and it is certainly very urgent that in such countries as some of the Republics of Central America and the Caribbean, where it is peculiarly difficult to rent suitable quarters, the representatives of the United States should be justly and adequately provided with dignified and suitable official residences. Indeed, it is high time that the dignity and power of this great Nation should be fittingly signalized by proper buildings for the occupancy of the Nation's representatives everywhere abroad.

DIPLOMACY A HANDMAID OF COMMERCIAL INTERCOURSE AND PEACE.

The diplomacy of the present administration has sought to respond to modern ideas of commercial intercourse. This policy has been characterized as substituting dollars for bullets. It is one that appeals alike to idealistic humanitarian sentiments, to the dictates of sound policy and strategy, and to legitimate commercial aims. It is an effort frankly directed to the increase of American trade upon the axiomatic principle that the Government of the United States shall extend all proper support to every legitimate and beneficial American enterprise abroad. How great have been the results of this diplomacy, coupled with the maximum and minimum provision of the tariff law, will be seen by some consideration of the wonderful increase in the export trade of the United States. Because modern diplomacy is commercial, there has been a disposition in some quarters to attribute to it none but materialistic aims. How strikingly erroneous is such an impression may be seen from a study of the results by which the diplomacy of the United States can be judged.

SUCCESSFUL EFFORTS IN PROMOTION OF PEACE.

In the field of work toward the ideals of peace this Government negotiated, but to my regret was unable to consummate, two arbitration treaties which set the highest mark of the aspiration of nations toward the substitution of arbitration and reason for war in the settlement of international disputes. Through the efforts of American diplomacy several wars have been prevented or ended. I refer to the successful tripartite mediation of the Argentine Republic, Brazil, and the United States between Peru and Ecuador; the bringing of the boundary dispute between Panama and Costa Rica to peaceful arbitration; the staying of warlike preparations when Haiti and the Dominican Republic were on the verge of hostilities; the stopping of a war in Nicaragua; the halting of internecine strife in Honduras. The Government of the United States was thanked for its influence toward the restoration of amicable relations between the Argentine Republic and Bolivia. The diplomacy of the United States is active in seeking to assuage the remaining ill-feeling between this country and the Republic of Colombia. In the recent civil war in China the United States successfully joined with the other interested powers in urging an early cessation of hostilities. An agreement has been reached between the Governments of Chile and Peru whereby the celebrated Tacna-Arica dispute, which has so long embittered international relations on the west coast of South America, has at last been adjusted. Simultaneously came the news that the boundary dispute between Peru and Ecuador had entered upon a stage of amicable settlement. The position of the United States in reference to the Tacna-Arica dispute between Chile and Peru has been one of nonintervention, but one of friendly influence and pacific counsel throughout the period during which the dispute in question has been the subject of interchange of views between this Government and the two Governments immediately concerned. In the general easing of international tension on the west coast of South America the tripartite mediation, to which I have referred, has been a most potent and beneficent factor.

CHINA.

In China the policy of encouraging financial investment to enable that country to help itself has had the result of giving new life and practical application to the open-door policy. The consistent purpose of the present administration has been to encourage the use of American capital in the development of China by the promotion of those essential reforms to which China is pledged by treaties with the United States and other powers. The hypothecation to foreign bankers in connection with certain industrial enterprises, such as the Hukuang railways, of the national revenues upon which these reforms depended, led the Department of State early in the administration to demand for American citizens participation in such enterprises, in order that the United States might have equal rights and an equal voice in all questions pertaining to the disposition of the public revenues concerned. The same policy of promoting international accord among the powers having similar treaty rights as ourselves in the matters of reform, which could not be put into practical effect without the common consent of all, was likewise adopted in the case of the loan desired by China for the reform of its currency. The principle of international cooperation in matters of common interest upon which our policy had already been based in all of the above instances has admittedly been a great factor in that concert of the powers which has been so happily conspicuous during the perilous period of transition through which the great Chinese nation has been passing.

CENTRAL AMERICA NEEDS OUR HELP IN DEBT ADJUSTMENT.

In Central America the aim has been to help such countries as Nicaragua and Honduras to help themselves. They are the immediate beneficiaries. The national benefit to the United States is twofold. First, it is obvious that the Monroe doctrine is more vital in the neighborhood of the Panama Canal and the zone of the Caribbean than anywhere else. There, too, the maintenance of that doctrine falls most heavily upon the United States. It is therefore essential that the countries within that sphere shall be removed from the jeopardy involved by heavy foreign debt and chaotic national finances and from the ever-present danger of international complications due to disorder at home. Hence the United States has been glad to encourage and support American bankers who were willing to lend a helping hand to the financial rehabilitation of such countries because this financial rehabilitation and the protection of their customhouses from being the prey of would-be dictators would remove at one stroke the menace of foreign creditors and the menace of revolutionary disorder.

The second advantage to the United States is one affecting chiefly all the southern and Gulf ports and the business and industry of the South. The Republics of Central America and the Caribbean possess great natural wealth. They need only a measure of stability and the means of financial regeneration to enter upon an era of peace and prosperity, bringing profit and happiness to themselves and at the same time creating conditions sure to lead to a flourishing interchange of trade with this country.

I wish to call your especial attention to the recent occurrences in Nicaragua, for I believe the terrible events recorded there during the revolution of the past summer—the useless loss of life, the devastation of property, the bombardment of defenseless cities, the killing and wounding of women and children, the torturing of noncombatants to exact contributions, and the suffering of thousands of human beings—might have been averted had the Department of State, through approval of the loan convention by the Senate, been permitted to carry out its now well-developed policy of encouraging the extending of financial aid to weak Central American States with the primary objects of avoiding just such revolutions by assisting those Republics to rehabilitate their finances, to establish their currency on a stable basis, to remove the customhouses from the danger of revolutions by arranging for their secure administration, and to establish reliable banks.

During this last revolution in Nicaragua, the Government of that Republic having admitted its inability to protect American life and property against acts of sheer lawlessness on the part of the malcontents, and having requested this Government to assume that office, it became necessary to land over 2,000 marines and bluejackets in Nicaragua. Owing to their presence the constituted Government of Nicaragua was free to devote its attention wholly to its internal troubles, and was thus enabled to stamp out the rebellion in a short space of time. When the Red Cross supplies sent to Granada had been exhausted, 8,000 persons having been given food in one day upon the arrival of the American forces, our men supplied other unfortunate, needy Nicaraguans from their own haversacks. I wish to congratulate the officers and men of the United States Navy and Marine Corps who took part in reestablishing order in Nicaragua upon their splendid conduct, and to record with sorrow the death of seven American marines and bluejackets. Since the reestablishment of peace and order, elections have been held amid conditions of quiet and tranquillity. Nearly all the American marines have now been withdrawn. The country should soon be on the road to recovery. The only apparent danger now threatening Nicaragua arises from the shortage of funds. Although American bankers have already rendered assistance, they may naturally be loath to advance a loan adequate to set the country upon its feet without the support of some such convention as that of June, 1911, upon which the Senate has not yet acted.

ENFORCEMENT OF NEUTRALITY LAWS.

In the general effort to contribute to the enjoyment of peace by those Republics which are near neighbors of the United States, the administration has enforced the so-called neutrality statutes with a new vigor, and those statutes were greatly strengthened in restricting the exportation of arms and munitions by the joint resolution of last March. It is still a regrettable fact that certain American ports are made the rendezvous of professional revolutionists and others engaged in intrigue against the peace of those Republics. It must be admitted that occasionally a revolution in this region is justified as a real popular movement to throw off the shackles of a vicious and tyrannical government. Such was the Nicaraguan revolution against the Zelaya régime. A nation enjoying our liberal institutions can not escape sympathy with a true popular movement, and one so well justified. In very many cases, however, revolutions in the Republics in question have no basis in principle, but are due merely to the machinations of conscienceless and ambitious men, and have no effect but to bring new suffering and fresh burdens to an already oppressed people. The question whether the use of American ports as foci of revolutionary intrigue can be best dealt with by a further amendment to the neutrality statutes or whether it would be safer to deal with special cases by special laws is one worthy of the careful consideration of the Congress.

VISIT OF SECRETARY KNOX TO CENTRAL AMERICA AND THE CARIBBEAN.

Impressed with the particular importance of the relations between the United States and the Republics of Central America and the Caribbean region, which of necessity must become still more intimate by reason of the mutual advantages which will be presented by the opening of the Panama Canal, I directed the Secretary of State last February to visit these Republics for the purpose of giving evidence of the sincere friendship and good will which the Government and people of the United States bear toward them. Ten Republics were visited. Everywhere he was received with a cordiality of welcome and a generosity of hospitality such as to impress me deeply and to merit our warmest thanks. The appreciation of the Governments and peoples of the countries visited, which has been appropriately shown in various ways, leaves me no doubt that his visit will conduce to that closer union and better understanding between the United States and those Republics which I have had it much at heart to promote.

OUR MEXICAN POLICY.

For two years revolution and counter-revolution have distraught the neighboring Republic of Mexico. Brigandage has involved a great deal of depredation upon foreign interests. There have constantly recurred questions of extreme delicacy. On several occasions very difficult situations have arisen on our frontier. Throughout this trying period, the policy of the United States has been one of patient nonintervention, steadfast recognition of constituted authority in the neighboring nation, and the exertion of every effort to care for American interests. I profoundly hope that the Mexican nation may soon resume the path of order, prosperity, and progress. To that nation in its sore troubles, the sympathetic friendship of the United States has been demonstrated to a high degree. There were in Mexico at the beginning of the revolution some thirty or forty thousand American citizens engaged in enterprises contributing greatly to the prosperity of that Republic and also benefiting the important trade between the two countries. The investment of American capital in Mexico has been estimated at $1,000,000,000. The responsibility of endeavoring to safeguard those interests and the dangers inseparable from propinquity to so turbulent a situation have been great, but I am happy to have been able to adhere to the policy above outlined—a policy which I hope may be soon justified by the complete success of the Mexican people in regaining the blessings of peace and good order.

AGRICULTURAL CREDITS.

A most important work, accomplished in the past year by the American diplomatic officers in Europe, is the investigation of the agricultural credit system in the European countries. Both as a means to afford relief to the consumers of this country through a more thorough development of agricultural resources and as a means of more sufficiently maintaining the agricultural population, the project to establish credit facilities for the farmers is a concern of vital importance to this Nation. No evidence of prosperity among well-established farmers should blind us to the fact that lack of capital is preventing a development of the Nation's agricultural resources and an adequate increase of the land under cultivation; that agricultural production is fast falling behind the increase in population; and that, in fact, although these well-established farmers are maintained in increasing prosperity because of the natural increase in population, we are not developing the industry of agriculture. We are not breeding in proportionate numbers a race of independent and independence-loving landowners, for a lack of which no growth of cities can compensate. Our farmers have been our mainstay in times of crisis, and in future it must still largely be upon their stability and common sense that this democracy must rely to conserve its principles of self-government.

The need of capital which American farmers feel to-day had been experienced by the farmers of Europe, with their centuries-old farms, many years ago. The problem had been successfully solved in the Old World and it was evident that the farmers of this country might profit by a study of their systems. I therefore ordered, through the Department of State, an investigation to be made by the diplomatic officers in Europe, and I have laid the results of this investigation before the governors of the various States with the hope that they will be used to advantage in their forthcoming meeting.

INCREASE OF FOREIGN TRADE.

In my last annual message I said that the fiscal year ended June 30, 1911, was noteworthy as marking the highest record of exports of American products to foreign countries. The fiscal year 1912 shows that this rate of advance has been maintained, the total domestic exports having a valuation approximately of $2,200,000,000, as compared with a fraction over $2,000,000,000 the previous year. It is also significant that manufactured and partly manufactured articles continue to be the chief commodities forming the volume of our augmented exports, the demands of our own people for consumption requiring that an increasing proportion of our abundant agricultural products be kept at home. In the fiscal year 1911 the exports of articles in the various stages of manufacture, not including foodstuffs partly or wholly manufactured, amounted approximately to $907,500,000. In the fiscal year 1912 the total was nearly $1,022,000,000, a gain of $114,000,000.

ADVANTAGE OF MAXIMUM AND MINIMUM TARIFF PROVISION.

The importance which our manufactures have assumed in the commerce of the world in competition with the manufactures of other countries again draws attention to the duty of this Government to use its utmost endeavors to secure impartial treatment for American products in all markets. Healthy commercial rivalry in international intercourse is best assured by the possession of proper means for protecting and promoting our foreign trade. It is natural that competitive countries should view with some concern this steady expansion of our commerce. If in some instances the measure taken by them to meet it are not entirely equitable, a remedy should be found. In former messages I have described the negotiations of the Department of State with foreign Governments for the adjustment of the maximum and minimum tariff as provided in section 2 of the tariff law of 1909. The advantages secured by the adjustment of our trade relations under this law have continued during the last year, and some additional cases of discriminatory treatment of which we had reason to complain have been removed. The Department of

State has for the first time in the history of this country obtained substantial most-favored-nation treatment from all the countries of the world. There are, however, other instances which, while apparently not constituting undue discrimination in the sense of section 2, are nevertheless exceptions to the complete equity of tariff treatment for American products that the Department of State consistently has sought to obtain for American commerce abroad.

NECESSITY FOR SUPPLEMENTARY LEGISLATION.

These developments confirm the opinon conveyed to you in my annual message of 1911, that while the maximum and minimum provision of the tariff law of 1909 has been fully justified by the success achieved in removing previously existing undue discriminations against American products, yet experience has shown that this feature of the law should be amended in such way as to provide a fully effective means of meeting the varying degrees of discriminatory treatment of American commerce in foreign countries still encountered, as well as to protect against injurious treatment on the part of foreign Governments, through either legislative or administrative measures, the financial interests abroad of American citizens whose enterprises enlarge the market for American commodities.

I can not too strongly recommend to the Congress the passage of some such enabling measure as the bill which was recommended by the Secretary of State in his letter of December 13, 1911. The object of the proposed legislation is, in brief, to enable the Executive to apply, as the case may require, to any or all commodities, whether or not on the free list from a country which discriminates against the United States, a graduated scale of duties up to the maximum of 25 per cent ad valorem provided in the present law. Flat tariffs are out of date. Nations no longer accord equal tariff treatment to all other nations irrespective of the treatment from them received. Such a flexible power at the command of the Executive would serve to moderate any unfavorable tendencies on the part of those countries from which the importations into the United States are substantially confined to articles on the free list as well as of the countries which find a lucrative market in the United States for their products under existing customs rates. It is very necessary that the American Government should be equipped with weapons of negotiation adapted to modern economic conditions, in order that we may at all times be in a position to gain not only technically just but actually equitable treatment for our trade, and also for American enterprise and vested interests abroad.

BUSINESS SECURED TO OUR COUNTRY BY DIRECT OFFICIAL EFFORT.

As illustrating the commercial benefits to the Nation derived from the new diplomacy and its effectiveness upon the material as well as the more ideal side, it may be remarked that through direct official efforts alone there have been obtained in the course of this administration, contracts from foreign Governments involving an expenditure of $50,000,000 in the factories of the United States. Consideration of this fact and some reflection upon the necessary effects of a scientific tariff system and a foreign service alert and equipped to cooperate with the business men of America carry the conviction that the gratifying increase in the export trade of this country is, in substantial amount, due to our improved governmental methods of protecting and stimulating it. It is germane to these observations to remark that in the two years that have elapsed since the successful negotiation of our new treaty with Japan, which at the time seemed to present so many practical difficulties, our export trade to that country has increased at the rate of over $1,000,000 a month. Our exports to Japan for the year ended June 30, 1910, were $21,959,310, while for the year ended June 30, 1912, the exports were $53,478,046, a net increase in the sale of American products of nearly 150 per cent.

SPECIAL CLAIMS ARBITRATION WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

Under the special agreement entered into between the United States and Great Britain on August 18, 1910, for the arbitration of outstanding pecuniary claims, a schedule of claims and the terms of submission have been agreed upon by the two Governments, and together with the special agreement were approved by the Senate on July 19, 1911, but in accordance with the terms of the agreement they did not go into effect until confirmed by the two Governments by an exchange of notes, which was done on April 26 last. Negotiations are still in progress for a supplemental schedule of claims to be submitted to arbitration under this agreement, and meanwhile the necessary preparations for the arbitration of the claims included in the first schedule have been undertaken and are being carried on under the authority of an appropriation made for that purpose at the last session of Congress. It is anticipated that the two Governments will be prepared to call upon the arbitration tribunal, established under this agreement, to meet at Washington early next year to proceed with this arbitration.

FUR SEAL TREATY AND NEED FOR AMENDMENT OF OUR STATUTE.

The act adopted at the last session of Congress to give effect to the fur-seal convention of July 7, 1911, between Great Britain, Japan, Russia, and the United States provided for the suspension of all land killing of seals on the Pribilof Islands for a period of five years, and an objection has now been presented to this provision by the other parties in interest, which raises the issue as to whether or not this prohibition of land killing is inconsistent with the spirit, if not the letter, of the treaty stipulation. The justification for establishing this close season depends, under the terms of the convention, upon how far, if at all, it is necessary for protecting and preserving the American fur-seal herd and for increasing its number. This is a question requiring examination of the present condition of the herd and the treatment which it needs in the light of actual experience and scientific investigation. A careful examination of the subject is now being made, and this Government will soon be in possession of a considerable amount of new information about the American seal herd, which has been secured during the past season and will be of great value in determining this question; and if it should appear that there is any uncertainty as to the real necessity for imposing a close season at this time I shall take an early opportunity to address a special message to Congress on this subject, in the belief that this Government should yield on this point rather than give the slightest ground for the charge that we have been in any way remiss in observing our treaty obligations.

FINAL SETTLEMENT OF NORTH ATLANTIC FISHERIES DISPUTE.

On the 20th of July last an agreement was concluded between the United States and Great Britain adopting, with certain modifications, the rules and method of procedure recommended in the award rendered by the North Atlantic Coast Fisheries Arbitration Tribunal on September 7, 1910, for the settlement hereafter, in accordance with the principles laid down in the award, of questions arising with reference to the exercise of the American fishing liberties under Article I of the treaty of October 20, 1818, between the United States and Great Britain. This agreement received the approval of the Senate on August 1 and was formally ratified by the two Governments on November 15 last. The rules and a method of procedure embodied in the award provided for determining by an impartial tribunal the reasonableness of any new fishery regulations on the treaty coasts of Newfoundland and Canada before such regulations could be enforced against American fishermen exercising their treaty liberties on those coasts, and also for determining the delimitation of bays on such coasts more than 10 miles wide, in accordance with the definition adopted by the tribunal of the meaning of the word "bays" as used in the treaty. In the subsequent negotiations between the two Governments, undertaken for the purpose of giving practical effect to these rules and methods of procedure, it was found that certain modifications therein were desirable from the point of view of both Governments, and these negotiations have finally resulted in the agreement above mentioned by which the award recommendations as modified by mutual consent of the two Governments are finally adopted and made effective, thus bringing this century-old controversy to a final conclusion, which is equally beneficial and satisfactory to both Governments.

IMPERIAL VALLEY AND MEXICO.

In order to make possible the more effective performance of the work necessary for the confinement in their present channel of the waters of the lower Colorado River, and thus to protect the people of the Imperial Valley, as well as in order to reach with the Government of Mexico an understanding regarding the distribution of the waters of the Colorado River, in which both Governments are much interested, negotiations are going forward with a view to the establishment of a preliminary Colorado River commission, which shall have the powers necessary to enable it to do the needful work and with authority to study the question of the equitable distribution of the waters. There is every reason to believe that an understanding upon this point will be reached and that an agreement will be signed in the near future.

CHAMIZAL DISPUTE.

In the interest of the people and city of El Paso this Government has been assiduous in its efforts to bring to an early settlement the long-standing Chamizal dispute with Mexico. Much has been accomplished, and while the final solution of the dispute is not immediate, the favorable attitude lately assumed by the Mexican Government encourages the hope that this troublesome question will be satisfactorily and definitely settled at an early day.

INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION OF JURISTS.

In pursuance of the convention of August 23, 1906, signed at the Third Pan American Conference, held at Rio de Janeiro, the International Commission of Jurists met at that capital during the month of last June. At this meeting 16 American Republics were represented, including the United States, and comprehensive plans for the future work of the commission were adopted. At the next meeting fixed for June, 1914, committees already appointed are instructed to report regarding topics assigned to them.

OPIUM CONFERENCE—UNFORTUNATE FAILURE OF OUR GOVERNMENT TO ENACT RECOMMENDED LEGISLATION.

In my message on foreign relations communicated to the two Houses of Congress December 7, 1911, I called especial attention to the assembling of the Opium Conference at The Hague, to the fact that that conference was to review all pertinent municipal laws relating to the opium and allied evils, and certainly all international rules regarding these evils, and to the fact that it seemed to me most essential that the Congress should take immediate action on the antinarcotic legislation before the Congress, to which I had previously called attention by a special message.

The international convention adopted by the conference conforms almost entirely to the principles contained in the proposed antinarcotic legislation which has been before the last two Congresses. It was most unfortunate that this Government, having taken the initiative in the international action which eventuated in the important international opium convention, failed to do its share in the great work by neglecting to pass the necessary legislation to correct the deplorable narcotic evil in the United States as well as to redeem international pledges upon which it entered by virtue of the abovementioned convention. The Congress at its present session should enact into law those bills now before it which have been so carefully drawn up in collaboration btween the Department of State and the other executive departments, and which have behind them not only the moral sentiment of the country, but the practical support of all the legitimate trade interests likely to be affected. Since the international convention was signed, adherence to it has been made by several European States not represented at the conference at The Hague and also by seventeen Latin-American Republics.

EUROPE AND THE NEAR EAST.

The war between Italy and Turkey came to a close in October last by the signature of a treaty of peace, subsequently to which the Ottoman Empire renounced sovereignty over Cyrenaica and Tripolitania in favor of Italy. During the past year the Near East has unfortunately been the theater of constant hostilities. Almost simultaneously with the conclusion of peace between Italy and Turkey and their arrival at an adjustment of the complex questions at issue between them, war broke out between Turkey on the one hand and Bulgaria, Greece, Montenegro, and Servia on the other. The United States has happily been involved neither directly nor indirectly with the causes or questions incident to any of these hostilities and has maintained in regard to them an attitude of absolute neutrality and of complete political disinterestedness. In the second war in which the Ottoman Empire has been engaged the loss of life and the consequent distress on both sides have been appalling, and the United States has found occasion, in the interest of humanity, to carry out the charitable desires of the American people, to extend a measure of relief to the sufferers on either side through the impartial medium of the Red Cross. Beyond this the chief care of the Government of the United States has been to make due provision for the protection of its nationals resident in belligerent territory. In the exercise of my duty in this matter I have dispatched to Turkish waters a special-service squadron, consisting of two armored cruisers, in order that this Government may if need be bear its part in such measures as it may be necessary for the interested nations to adopt for the safeguarding of foreign lives and property in the Ottoman Empire in the event that a dangerous situation should develop. In the meanwhile the several interested European powers have promised to extend to American citizens the benefit of such precautionary or protective measures as they might adopt, in the same manner in which it has been the practice of this Government to extend its protection to all foreigners resident in those countries of the Western Hemisphere in which it has from time to time been the task of the United States to act in the interest of peace and good order. The early appearance of a large fleet of European warships in the Bosphorus apparently assured the protection of foreigners in that quarter, where the presence of the American stationnaire the U. S. S. Scorpion sufficed, under the circumstances, to represent the United States. Our cruisers were thus left free to act if need be along the Mediterranean coasts should any unexpected contingency arise affecting the numerous American interests in the neighborhood of Smyrna and Beirut.

SPITZBERGEN.

The great preponderance of American material interests in the subarctic island of Spitzbergen, which has always been regarded politically as "no man's land," impels this Government to a continued and lively interest in the international dispositions to be made for the political governance and administration of that region. The conflict of certain claims of American citizens and others is in a fair way to adjustment, while the settlement of matters of administration, whether by international conference of the interested powers or otherwise, continues to be the subject of exchange of views between the Governments concerned.

LIBERIA.

As a result of the effort of this Government to place the Government of Liberia in position to pay its outstanding indebtedness and to maintain a stable and efficient government, negotiations for a loan of $1,700,000 have been successfully concluded, and it is anticipated that the payment of the old loan and the issuance of the bonds of the 1912 loan for the rehabilitation of the finances of Liberia will follow at an early date, when the new receivership will go into active operation. The new receivership will consist of a general receiver of customs designated by the Government of the United States and three receivers of customs designated by the Governments of Germany, France, and Great Britain, which countries have commercial interests in the Republic of Liberia.

In carrying out the understanding between the Government of Liberia and that of the United States, and in fulfilling the terms of the agreement between the former Government and the American bankers, three competent ex-army officers are now effectively employed by the Liberian Government in reorganizing the police force of the Republic, not only to keep in order the native tribes in the hinterland but to serve as a necessary police force along the frontier. It is hoped that these measures will assure not only the continued existence but the prosperity and welfare of the Republic of Liberia. Liberia possesses fertility of soil and natural resources, which should insure to its people a reasonable prosperity. It was the duty of the United States to assist the Republic of Liberia in accordance with our historical interest and moral guardianship of a community founded by American citizens, as it was also the duty of the American Government to attempt to assure permanence to a country of much sentimental and perhaps future real interest to a large body of our citizens.

MOROCCO.

The legation at Tangier is now in charge of our consul general, who is acting as chargé d'affaires, as well as caring for our commercial interests in that country. In view of the fact that many of the foreign powers are now represented by chargés d'affaires it has not been deemed necessary to appoint at the present time a minister to fill a vacancy occurring in that post.

THE FAR EAST.

The political disturbances in China in the autumn and winter of 1911–12 resulted in the abdication of the Manchu rulers on February 12, followed by the formation of a provisional republican government empowered to conduct the affairs of the nation until a permanent government might be regularly established. The natural sympathy of the American people with the assumption of republican principles by the Chinese people was appropriately expressed in a concurrent resolution of Congress on April 17, 1912. A constituent assembly, composed of representatives duly chosen by the people of China in the elections that are now being held, has been called to meet in January next to adopt a permanent constitution and organize the Government of the nascent Republic. During the formative constitutional stage and pending definitive action by the assembly, as expressive of the popular will, and the hoped-for establishment of a stable republican form of government, capable of fulfilling its international obligations, the United States is, according to precedent, maintaining full and friendly de facto relations with the provisional Government.

The new condition of affairs thus created has presented many serious and complicated problems, both of internal rehabilitation and of international relations, whose solution it was realized would necessarily require much time and patience. From the beginning of the upheaval last autumn it was felt by the United States, in common with the other powers having large interests in China, that independent action by the foreign Governments in their own individual interests would add further confusion to a situation already complicated. A policy of international cooperation was accordingly adopted in an understanding, reached early in the disturbances, to act together for the protection of the lives and property of foreigners if menaced, to maintain an attitude of strict impartiality as between the contending factions, and to abstain from any endeavor to influence the Chinese in their organization of a new form of government. In view of the seriousness of the disturbances and their general character, the American minister at Peking was instructed at his discretion to advise our nationals in the affected districts to concentrate at such centers as were easily accessible to foreign troops or men of war. Nineteen of our naval vessels were stationed at various Chinese ports, and other measures were promptly taken for the adequate protection of American interests.

It was further mutually agreed, in the hope of hastening an end to hostilities, that none of the interested powers would approve the making of loans by its nationals to either side. As soon, however, as a united provisional Government of China was assured, the United States joined in a favorable consideration of that Government's request for advances needed for immediate administrative necessities and later for a loan to effect a permanent national reorganization. The interested Governments had already, by common consent, adopted, in respect to the purposes, expenditure, and security of any loans to China made by their nationals, certain conditions which were held to be essential, not only to secure reasonable protection for the foreign investors, but also to safeguard and strengthen China's credit by discouraging indiscriminate borrowing and by insuring the application of the funds toward the establishment of the stable and effective government necessary to China's welfare. In June last representative banking groups of the United States, France, Germany, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia formulated, with the general sanction of their respective Governments, the guaranties that would be expected in relation to the expenditure and security of the large reorganization loan desired by China, which, however, have thus far proved unacceptable to the provisional Government.

SPECIAL MISSION OF CONDOLENCE TO JAPAN.

In August last I accredited the Secretary of State as special ambassador to Japan, charged with the mission of bearing to the imperial family, the Government, and the people of that Empire the sympathetic message of the American Commonwealth on the sad occasion of the death of His Majesty the Emperor Mutsuhito, whose long and benevolent reign was the greater part of Japan's modern history. The kindly reception everywhere accorded to Secretary Knox showed that his mission was deeply appreciated by the Japanese nation and emphasized strongly the friendly relations that have for so many years existed between the two peoples.

SOUTH AMERICA.

Our relations with the Argentine Republic are most friendly and cordial. So, also, are our relations with Brazil, whose Government has accepted the invitation of the United States to send two army officers to study at the Coast Artillery School at Fort Monroe. The long-standing Alsop claim, which had been the only hindrance to the healthy growth of the most friendly relations between the United States and Chile, having been eliminated through the submission of the question to His Britannic Majesty King George V as "amiable compositeur,"[1] it is a cause of much gratification to me that our relations with Chile are now established upon a firm basis of growing friendship. The Chilean Government has placed an officer of the United States Coast Artillery in charge of the Chilean Coast Artillery School, and has shown appreciation of American methods by confiding to an American firm important work for the Chilean coast defenses.

Last year a revolution against the established Government of Ecuador broke out at the principal port of that Republic. Previous to this occurrence the chief American interest in Ecuador, represented by the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Co., incorporated in the United States, had rendered extensive transportation and other services on account to the Ecuadorian Government, the amount of which ran into a sum which was steadily increasing and which the Ecuadorian Government had made no provision to pay, thereby threatening to crush out the very existence of this American enterprise. When tranquillity had been restored to Ecuador as a result of the triumphant progress of the Government forces from Quito, this Government interposed its good offices to the end that the American interests in Ecuador might be saved from complete extinction. As a part of the arrangement which was reached between the parties, and at the request of the Government of Ecuador, I have consented to name an arbitrator, who, acting under the terms of the railroad contract, with an arbitrator named by the Ecuadorian Government, will pass upon the claims that have arisen since the arrangement reached through the action of a similar arbitral tribunal in 1908.

In pursuance of a request made some time ago by the Ecuadorian Government, the Department of State has given much attention to the problem of the proper sanitation of Guayaquil. As a result a detail of officers of the Canal Zone will be sent to Guayaquil to recommend measures that will lead to the complete permanent sanitation of this plague and fever infected region of that Republic, which has for so long constituted a menace to health conditions on the Canal Zone. It is hoped that the report which this mission will furnish will point out a way whereby the modicum of assistance which the United States may properly lend the Ecuadorian Government may be made effective in ridding the west coast of South America of a focus of contagion to the future commercial current passing through the Panama Canal.

In the matter of the claim of John Celestine Landreau against the Government of Peru, which claim arises out of certain contracts and transactions in connection with the discovery and exploitation of guano, and which has been under discussion between the two Governments since 1874, I am glad to report that as the result of prolonged negotiations, which have been characterized by the utmost friendliness and good will on both sides, the Department of State has succeeded in securing the consent of Peru to the arbitration of the claim, and that the negotiations attending the drafting and signature of a protocol submitting the claim to an arbitral tribunal are proceeding with due celerity.

An officer of the American Public Health Service and an American sanitary engineer are now on the way to Iquitos, in the employ of the Peruvian Government, to take charge of the sanitation of that river port. Peru is building a number of submarines in this country, and continues to show every desire to have American capital invested in the Republic.

In July the United States sent undergraduate delegates to the Third International Students Congress held at Lima, American students having been for the first time invited to one of these meetings.

The Republic of Uruguay has shown its appreciation of American agricultural and other methods by sending a large commission to this country and by employing many American experts to assist in building up agricultural and allied industries in Uruguay.

Venezuela is paying off the last of the claims the settlement of which was provided for by the Washington protocols, including those of American citizens. Our relations with Venezuela are most cordial, and the trade of that Republic with the United States is now greater than with any other country.

CENTRAL AMERICA AND THE CARIBBEAN.

During the past summer the revolution against the administration which followed the assassination of President Cáceres a year ago last November brought the Dominican Republic to the verge of administrative chaos, without offering any guaranties of eventual stability in the ultimate success of either party. In pursuance of the treaty relations of the United States with the Dominican Republic, which were threatened by the necessity of suspending the operation under American administration of the customhouses on the Haitian frontier, it was found necessary to dispatch special commissioners to the island to reestablish the customhouses and with a guard sufficient to insure needed protection to the customs administration. The efforts which have been made appear to have resulted in the restoration of normal conditions throughout the Republic. The good offices which the commissioners were able to exercise were instrumental in bringing the contending parties together and in furnishing a basis of adjustment which it is hoped will result in permanent benefit to the Dominican people.

Mindful of its treaty relations, and owing to the position of the Government of the United States as mediator between the Dominican Republic and Haiti in their boundary dispute, and because of the further fact that the revolutionary activities on the Haitian-Dominican frontier had become so active as practically to obliterate the line of demarcation that had been heretofore recognized pending the definitive settlement of the boundary in controversy, it was found necessary to indicate to the two island Governments a provisional de facto boundary line. This was done without prejudice to the rights or obligations of either country in a final settlement to be reached by arbitration. The tentative line chosen was one which, under the circumstances brought to the knowledge of this Government, seemed to conform to the best interests of the disputants. The border patrol which it had been found necessary to reestablish for customs purposes between the two countries was instructed provisionally to observe this line.

The Republic of Cuba last May was in the throes of a lawless uprising that for a time threatened the destruction of a great deal of valuable property—much of it owned by Americans and other foreigners—as well as the existence of the Government itself. The armed forces of Cuba being inadequate to guard property from attack and at the same time properly to operate against the rebels, a force of American marines was dispatched from our naval station at Guantánamo into the Province of Oriente for the protection of American and other foreign life and property. The Cuban Government was thus able to use all its forces in putting down the outbreak, which it succeeded in doing in a period of six weeks. The presence of two American warships in the harbor of Habana during the most critical period of this disturbance contributed in great measure to allay the fears of the inhabitants, including a large foreign colony.

There has been under discussion with the Government of Cuba for some time the question of the release by this Government of its leasehold rights at Bahia Honda, on the northern coast of Cuba, and the enlargement, in exchange therefor, of the naval station which has been established at Guantanamo Bay, on the south. As the result of the negotiations then carried on an agreement has been reached between the two Governments providing for the suitable enlargement of the Guantanamo Bay station upon terms which are entirely fair and equitable to all parties concerned.

At the request alike of the Government and both political parties in Panama, an American commission undertook supervision of the recent presidential election in that Republic, where our treaty relations, and, indeed, every geographical consideration, make the maintenance of order and satisfactory conditions of peculiar interest to the Government of the United States. The elections passed without disorder, and the new administration has entered upon its functions.

The Government of Great Britain has asked the support of the United States for the protection of the interests of British holders of the foreign bonded debt of Guatemala. While this Government is hopeful of an arrangement equitable to the British bondholders, it is naturally unable to view the question apart from its relation to the broad subject of financial stability in Central America, in which the policy of the United States does not permit it to escape a vital interest. Through a renewal of negotiations between the Government of Guatemala and American bankers, the aim of which is a loan for the rehabilitation of Guatemalan finances, a way appears to be open by which the Government of Guatemala could promptly satisfy any equitable and just British claims, and at the same time so improve its whole financial position as to contribute greatly to the increased prosperity of the Republic and to redound to the benefit of foreign investments and foreign trade with that country. Failing such an arrangement, it may become impossible for the Government of the United States to escape its obligations in connection with such measures as may become necessary to exact justice to legitimate foreign claims.

In the recent revolution in Nicaragua, which, it was generally admitted, might well have resulted in a general Central American conflict but for the intervention of the United States, the Government of Honduras was especially menaced; but fortunately peaceful conditions were maintained within the borders of that Republic. The financial condition of that country remains unchanged, no means having been found for the final adjustment of pressing outstanding foreign claims. This makes it the more regrettable that the financial convention between the United States and Honduras has thus far failed of ratification. The Government of the United States continues to hold itself ready to cooperate with the Government of Honduras, which, it is believed, can not much longer delay the meeting of its foreign obligations, and it is hoped at the proper time American bankers will be willing to cooperate for this purpose.

NECESSITY FOR GREATER GOVERNMENTAL EFFORT IN RETENTION AND EXPANSION OF OUR FOREIGN TRADE.

It is not possible to make to the Congress a communication upon the present foreign relations of the United States so detailed as to convey an adequate impression of the enormous increase in the importance and activities of those relations. If this Government is really to preserve to the American people that free opportunity in foreign markets which will soon be indispensable to our prosperity, even greater efforts must be made. Otherwise the American merchant, manufacturer, and exporter will find many a field in which American trade should logically predominate preempted through the more energetic efforts of other governments and other commercial nations.

There are many ways in which through hearty cooperation the legislative and executive branches of this Government can do much. The absolute essential is the spirit of united effort and singleness of purpose. I will allude only to a very few specific examples of action which ought then to result. America can not take its proper place in the most important fields for its commercial activity and enterprise unless we have a merchant marine. American commerce and enterprise can not be effectively fostered in those fields unless we have good American banks in the countries referred to. We need American newspapers in those countries and proper means for public information about them. We need to assure the permanency of a trained foreign service. We need legislation enabling the members of the foreign service to be systematically brought in direct contact with the industrial, manufacturing, and exporting interests of this country in order that American business men may enter the foreign field with a clear perception of the exact conditions to be dealt with and the officers themselves may prosecute their work with a clear idea of what American industrial and manufacturing interests require.

CONCLUSION.

Congress should fully realize the conditions which obtain in the world as we find ourselves at the threshold of our middle age as a Nation. We have emerged full grown as a peer in the great concourse of nations. We have passed through various formative periods. We have been self-centered in the struggle to develop our domestic resources and deal with our domestic questions. The Nation is now too mature to continue in its foreign relations those temporary expedients natural to a people to whom domestic affairs are the sole concern. In the past our diplomacy has often consisted, in normal times, in a mere assertion of the right to international existence. We are now in a larger relation with broader rights of our own and obligations to others than ourselves. A number of great guiding principles were laid down early in the history of this Government. The recent task of our diplomacy has been to adjust those principles to the conditions of to-day, to develop their corollaries, to find practical applications of the old principles expanded to meet new situations. Thus are being evolved bases upon which can rest the superstructure of policies which must grow with the destined progress of this Nation. The successful conduct of our foreign relations demands a broad and a modern view. We can not meet new questions nor build for the future if we confine ourselves to outworn dogmas of the past and to the perspective appropriate at our emergence from colonial times and conditions. The opening of the Panama Canal will mark a new era in our international life and create new and world-wide conditions which, with their vast correlations and consequences, will obtain for hundreds of years to come. We must not wait for events to overtake us unawares. With continuity of purpose we must deal with the problems of our external relations by a diplomacy modern, resourceful, magnanimous, and fittingly expressive of the high ideals of a great nation.

CHINA—Continued.

No.	From and to whom.	Date.	Subject.	Page.
	Mr. Calhoun to Mr. Knox (telegram).	1912. Aug. 10	Loan negotiations. It is the opinion of the six ministers that if China notifies any of them of a loan made by one of his nationals, he can take no action because the loan is not based upon the conditions approved by his Government.	149
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Calhoun (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. Department approves, provided the other ministers receive similar instructions.	149
	Mr. Bryan to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Aug. 15	Political affairs. Recognition. The Japanese Government does not consider the existing Government organized in sufficient conformity with the requirements of international law to merit recognition.	85
	Mr. Calhoun to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Aug. 31	Same subject. Recognition. The British Minister has presented a memorandum to the Chinese Government stating that the British Government can not recognize the Republic of China until the latter Government ceases to interfere in affairs in Tibet.	86
	M. de la Rocca to Mr. Knox..	Sept. 4	Loan negotiations. Advises that the Chinese Government has granted a concession to a German firm providing an advance of 8,000,000 marks to that Government, and that his Government has lodged protest with the German Government for this breach of the financial agreement. Asks support of the American Government.	149
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Leishman (telegram).	Sept. 11	Same subject. Advises him of the above and instructs that he may cooperate with his colleagues if they are instructed in the same sense by informing the German Government that this Government adheres to the bankers telegram of May 15–June 20.	150
	Mr. Calhoun to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. The Chinese Government is reported to have signed an agreement for a loan of £10,000,000 with British banks.	150
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Reid (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. Advises him of above telegram and expresses hope that the British Government will deter its nationals from making loans to China inconsistent with the policy as to which both Governments are in accord.	151
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Herrick (telegram).	Sept. 17	Same subject. Any suggestion the Chinese Government may see fit to make, and which would include adequate and reasonable terms of supervision, would be carefully and sympathetically considered.	151
	Mr. Reid to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Sept. 19	Same subject. The Foreign Office remains firm in its intention to discourage as far as possible the new British loan.	152
283	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Calhoun..	Sept. 20	Political affairs. Recognition. It is the Department's opinion that it would be more in accordance with established precedents to defer recognition until the present Provisional Government is replaced by a permanent one with constitutional authority.	86
	Mr. Calhoun to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Sept. 25	Loan negotiations. The new London syndicate paid an advance of £500,000 of the proposed loan of £10,000,000 to the Chinese Government, if the loan is floated it will absorb all possible revenue securities and the sextuple group will have no excuse for its continuance.	152
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Calhoun (telegram).	Sept. 26	Same subject. The Department attaches the highest importance to the broad principle of international cooperation and concerted action. The legation will use every effort to combat anything tending to jeopardize a policy so clearly set forth in previous instructions.	152
	Mr. Reid to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. The British request for the cancellation of the new loan has positively been refused by Yuan Shih Kai.	153
	Mr. Calhoun to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Sept. 27	Same subject. Canton reports that a Los Angeles firm has concluded a loan for $5,000,000 with the Government of the Province. The Assembly has approved.	153
192	Mr. Innes to Mr. Knox......	Sept. 28	Same subject. Owing to the unbending attitude of the groups, whose conditions China declares it can not accept, the Chinese Government has broken off the negotiations. The British Government is of the opinion that a last effort should be made to arrange terms under relaxed conditions.	153
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Bryce....	Oct. 4	Same subject. States at length the attitude of the Government of the United States toward the loan negotiations.	154
	Mr. Calhoun to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Oct. 5	Same subject. A Belgian company signed a new contract to build a railway in Kansuh, when the contract is ratified the company will pay China 5,000,000 taels.	157

CHINA—Continued.

645	Same to same	1912. Oct. 22	Same subject. The Chinese are now hostile to and have broken off negotiations with the sextuple group, and the probabilities are that if the deadlock continues, if other concessions like the Belgian are granted and if other loans like the London are made, a dissolution of the groups will result.	157
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Calhoun (telegram).	Oct. 30	Same subject. The Japanese Government has suggested that the representatives of the groups should consult with their ministers to determine what terms are absolutely necessary and practicable for the reorganization loan; this has the approval of the British Government and the British and American groups.	159
217	Mr. Bryce to Mr. Knox	Nov. 2	Same subject. Advises that the powers have concurred in the Japanese proposal and the British, French, and Russian ministers and the groups have been instructed accordingly.	159
	Mr. MacVeagh to Speaker Clark.	Dec. 2	Opium Conference. Transmits letter of the Secretary of State submitting an estimate of appropriation of $25,000 to enable this Government to continue its efforts to mitigate the opium, morphine, and other allied drug evils.	224
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Calhoun (telegram).	Dec. 24	Indemnity payments. The Chinese Government has requested the postponement for one year of settlement of indemnity payments due from November, 1911, to December, 1912. If the ministers of other powers receive similar instructions this Government is disposed to grant the request.	159
	Mr. Calhoun to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Dec. 28	Same subject. The German, Japanese, and American Ministers are authorized to consent to the postponement; the French conditionally; the Russian refuses; and the British Minister has no instructions.	160
	Same to same (telegram)	Dec. 30	Same subject. The German and Dutch Ministers suggest that consent to extension be given if majority of ministers agree.	160
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Calhoun (telegram).	Dec. 31	Same subject. If a majority of the ministers consent to the extension, it is unlikely that this Government will demand immediate payment.	160

	Mr. Brun to Mr. Knox......	Jan. 27	Inheritance tax. The Iowa State Treasurer claims the right to impose on a nonresident alien heir a tax in addition to that imposed on other heirs, according to the Iowa statute, whereas art. 7 of the commercial treaty between Denmark and the United States waives such a tax upon nonresident Danish heirs. The State Treasurer claims that art. 7 does not apply. The Danish Minister protests, with statement of bases of protest.	323
	Mr. Brun to Mr. Knox......	Feb. 2	Same subject. Further interpretation of art. 7......	324
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Brun......	Feb. 7	Same subject. Acknowledges Mr. Brun's memorandum of Jan. 27. Is receiving attentive consideration.	325
140	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Egan......	Feb. 17	Presentation of a park. The President accepts the honorary presidency of the dedication ceremonies.	336
	Mr. Brun to Mr. Knox......	Apr. 17	Inheritance tax. Refers to the previous memoranda and renews the protest of Jan. 27.	325
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Brun......	Apr. 23	Same subject. Acknowledges receipt of memorandum of Apr. 17. The case is receiving attentive consideration.	326
	Mr. Denison to Mr. Knox...	Apr. 30	Same subject. The Assistant Attorney General incloses a letter from the U. S. Attorney for the Northern District of Iowa, reporting the status of the intervening petition filed by him in the case.	326
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Brun......	May 15	Same subject. Refers to Mr. Brun's Apr. 17; the Department of Justice is endeavoring to obtain for the non resident Danish heir the desired reimbursement.	327
	Count Moltke to Mr. Knox..	...do.....	Accession of King Christian X. Announcing the death of King Frederik VIII.	333
164	Mr. Wilson to Count Moltke.	...do.....	Same subject. The President has sent a message of sympathy to King Christian X.	333

598	Mr. Egan to Mr. Knox......	Aug. 8	Presentation of a park. Description of the dedication ceremonies.	337
	Mr. Harr to Mr. Knox.......	Aug. 15	Inheritance tax. The Assistant Attorney General incloses a letter from U. S. Attorney Faville for the Northern District of Iowa, inclosing the findings of the Iowa court, holding against the application of art. 7 of the treaty; Mr. Faville suggests appeal; also inclosed is a later letter from Mr. Faville concerning an analogous case, in view of which he withholds institution of proceedings. Mr. Harr believes the Government can not secure legal standing in the case.	328
161	Mr. Adee to Mr. Egan.......	Aug. 21	Accession of Christian X. Incloses letter from the President to the King, acknowledging His Majesty's letter of June 21.	335
	Mr. Brun to Mr. Knox......	Oct. 24	Inheritance tax. Refers to Mr. Knox's Feb. 7. The case will be appealed to the Supreme Court of Iowa. Mr. Brun desires to know whether an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States would lie if the Iowa court's decision be adverse.	331
3	Mr. Knox to Mr. Brun......	Nov. 20	Same subject. Refers to Mr. Brun's Oct. 24. The Department of Justice is inclined to believe that an appeal would be possible to the Supreme Court of the United States.	331

GUATEMALA.

No.	From and to whom.	Date.	Subject.	Page.
	Mr. Méndez to Mr. Wilson	1912. Feb. 12	Visit of Secretary Knox. Expresses the pleasure of Guatemala upon learning of Mr. Knox's projected visit.	511
	Same to same	Feb. 19	Same subject. Refers to the Department's letter of Feb. 13, relating to Mr. Knox's visit to Guatemala and to Mr. Méndez's note Feb. 12; adds further expression of Guatemala's pleasant anticipation of the visit.	512
31	Mr. Hitt to Mr. Knox	Apr. 8	Same subject. Relates the events of the visit and incloses speeches delivered at the various formal functions.	512
9	Mr. Knox to Mr. Méndez	May 23	Financial affairs. This Government informs Guatemala of the firm attitude assumed by the British Government in regard to the claims of British holders of Guatemalan bonds; this Government may be unable further to delay British enforcement of those claims unless steps are taken to settle them before the adjournment of the Guatemalan Assembly.	500
	Mr. Méndez to Mr. Knox	May 31	Same subject. Refers to Mr. Knox's note of May 23. The most acceptable loan proposal of the bankers will require 60 days to perfect its terms.	500
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Méndez	June 12	Same subject. Acknowledges Mr. Méndez's May 31.	501
	Mr. Innes to Mr. Knox	Aug. 28	Same subject. The British Government had demanded of Guatemala the submission of the British claims to arbitration and requests the good offices of the United States in securing Guatemala's assent thereto.	501
	Mr. Adee to Mr. Hitt (telegram).	Sept. 14	Same subject. Notifies the American Chargé d'Affaires at Guatemala that the Minister of Guatemala insists on the exercise by this Government of its friendly good offices with the British Government for the latter's delay of its demand for settlement; that the Department accordingly in an aide-mémoire of Sept. 13 stated to the Guatemalan Government that it would urge upon the British Government a delay of 20 days, expiring Sept. 16, of its demand for arbitration; but that if Guatemala should not act within that time, this Government could not further intervene.	502

GUATEMALA—Continued.

No.	From and to whom.	Date.	Subject.	Page.
	Mr. Méndez to Mr. Knox....	1912. Sept. 18	Same subject. Refers to the Department's aide-mémoire of Sept. 13 and delivers the reply of Guatemala dated Sept. 17, which states that circumstances over which it has no control prevent a settlement within the stipulated time. Mr. Méndez adds that the British Government has been requested to specify the basis upon which it desires arbitration.	503
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Innes.....	Sept. 21	Same subject. Refers to Mr. Innes's Aug. 28 to the Department's aide-mémoire to Guatemala dated Sept. 13 and Mr. Méndez's reply of Sept. 18; requests Mr. Innes to ascertain whether his Government will consent to a delay of 20 days, beginning Sept. 17.	503
	Mr. Bryce to Mr. Wilson....	Sept. 29	Same subject. Refers to Mr. Wilson's letter of Sept. 21 to Mr. Innes, and says the British Government, while not objecting to a delay of 20 days, do not desire a settlement of any kind, but a restitution of the revenue through which they are entitled to recover.	504
	Same to same...............	Sept. 30	Same subject. Refers to his Sept. 29 and thanks Mr. Knox for the action taken as communicated to Mr. Innes in Mr. Wilson's note of Sept. 21.	505
	Same to same...............	Oct. 19	Same subject. Refers to Mr. Wilson's Sept. 21 and to the expiration of the stipulated 20 days.	505
	Mr. Méndez to Mr. Knox....	Oct. 25	Same subject. Urges this Government to procure from the British Government a few days further delay.	506
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Bryce....	Oct. 29	Same subject. Refers to Mr. Bryce's Oct. 19. The bankers are conferring with Guatemala, and this Government would be interested to know the British opinion regarding that negotiation.	506
	Mr. Bryce to Mr. Knox.....	Nov. 13	Same subject. Refers to Mr. Wilson's Sept. 25 [21] to Mr. Innes, and to a recent interview at the Department regarding a proposed further delay which it is hoped this Government will reconsider.	507
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Reid......	Dec. 6	Same subject. Incloses a copy of a signed memorandum dated Dec. 3, which was delivered Dec. 3 to the British Ambassador. Instructs Mr. Reid to explain the general policy of this Government toward Central America, and to say: That the security offered by the new Guatemalan bonds is better than the coffee revenues, with the reasons therefor; that the American plan set forth in the memorandum will insure the future interest; that cooperation between the United States and Great Britain should be emphasized. The inclosed memorandum urges the British Government to await the completion of negotiations between Guatemala and the bankers for a loan secured on the customs revenues involving a comprehensive bond issue refunding the whole debt of Guatemala. If this plan is not perfected within a reasonable time this Government will at once support Great Britain in demanding restitution of the coffee revenues.	508
193	Mr. Knox to Mr. Hitt.......	Dec. 11	Same subject. Incloses copy of the signed memorandum delivered to Mr. Bryce on Dec. 3 and a copy of the British note of Nov. 13, on which it was based; instructs Mr. Hitt to hold them for such use as may later be indicated.	510
	Mr. Bryce to Mr. Knox.....	Dec. 30	Same subject. Refers to Mr. Knox's Dec. 2[3], and replies that the question of the bond conversion therein discussed is entirely apart from the restitution of the bondholder's rights to the coffee revenues, the point upon which the British Government must continue to insist; and it is hoped that the good offices of the United States will make other measures needless.	510

25	Mr. Crum to Mr. Knox	1912. Jan. 8	Disturbances on the Anglo-Liberian Frontier. Reports that an encounter took place in the neutral zone between Liberian and British troops, four Liberians being killed.	652
	Same to same (telegram)	Jan. 10	Reorganization of the Liberian Frontier Force under American officers. The President of Liberia requests the designation of American officers.	663
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Crum (telegram).	...do...	Same subject. Officers are ready to undertake the work, provided commissions are issued and allowances are made.	663
	Same to same (telegram)	Jan. 11	Financial affairs. Instruction to send to Department full statement of Liberian finances for 1911.	667
	Mr. Crum to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Jan. 13	Same subject. Receipts for fiscal year ending Sept. 30, 1911, $478,000; disbursements $490,000; floating debt $201,000. The General Receiver is anxiously expected. The Government absolutely confident it can meet the requirements for the new loan.	668
	Same to same (telegram)	...do...	Reorganization of the Liberian Frontier Force under American officers. Liberian Legislature made provision for salary and housing of American officers.	663
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Crum (telegram).	Jan. 17	Financial affairs. Increase of floating debt of $200,000 shows bad management; and as the Loan Act makes no provision for new debts, this Government may have to withdraw its sanction of the loan agreement.	668
	Mr. Crum to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Jan. 23	Same subject. Explains causes of increase of floating debt, and that the real debt was only $111,000. Retrenchment and reform measures have been introduced.	668
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Falkner	Jan. 26	Same subject. The French Ambassador states that his Government has appointed Mr. Frederic Wolf to be French Receiver of Liberian customs in accordance with the loan agreement.	669
21	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Crum	Feb. 13	Reorganization of the Liberian Frontier Force under American officers. American officers expect to leave shortly for Monrovia to take up this work.	664
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Falkner	Feb. 23	Financial affairs. The Department has informed the Liberian Government of necessary terms of settlement with individual creditors of Liberia prior to negotiation of the new loan.	669
	Mr. Wilson to Kuhn, Loeb & Co.	Feb. 29	Same subject. The loan agreement as now amended appears satisfactory to the Department.	670
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Skinner (telegram).	Mar. 7	Same subject. Informs him that he is appointed Special Representative of Dr. Falkner, Financial Representative of Liberia.	670
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Crum (telegram).	...do...	Reorganization of the Liberian Frontier Force under American officers. Instructs to obtain authority for the Liberian Consul-General to sign contracts with American ex-army officers.	664
	Mr. Crum to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Mar. 12	Same subject. Transmits telegram to Consul-General Lyon authorizing him to sign contracts with American officers.	664
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Lyon (telegram).	...do...	Same subject. Transmits above telegram.	665
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Crum (telegram).	...do...	Financial affairs. Loan agreements all signed Mar. 7. General Receiver Reed Page Clark will leave for Europe Mar. 14. Special Representative Skinner will meet Mr. Clark in London and begin negotiations with European creditors.	671
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Jusserand.	Mar. 13	Same subject. Incloses copy of the loan agreement. [Same to the British and German Ambassadors.]	671
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Crum (telegram).	Mar. 27	Same subject. Dr. Falkner hears that Liberia will probably default on interest of 1871 loan. Bankers want statement of receipts for last six months and other information.	671
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Falkner (telegram).	...do...	Same subject. Instructs him to wait in London for further instructions.	672
	Mr. Crum to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Mar. 28	Same subject. Money has been cabled to London to pay interest on 1871 loan.	672
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Crum (telegram).	...do...	Disturbances on the Anglo-Liberian frontier. The British Government complains of noncompliance by Liberian officials with the Anglo-Liberian frontier agreement. Instructs to bring the matter to the attention of the Liberian Government and to urge that steps be taken to settle the incident.	654

LIBERIA—Continued.

	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Reid (telegram).	1912. Mar. 28	Same subject. Advises him of above telegram and instructs to request the British Government to have patience for a satisfactory solution of the trouble.	656
	Mr. Jusserand to Mr. Knox..	Mar. 30	Financial affairs. Requests rotation of the Receivers at port of Monrovia.	672
	Mr. Crum to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Apr. 1	Disturbances on the Anglo-Liberian frontier. Reports steps taken by the Liberian Government to bring the incident to a satisfactory conclusion.	656
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Reid (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. Transmits above telegram and expresses hope that the British Government will be patient and show leniency toward the Liberian Government.	657
	Mr. Clark to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Apr. 5	Financial affairs. He understands that the German Receiver must be stationed permanently at Monrovia. Considers this unfortunate and that Receivers should rotate.	673
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Clark (telegram).	Apr. 8	Same subject. Nothing has been agreed on concerning duration of German Receiver's tenure at Monrovia. French request for rotation seems equitable.	673
	Mr. Skinner to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Apr. 9	Same subject. Creditors are pressing for prompt settlement.	674
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Skinner (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. Liberian Government cabled £1,750 on Mar. 28 to pay interest on 1871 loan. Instructions of Mar. 27 confirmed.	674
1687	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Reid.....	Apr. 11	Disturbances on the Anglo-Liberian frontier. Advises him that American officers are on their way to Liberia to reorganize the Frontier Force and that the Department expects improvement in the conditions on the frontier.	657
	Mr. Reid to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Apr. 12	Same subject. The British Government will exercise all possible forbearance and has suspended action against Liberia.	657
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Reid (telegram).	Apr. 15	Same subject. Instructs to express appreciation for action reported in his telegram of the 12th inst.	658
	Mr. Bernstorff to Mr. Knox.	Apr. 22	Financial affairs. The German Government intends to say to the French Government that under the loan agreement the General Receiver is to direct the Receivers and therefore has the right to assign them to the different posts; that the Government of the United States, prior to conclusion of the agreement, promised the Monrovia post to the German Receiver; that this, and the additional right under the agreement to represent the General Receiver in his absence, were essential conditions that Germany can not now give up. Requests opinion of the Department on the foregoing.	674
	Mr. Crum to Mr. Knox (telegram).	May 2	Reorganization of the Liberian Frontier Force by American officers. Reports arrival of officers.	665
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Skinner telegram).	May 6	Financial affairs. Instructs him to proceed with negotiations.	675
	Mr. Crum to Mr. Knox (telegram).	May 9	Disturbances on the Anglo-Liberian frontier. The Liberian Government requests the appointment of Capt. Young, Military Attaché, on the Liberian Boundary Commission.	658
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Crum (telegram).	May 14	Same subject. Capt. Young, Military Attaché, can not accept appointment from Liberian Government.	658
1014	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Jusserand.	May 15	Financial affairs. Replies to his note of Mar. 30. Considers that to maintain equitable conditions, the German Receiver is entitled to the Monrovia post, other compensating concessions having been heretofore made to Great Britain and France.	675
656	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Bernstorff.	...do....	Same subject. Acknowledges his Apr. 22; by way of reply, incloses copy of the note of May 15 to Mr. Jusserand.	678
27	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Crum.....	...do....	Same subject. Refers to Mr. Clark's Apr. 5 and Department's Apr. 8, and incloses the correspondence relating to the Monrovia post for the German Receiver.	678
	Mr. Crum to Mr. Knox (telegram).	May 16	Disturbances on the Anglo-Liberian frontier. Capt. Young has recommended Capt. Ballard for appointment on boundary commission and recommendation has been accepted by Liberian Government.	658
	Same to same (telegram)....	...do....	Same subject. British Consul General complains of nonappearance of Cooper and Lomax at Monrovia to answer charges. Whereabouts unknown.	659
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Falkner...	May 18	Financial affairs. Transmits information from Mr. Skinner concerning settlements with creditors, and 60-day delay in concluding these.	679

LIBERIA—Continued.

No.	From and to whom.	Date.	Subject.	Page.
		1912.
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Crum (telegram).	May 21	Disturbances on the Anglo-Liberian frontier. The British Government reports further trouble on the frontier. Instructs to urge immediate action to restore order.	659
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Reid (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. Advises him that the American officers engaged by the Liberian Government to reorganize the Frontier Force have arrived at Monrovia, and it is believed that conditions will soon improve.	659
	Mr. Crum to Mr. Knox (telegram).	May 23	Same subject. Liberian Government doing its utmost to have the accused officials, Lomax and Cooper, brought to Monrovia, and begs continued good offices of the United States Government with the Government of Great Britain.	660
	Mr. Skinner to Mr. Knox (telegram).	June 22	Financial affairs. Loan negotiations have been concluded.	679
	Mr. Falkner to Mr. Knox...	...do....	Same subject. Discusses the problem presented by German creditors concerning debts subsequent to Dec. 31, 1910.	679
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Skinner (telegram).	June 25	Same subject. Instruction to tell German creditors that Dr. Falkner will urge desired settlement.	680
	Mr. Crum to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. General Receiver Clark awaits official notification before assuming control of customs.	680
	Same to same (telegram).....	June 26	Disturbances on the Anglo-Liberian frontier. Cooper and Lomax brought to Monrovia to-day.	660
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Crum (telegram).	June 29	Same subject. The British Government reports the murder of eight native chiefs and that Lomax and Cooper were present and connived. Instructs to ask for a searching investigation that guilty parties may be brought to justice.	660
	Same to same (telegram).....	...do.....	Financial affairs. Recommends that Clark constitute the Receivership in form on July 1 and then await approval by bankers of terms of settlement with creditors.	681
	Mr. Knox to Kuhn, Loeb & Co.	July 10	Same subject. It appears that the functions of the new receivership are inconsistent with the old agreement (Erlanger). Therefore it will be established in form only for the present.	681
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Crum (telegram).	July 11	Same subject. Bankers expect to issue bonds as soon as formally authorized by Liberia.	682
	Mr. Skinner to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. Creditors demand interest at 5 per cent from July 1.	682
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Crum (telegram).	July 12	Same subject. Liberia must retain sums due Fiscal Agent as of July 1. Instructs him to have Clark enter into the functions of General Receiver necessary to secure such sums.	682
	Mr. Crum to Mr. Knox (telegram).	July 16	Same subject. Liberia will place sums due Fiscal Agent to Clark's credit provided no interest on outstanding loans will be required after June 30.	683
	Mr. Adee to Mr. Crum (telegram).	July 19	Same subject. Instructs to inform Clark that interest on old loans will run until final adjustment; but if Liberian Government will deposit the sums due under new loan agreement, no other interest payment will be necessary. The reservations made under old loans will revert to Liberia when the loans are canceled.	683
	Mr. de la Rocca to Mr. Knox.	...do...	Same subject. The French Government assents to the assignment of the German Receiver to the Monrovia post; but, as this arrangement disturbs the equipoise between France, Germany, and Great Britain in Liberia, in compensation France desires that the United States admit the propriety of granting her such facilities as may be required for rectifying the Franco-Liberian boundary, and also favor assignment of the French Receiver to the post nearest that boundary.	683
	Mr. Crum to Mr. Knox (telegram).	July 29	Same subject. Mr. Lange has held the posts of Receiver and of Vice Consul together for some time, and will not resign the latter until the full establishment of the receivership. The Liberian Government consequently will intimate to Germany that Lange's exequatur will be revoked upon complete establishment of Receivership.	684
	Same to same (telegram).....	July 31	Same subject. Replies to Department's July 19, that Clark urges holding at Monrovia of interest under old loans or offsetting payment thereof against the new loan. Double payment of interest will cripple the Receivership.	684
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Crum (telegram).	Aug. 14	Same subject. It is impossible to prevent double payment of interest until cancellation of old loans, but the advances will ultimately be returned to Liberia.	685

LIBERIA—Continued.

No.	From and to whom.	Date.	Subject.	Page.
	Mr. Crum to Mr. Knox (telegram).	1912. Aug. 19	Same subject. Liberian Government can not understand why, if it is expected to be satisfied with the bankers' assurances concerning repayment of advances the bankers should not on their part accept Liberia's assurances of payment. Double interest payment is unjust.	685
	Mr. Haniel to Mr. Knox.....	Aug. 23	Same subject. Mr. Lange intends to resign the consulship as soon as he becomes Receiver, but Liberia demands his resignation before that event. Germany objects, and sees no harm in Receivers being also Consuls.	686
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Haniel...	Sept. 11	Same subject. The Department does not agree with the German Government that the double tenure of office would be unobjectionable and regards Liberia's position as reasonable. The difficulty could be easily avoided by the prompt appointment of a new German consul.	686
1059	Mr. Wilson to Mr. de la Rocca.	...do.....	Same subject. Answers his July 19; does not agree with France that the assignment of the German Receiver to Monrovia upsets the equilibrium between the Governments concerned. Boundary rectification as a proportionate counterpoise the Department can not seriously entertain; this question is in any event inappropriate at the present juncture.	687
54	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Herrick..	...do.....	Same subject. Transmits correspondence with France and Germany in regard to Receivers' posts and Mr. Lange's double tenure, and instructs to express this Government's confidence in France's continued support of the loan.	689
142	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Leishman.	...do.....	Same subject. Instruction of same tenor as to Mr. Herrick.	689
1764	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Reid.....	...do.....	Same subject. Instruction of same tenor as to Mr. Herrick, adding an expression of thanks for Great Britain's hearty cooperation in the loan matter.	690
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Crum (telegram).	Sept. 12	Same subject. Refers to his July 29. Summarizes the correspondence with France and Germany.	691
	Mr. Bundy to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Sept. 22	Disturbances on the Anglo-Liberian frontier. Reports trial and acquittal, on the charge of murder, of Lomax and Cooper.	661

2127	Mr. Phillips to Mr. Knox....	Oct. 16	Disturbances on the Anglo-Liberian frontier. Incloses a note from the Liberian Minister at London concerning the trial and acquittal of Lomax and Cooper.	661
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Crum (telegram).	Nov. 23	Financial affairs. As the three Receivers have now been appointed Clark should at once organize the Receivership, remit all sums received for 1912 loan, and make full report.	691
65	Mr. Bundy to Mr. Knox....	Nov. 29	Same subject. Department's Nov. 23 transmitted to Clark. Incloses documents evidencing that the Receivership came into full operation on Nov. 26.	692
66	Same to same..............	Nov. 30	Same subject. Reviews the steps taken toward organizing the Receivership, and incloses the correspondence in regard to Mr. Lange's double tenure.	694
	Same to same (telegram)....	Dec. 4	Same subject. Clark, General Receiver, will insist on his right to locate Receivers, which they deny.	697
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Bundy (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. Department approves Clark's course.	697
67	Mr. Bundy to Mr. Knox....	Dec. 9	Same subject. Incloses correspondence concerning the assignment of Receivers.	698
	Same to same..............	Dec. 19	Message of the President of Liberia to the Legislature. Text.	649
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Bundy (telegram).	Dec. 21	Financial affairs. Directs him to repeat to Clark Department's instructions to assign French and British Receivers to their respective boundary ports.	700

376	Mr. Knox to Mr. Wilson	June 16	Same subject. Approves his action as described in his No. 581 relating to filing of claims in the Embassy; instructs him to distribute claims circular to claimants.	931
672	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox	June 23	Same subject. Incloses circular instruction he has sent to consuls regarding claims.	931
398	Mr. Knox to Mr. Wilson	June 27	Same subject. Acknowledges his No. 634 and desires details of proposed joint action by diplomatic corps.	932
692	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox	June 30	Same subject. Acknowledges Department's No. 376 and reports compliance therewith.	933
712	Same to same	July 6	Same subject. Acknowledges Department's No. 398; incloses rules of the new claims commission; asks for instructions as to the attitude to take toward it and the manner of advising claimants.	933
422	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson	July 12	Same subject. Acknowledges his No. 692, approves his action and instructs to follow inclosed instruction in advising claimants.	936
421	Same to same	July 13	Same subject. Acknowledges his No. 672 and approves his action as therein stated.	936
734	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox	July 20	Same subject. Refers to Department's No. 376; transmits note from Foreign Office requesting to know whether claims submitted to it by the Embassy are to be presented to the new claims commission.	937
762	Mr. Dearing to Mr. Knox	Aug. 2	Same subject. Refers to Department's No. 422; incloses Embassy's instruction to claimants as amended.	937
796	Same to same	Aug. 9	Discrimination against American railway employees. Mexican employees will strike in order to force discharge of American employees. Mr. Dearing has requested the Mexican Government to give a hearing to the latter's representatives.	910
820	Same to same	Aug. 16	Same subject. Gives statistical information regarding railroad employees.	912
476	Mr. Knox to Mr. Dearing	Aug. 17	American claims. Acknowledges his No. 734; instructs to advise the Foreign Office that American claimants will be referred in the first instance to the claims commission, diplomatic measures being reserved for future consideration.	939

MEXICO—Continued.

No.	From and to whom.	Date.	Subject.	Page.
518	Same to same	1911. Aug. 31	American claims. Acknowledges his No. 762 and suggests an alteration of the Embassy's claims circular, and of form of claims note to the Foreign Office.	940
948	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox	Sept. 19	Same subject. Transmits message of President de la Barra, in which reference is made to foreign claims.	941
	Same to same (telegram)	Sept. 20	Same subject. It is reported that the claims commission will give priority to claims made by Mexicans; requests instructions; suggests inquiry whether the report is true.	941
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	Sept. 22	Same subject. Instructs to address the Foreign Office as suggested in his Sept. 20; if the report is true, to add to the inquiry that if the Government is in accord with the commission, further resort to the latter would seem useless, and diplomatic measures will become necessary.	941
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Oct. 2	Same subject. Department's instruction of Sept. 22 complied with. He has also requested an extension of time to Nov. 1.	942
	Same to same (telegram)	Oct. 9	Same subject. Time extended to Nov. 1, claims to be filed with the Foreign Office, which will present them to the claims commission.	943
	Mr. Adee to Mr. Wilson	Oct. 11	Same subject. Claimants are being advised to present claims to the Department or Embassy for transmission informally through diplomatic channels, but disclaiming for this Government any guaranty of collecting them.	943
1019	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox	Oct. 21	Same subject. Transmits claims circular prepared in accordance with instruction of Oct. 11.	944
	Same to same (telegram)	Oct. 28	Same subject. Further extension of time refused.	946
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	Nov. 1	Same subject. The Department will seek further time through Mexico's confidential representative.	946
613	Mr. Adee to Mr. Wilson	Nov. 7	Same subject. Action of the Ambassador approved in stating to certain claimants that this Government has waived no rights to present claims diplomatically by advising initial presentation to the commission. Gives reasons for preferring not to make diplomatic representations.	946
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	Nov. 21	Same subject. Instruction to request extension of time to Jan. 1, 1912.	947
1083	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox	Nov. 22	Same subject. Requests further general instructions to claimants. Suggests that all claims not yet before the commission be presented en masse diplomatically.	948
	Same to same (telegram)	Nov. 25	Same subject. Time extended to Dec. 31; claims to go through Foreign Office. All claimants will be notified.	949
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	Nov. 27	Same subject. Instruction to thank the Foreign Office for extension of time.	949
652	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson	Dec. 2	Same subject. Acknowledges his No. 1083 and refers him to Department's Oct. 11 for information about instructions to claimants; approves his Nov. 25 as to notifying claimants. The Department is not inclined to present claims en masse diplomatically, as suggested.	949
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Wickersham.	1912. Jan. 3	Political affairs. Incloses note from Mexican Ambassador of Dec. 30, 1911, requesting more vigilant maintenance of the neutrality laws of the U. S. The Department of State draws a clear distinction between the enforcement of those laws and activities desired by the Mexican Government which, if carried out, would be equivalent to participating with that Government in putting down a revolution—activities incompatible with the neutrality of the United States.	708
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Lascurain	Jan. 4	Same subject. Acknowledges his note of Dec. 30, 1911, requesting stricter enforcement of the neutrality laws of the United States; the note has been copied to the Attorney General for such action as he may find suitable.	709
1203	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox	Jan. 6	Same subject. Incloses note from the Mexican Foreign Office relative to seditious propaganda from within the United States by Vásquez Gómez.	710
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	Jan. 8	American claims. Instructs to express to the Foreign Office this Government's dissatisfaction with the attitude of the Mexican Government toward American claims, particularly those arising from border engagements at Douglas and El Paso, and at Agua Prieta and Ciudad Juárez; but it finds it now necessary informally to request prompt attention to the latter.	950

No.	From and to whom.	Date.	Subject.	Page.
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	1912. Jan. 10	Same subject. Instruction of Jan. 8 complied with; the Foreign Office desires the claims referred to presented to the commission, but this will be unsatisfactory, direct diplomatic representations being preferable; diplomatic corps considering joint action in view of inimical attitude of the commission.	951
1204	Same to same	...do....	Political affairs. Incloses article from the official organ of the Mexican Government treating of the relations between the United States and Mexico; suggests laying it before the President.	712
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	Jan. 13	American claims. Instruction to represent the Douglas and El Paso incidents according to instruction of Jan. 8, and to inform the Department further in regard to all classes of claims.	952
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Jan. 16	Same subject. All Governments except China and Germany are submitting claims to the commission, but it is working unsatisfactorily; diplomatic treatment of border and Alamo cases recommended.	952
	Same to same	...do....	Discrimination against American railway employees. Transmits memorandum of interview with railway president relative to Mexicanization of the National Railways by discharge of American employees.	914
	Same to same (telegram)	Jan. 17	American claims. He has urgently presented the border and Alamo cases to the Government, which promises immediate action through consular inquiries, to be followed by judicial proceedings.	953
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	Jan. 18	Same subject. Gives reasons for desiring to present claims in first instance to the commission but the Ambassador may continue to press for early hearings, and especially to urge the Government to investigate the El Paso and Douglas incidents.	954
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Jan. 22	Same subject. The Alamo cases will be taken up at once directly with the Embassy, since the commission has no jurisdiction over cases of personal injury or loss of life within Mexican territory. The El Paso and Douglas cases will be settled directly by consuls, with appeal to the commission.	954
1224	Same to same	Jan. 23	Political affairs. Describes the political, military, and economic conditions of Mexico.	713
1247	Same to same	Feb. 2	Same subject. Incloses copy of his letter to the American Consul General at Mexico City relative to protection of American interests, desired by Mr. G. P. Robinson of the Suriana Mining and Smelting Co.	715
	Same to same (telegram)	Feb. 3	Same subject. Zapatistas now in control of territory between Cuernavaca and Chilpanzingo. Strike impending of 1,200 American employees of Mexican railways.	716
	Mr. Knox to President Taft.	...do....	Same subject. Quotes Mr. Wilson's telegram of Feb. 3 and suggests that War Department strengthen the border guard.	716
	Mr. Stimson to Mr. Knox	...do....	Firing across boundary. Col. Steever reports having notified Mexican authorities to prevent firing into the United States in case of disorder in or about Juarez. Similar notification sent by Governor of Texas. Refers to similar warnings in 1911 without effect. Requests instruction.	878
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Feb. 5	Political affairs. Describes military and political situation.	717
	Mr. Letcher to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. State of Chihuahua a unit against the Federal Government.	717
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	...do....	American claims. Douglas and El Paso claimants are being advised of the substance of Mr. Wilson's Jan. 22, and to present their claims directly to the consuls.	955
	Mr. Letcher to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Feb. 6	Political affairs. Orozco elected Governor of Chihuahua. Fear of intervention by United States.	717
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do....	Permission for passage of Mexican troops over American soil. Foreign office inquires whether 500 or 600 soldiers may pass to Ciudad Juarez from Eagle Pass over Southern Pacific Railway; arms, etc., on separate train if required; object is to deal more adequately with Ciudad Juarez situation.	888
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Colquitt (telegram).	Feb. 7	Same subject. Inquires whether Texas acquiesces in request of Mexico as to passage of troops over American soil.	888
	Mr. Colquitt to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. No objection to granting request of Mexican Government.	889

No.	From and to whom.	Date.	Subject.	Page.
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Stimson	1912. Feb. 7	Same subject. Advises him that the President has directed that permission be granted for passage of Mexican troops over American territory, their arms and ammunition to be shipped as baggage and the troops to be escorted by American troops.	889
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	...do....	Political affairs. Although the border patrol may be strengthened, the President's attitude is the same as expressed in his message to Congress last year.	717
	Mr. Stimson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. United States troops have captured in New Mexico 13 armed Mexicans who had invaded the United States near El Paso.	718
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. Describes political and military situation; portions of the press are anti-American.	718
	Mr. Edwards to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. Casas Grandes authorities have declared against the Federal Government. American colonists notified to surrender their arms; they will resist; the consul will protest.	718
	Mr. Knox to Mr. MacVeagh and Mr. Nagel (telegram).	Feb. 8	Permission for passage of Mexican troops over American soil. Advises them of consent of this Government to passage of Mexican troops over American territory, and requests their assistance therein.	890
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. Advises him of permission for Mexican troops to pass over American territory, and instructs him so to inform the Foreign Office.	890
	Mr. Colquitt to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Feb. 9	Same subject. If it is the purpose of Mexican troops, for whose passage over American soil has been granted, to fight rebels in Chihuahua, he withdraws his consent to their passage through Texas.	890
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Colquitt (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. The Department understands that the passage of Mexican troops is only for the purpose of preserving order in Ciudad Juárez and not for general hostilities. Unless the Mexican Government will confirm this understanding, the permission will be withdrawn.	891
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. Quotes telegram to Governor of Texas and instructs him immediately to cancel the permission pending further instructions to be based on his report that the troops will be used solely to preserve order at Juárez.	891
	Mr. Knox to Mr. MacVeagh and Mr. Nagel (telegram).	Feb. 10	Same subject. Informs him of cancellation of permission for passage of Mexican troops.	892
	Mr. Colquitt to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. Asks whether or not Mexican troops passing through American territory would meet armed resistance on attempting to reenter Mexico at Juárez.	892
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Edwards (telegram).	...do.....	Political affairs. Department approves his protest, which should be based on the ground that Americans must not be left without means for self-defense.	719
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. Repeats Mr. Edwards's information and instructs to protest, making reservations as to damages and injuries.	719
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Feb. 11	Permission for passage of Mexican troops over American soil. The Mexican Government withdraws its request for passage of troops, but circumstances may arise which will cause a renewal thereof.	893
	Mr. Stimson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Feb. 12	Political affairs. The 13 Mexicans mentioned Feb. 7 have been delivered to proper civil authorities.	719
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. Quotes instruction to consular officers in Mexico, authorizing denial of intention of the United States to intervene; consuls must be strictly neutral, but must insist on protection of American lives and property.	720
	Same to same (telegram)....	...do.....	Same subject. Instruction that it is the policy of the Department to leave all American citizens in Mexico to follow their own judgment in regard to remaining or departing from their domiciles, except where some specific region is peculiarly perilous, when they may be advised to leave. If the lawlessness becomes general, the Department may instruct all consular officers to give publicity to advice to all Americans to return to their country, and that claims for losses or injuries to American citizens will at the proper time be presented to the Mexican Government.	720
	Same to same (telegram)....	...do.....	American claims. The Department is advising Americans in Mexico to use their own judgment as to remaining or leaving; if they leave disturbed districts, any losses thereby will be claimed on their behalf by this Government.	955

	Same to same (telegram)....	Feb. 22	Same subject. Americans being robbed and maltreated in Sinaloa. Consul instructed to advise them to remove to places of safety.	724
	Mr. Edwards to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Feb. 23	Same subject. General exodus to the United States from Ciudad Juárez.	724
1274	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox....	Feb. 24	Presentation of a statue of George Washington. Incloses newspaper report of ceremonies on Feb. 22 of presentation by American citizens in Mexico to the Mexican people of a statue erected in the city of Mexico.	905
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	...do.....	Political affairs. The President is disposed to give warning that troops will be sent into Mexico as a police measure if there should be further injury to Americans on American soil as now threatened at Ciudad Juárez.	724
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. If the President orders troops into Mexico as a police measure such action should be explained and intention immediately to withdraw after restoration of order should be announced. Further observations.	725
	Same to same (telegram)....	...do.....	Same subject. Suggests that in case of preparations to send troops into Mexico at Ciudad Juárez it should be declared that this part of Mexico is in rebellion against the established government, with which the United States is friendly. Other observations.	725
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	Feb. 25	Firing across boundary. Inquiries whether Mexican Government would be disposed spontaneously to prevent fighting in or about Juárez to avoid firing into United States.	878
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Feb. 26	Same subject. Will act at once on Department's telegram of Feb. 25.	879
	Mr. Crespo to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. Is instructed to learn what credit may be given to press report that American troops have orders to cross into Mexico if shots are fired from Mexico into the United States.	879
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. Instructs to renew officially and emphatically the warning against firing into American territory.	879
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. Refers to Department's Feb. 25, 7 p. m., and reports Mexican Government's order to forces at Ciudad Juárez to engage rebels at about 13 miles distant from Juárez and under no circumstances to make resistance in that town.	879

No.	From and to whom.	Date.	Subject.	Page.
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	1912. Feb. 26	Same subject. Department has replied to inquiry of Mexican Ambassador that press reports of orders to United States troops to cross into Mexico if shots are fired into the United States are without foundation; troops massed at El Paso are merely a deterrent to such firing. Instructs to emphasize to Foreign Office the necessity of preventing it.	880
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. Has sent the Foreign Office a friendly but firm note in regard to the Ciudad Juárez situation.	880
	Mr. Edwards to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. The rebel commander, Campa, has sent him a notice to all foreigners in Ciudad Juárez to seek a place of safety, as he is about to attack that city.	880
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Edwards (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. Instructs to give to both Campa and the Federal commander informal and unofficial warning against firing into the United States.	881
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. Instructs to warn both the President and the Foreign Office of the serious consequences of firing into the United States at Ciudad Juárez, and to renew suggestion to engage the enemy at a safe distance from the town.	881
121	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Crespo...	...do.....	Political affairs. Regrets the passage of United States troops across the frontier at El Paso on a street car; appropriate apologies have been made to Mexican consul at El Paso.	726
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. Refers to Department's Feb. 20, 6 p. m., and Mr. Wilson's Feb. 21, 5 p. m. The "American citizens" mentioned include men as well as women and children.	727
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Feb. 27	Same subject. A Mexican official warned the Embassy that if United States troops cross the line at Ciudad Juárez, Americans in Mexico City will be generally massacred. Mr. Wilson has demanded protection for Americans and other foreigners.	727
	Same to same (telegram)....	...do.....	Same subject. Vásquez Gómez is apparently the leader of the revolution; he should either be expelled from the United States or imprisoned.	727
	Same to same (telegram)....	...do.....	Same subject. Velardena situation bad; Americans ask protection; vigorous representations have been made. General situation dangerous.	728
	Same to same (telegram)....	...do.....	Firing across border. Instructions of Feb. 26 complied with.	881
	Mr. Edwards to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. Ciudad Juárez surrendered to General Campa.	882
1285	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox....	Feb. 28	Same subject. Transmits correspondence with Mexican Government relating to Ciudad Juárez situation.	882
	Same to same (telegram)....	...do	Political affairs. The Foreign Office suggests that Vásquez Gómez open letter to President Madero, published widely Feb. 25, might justify the Government of the United States in proceeding against him. Further, requests rigid prevention of shipment of arms into Mexico via Ciudad Juárez.	728
	Mr. Edwards to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. Ciudad Juárez in rebels' hands. They have set up a local government and will collect duty on imports. Rumors of Villa's defection.	728
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Crespo...	Feb. 29	Same subject. Vásquez Gómez is being watched, but has not yet been observed in a breach of the neutrality laws.	729
	Same to same..............	...do....	Same subject. If the Mexican Government close Ciudad Juárez to international commerce, the question would arise whether there is in fact a state of belligerency.	729
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. Refers to Department's Feb. 20, 6 p. m. Americans at Velardena reported safe.	730
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	Mar. 1	Same subject. Advises him of the purport of the two notes sent to the Mexican Ambassador on Feb. 29.	730
	Same to same (telegram)....	...do....	Same subject. Instruction to urge the immediate sending of adequate relief to the Americans at Velardena.	730
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. Urgent representations made to Mexican Government concerning assaults on the Suriana mine; G. P. Robinson and others have requested aid.	730
	Same to same (telegram)....	...do....	Same subject. Refers to Department's Mar. 1, 5 p. m., and his own Feb. 29, 7 p. m.; Americans at Velardena well.	731
	Same to same (telegram)....	Mar. 2	Same subject. Heavy emigration of Americans from all parts of Mexico; the situation grows steadily worse.	731

	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	1912. Mar. 2	Same subject. Instruction to inform Americans that it is the Embassy's duty to advise them to withdraw from specified localities where lawlessness so threatens their safety as to make withdrawal prudent; consuls to care for abandoned property where possible.	731
	Same to same (telegram)	...do...	Same subject. Text of the President's proclamation of Mar. 2, 1912, admonishing citizens of the United States to observe the neutrality laws and warning those that engage in acts subversive of the peace of Mexico that they will not be protected by the United States Government from the legal consequences of such acts. The Ambassador is instructed that the proclamation is not a declaration of neutrality nor a recognition of a state of belligerancy in Mexico, but merely a warning to American citizens not to participate in disturbances in Mexico. The Ambassador will so state to the Mexican Government. Text of statement to the press is quoted to the Ambassador, to be laid before the Mexican Government.	732
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Crespo	...do...	Same subject. Incloses a copy of the President's proclamation of Mar. 2.	733
	Mr. Letcher to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Mar. 3	Same subject. The President's proclamation is construed to mean that Americans are warned to leave Mexico, with intention to intervene.	734
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	...do...	Same subject. The Department fears the Mexcan press may be misinterpreting the President's proclamation; instructs to deny intention of the United States to intervene.	734
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Mar. 4	Same subject. Quotes his statement to the Mexican press in pursuance of Department's instruction of Mar. 3; believes the President's proclamation is now understood.	735
	Same to same (telegram)	...do...	Same subject. The Mexican Government has declared in the press its correct appreciation of the President's proclamation. The Ambassador continues to allay misgivings of Americans and Mexicans.	735
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Letcher (telegram).	...do...	Same subject. Instructs to make emphatic public denial of intention of the United States to intervene.	735
	Mr. Stimson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do...	Same subject. Military news from Chihuahua; Orozco and Salazar join the rebels; Villa attacks Orozco.	736
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Crespo	...do...	Same subject. A foreign port in the hands of insurgents is regarded as if it were still in the hands of the parent government and consequently open to the intercourse and commerce of other nations, except where passage through such port is prevented by the parent government. Therefore the United States Government considers itself without legal basis for prohibiting the routing of mail through Ciudad Juárez when that is the only port through which mails can be dispatched to that section. Moreover, postmaster of a foreign country can not properly act within the United States; still less a foreign consul, as requested by the Mexican Government; accordingly mail can not properly be delivered to a Mexican consul, except official mail for officials of the parent government.	736
	Mr. Letcher to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Mar. 5	Same subject. Describes difficulties of warning Americans to leave isolated points.	737
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do...	Same subject. The Mexican Government, alarmed by the enormous importation of arms through Ciudad Juárez, calls the Ambassador's attention to the practical recognition of the Madero Government by the Diaz Government, but declares that the present Government has no intention of treating with the rebels in arms; if the present Government should fall, the United States could hardly refuse to intervene. Requests, therefore, that the Government of the United States seek a way to stop the importation of arms and ammunition.	737
	Mr. Crespo to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	...do...	Same subject. Since the rebels are not belligerents, the Mexican Government asks only that the introduction of arms and ammunition through Ciudad Juárez be prevented, as such introduction would violate the neutrality laws of the United States.	737
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Letcher (telegram).	Mar. 6	Same subject. Refers to his Mar. 5. The Department must depend on the consulate's discretion regarding warning Americans to leave particular localities.	738

MEXICO—Continued.

No.	From and to whom.	Date.	Subject.	Page.
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	1912. Mar. 6	Same subject. All Latin-American missions have been instructed to promote friendly appreciation of the patient attitude of the United States toward Mexico; to explain the reasons for sending troops to the border to prevent firing into American territory; to make known the purport of the President's proclamation of Mar. 2; and to emphasize the determination of the United States not to intervene.	738
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. Mexico City authorities have called on all foreign and native friends of order to arm themselves to aid the Government in maintaining order. Mr. Wilson states the measures he purposes taking. His European colleagues disapprove the permission to ship arms and ammunition across the frontier to revolutionists.	739
750	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson...	...do....	American claims. Acknowledges his 1266 and instructs to press the claims for prompt settlement.	956
33	Mr. Ching Yin Tang to Mr. Knox.	...do....	Protection of Chinese subjects. Requests permission for Chinese subjects in Mexico, threatened with violence, to seek refuge in the United States.	926
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Mar. 7	Political affairs. Committees from the foreign colonies in Mexico City will be armed by the local authorities. Americans have been counseled by the Ambassador to tender their services to the Government, but to refrain from participating in Mexican affairs.	739
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Edwards (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. The Department can not authorize a consul to accept the care of bullion or money.	739
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Mar. 8	Same subject. Representatives of the great powers request the Ambassador to ask the Mexican Government for definite guaranties of safety for foreigners in Mexico City.	740
	Mr. Wilson to Mr Crespo...	...do.....	Same subject. Refers to his Mar. 5. There being no recognized state of belligerency in Mexico, the rules of warfare are not involved, the status is one of peace, and there exists no interdiction of commerce outside the jurisdiction of Mexico, whose Government must itself enforce all laws touching commerce. But even if a recognized belligerency existed it would not cause a prohibition of commercial traffic in arms and ammunition, as is shown by the Hague convention, Articles 4, 6, and 7. However, the neutrality laws of the United States do make illegal certain specified acts, even where no belligerency exists, when directed against a friendly government; but those laws do not place the offenders, though penally liable in this country, under extraterritorial obligation; nor is this Government so placed. Thus neither the so-called neutrality statutes nor the general laws of neutrality prohibit mere commercial exportation of arms and ammunition; hence the Executive is legally powerless to prevent that traffic as long as it remains purely commercial and is unconnected with any act prohibited by the statutes. Therefore the sale of supplies in El Paso to Mexicans, whether insurrectos or supporters of the Government, and their delivery across the border, is not in violation of the statutes.	740

	Same to same (telegram)....	Mar. 9	Political affairs. Refers to his Mar. 6, 10 p. m., and March 7, 10 p. m., and inquires why the Mexican Government is unable to control mobs. Approves Ambassador's course. Instructs to repeat caution to Americans to keep aloof from partisan affairs.	742
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do.....	American claims. Foreign Office declares it is making progress with the border cases.	957
	Same to same (telegram)....	Mar. 10	Political affairs. The instructions of Department's Mar. 9, 7 p. m., have been executed.	743
	Same to same (telegram)....	Mar. 11	Same subject. The German Minister has been instructed to pursue a course analogous to that of the United States.	743

1143	Mr. Crespo to Mr. Wilson	1912. Mar. 11	Same subject. That the neutrality laws of the United States fail to cover many important points, does not afford sufficient ground for failure of the Government and people of the United States to take any measure calculated to prevent acts that come within the field of international duty. [Secretary of State Hamilton Fish quoted.] The Mexican Government therefore hopes this Government will take steps to prevent the continuance of exportation of arms and ammunition into Mexico.	743
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	...do.....	American claims. Instructs to hasten the border cases as much as possible.	957
1306	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox	Mar. 12	Discrimination against American railway employees. Reports interview with the President of Mexico regarding a strike threatened by American railway employees.	916
	Same to same (telegram)	Mar. 14	Political affairs. Suggests sending a war vessel to Mazatlan.	744
	Joint Resolution of Congress.	...do.....	Same subject. A joint resolution to amend the joint resolution to prohibit the export of coal or other material used in war from any seaport of the United States to any American country the scene of domestic violence, except such as may be excepted by the President, and until otherwise ordered by the President.	745
	Proclamation by the President.	...do.....	Same subject. Proclamation of the purport of the foregoing joint resolution.	745
762	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson	...do.....	Same subject. Acknowledges the Ambassador's No. 1247 of Feb. 2, regarding protection of American citizens, and calling attention to Secretary Blaine's statement of the law in 1891, with quotation thereof.	746
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Mar. 15	Same subject. Requests 500 rifles and ammunition for the American colony.	747
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	Mar. 16	Same subject. Instructions relating to the presentation to the Mexican Government of the President's proclamation of Mar. 14.	747
134	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Crespo	...do.....	Same subject. Refers to his No. 1143 of Mar. 11 and to his own note of Mar. 8; the proclamation of the President, of Mar. 14, has modified the then existing statutes so as to inhibit under specific conditions the exportation of materials of war until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress; this action was taken in the desire to promote the return of peace to Mexico and should be construed as an act of friendship.	747
	Mr. Wilson to President Taft	...do.....	Same subject. The exceptions under the proclamation come under three heads: (1) it would be unwise at present to except shipments of arms and ammunition to the Madero Government (reasons given); (2) it would be unwise to except large shipments to private enterprises (reasons given); (3) but, in spite of the attending dangers, it appears urgent to except shipments consigned to the Ambassador or nearest Consul for the use of American citizens. These shipments might well be conducted as ordered for Santo Domingo in 1906 in pursuance of the joint resolution of Apr. 22, 1898.	748
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	Mar. 17	Same subject. Refers to his Mar. 15, 5 p. m., and Department's Mar. 16, 7 p. m., and quotes the form of a presidential order in pursuance of joint resolution of Apr. 22, 1898. The Department is investigating the ways and means for shipping arms and ammunition for the use of American citizens.	750
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. Dangerous conditions prevail.	75
149	Mr. Alger to Mr. Knox	...do.....	Protection of Chinese subjects. Reports having acted on previous instructions in a similar case to protect Chinese threatened with violence.	926
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Mar. 18	American claims. An American citizen has asked him to define his proper course in case of mob attacks, with a view to establishing claims for damages.	958
	Mr. Edwards to Mr. Knox	...do....	Political affairs. Americans in Acapulco desire advice about leaving. Unfriendly Mexican attitude due to fear of intervention. Instructions requested.	751
	Mr. Lespinasse to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. Believes wide publicity in Tabasco of the President's proclamation of Mar. 2 would create an excellent impression.	751

	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Crespo	1912. Mar. 18	Same subject. Vásquez Gómez has been under observation but has not been found violating the neutrality statutes of the United States. The writing of letters in this country and forwarding them by the United States mails into Mexico, inciting an uprising against the Government of Mexico, is not a violation of the neutrality laws.	752
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Lespinasse (telegram).	Mar. 19	Same subject. Refers to his Mar. 18, and gives permission to circulate the President's proclamation of Mar. 2 without alteration of its language.	752
760	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson	...do....	Same subject. Refers to his Mar. 6, 10 p. m., which states that his European colleagues disapprove this Government's permission of shipment of arms across frontier to revolutionists. Their Governments would probably in a like situation take a like position. International law did not and does not require prohibition of such shipments, nor did the neutrality laws of the United States prior to Mar. 14.	752
235	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Ching Yin Tang.	...do....	Protection of Chinese subjects. The request of the Minister dated Mar. 6 is being complied with.	927
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Beaupré (telegram).	Mar. 20	Political affairs. Instructs to amend Department's Mar. 6, 7 p. m.	753
1320	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox	...do....	Same subject. General review of political, military, and economic situation. The President's proclamations of Mar. 2 and Mar. 14 have had an excellent effect in official circles but not elsewhere.	753
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	...do....	American claims. Refers to his Mar. 18; the Department can not lay down any other rules regarding the matter therein mentioned than those of international law (Moore's Digest, vi, 809).	958
	Same to same (telegram)	Mar. 21	Political affairs. Refers to Department's Mar. 17, 10 p. m., and gives details concerning shipments of arms.	755
1170	Mr. Crespo to Mr. Knox	...do....	Same subject. Requests that the President permit certain shipments of arms and ammunition for General Sanjinés at Ojinaga, forwarded by the Mexican consul at El Paso, and detained at Marfa, Tex., by the United States authorities.	755
	Same to same (telegram)	...do....	Same subject. Again requests permission to ship arms to General Sanjinés at Ojinaga.	755
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. The Foreign Office makes the same request as Mr. Crespo's of even date.	756
771	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson	...do....	American claims. Incloses a circular to consular officers relating to collecting information as to American property in Mexico for use in future claims for damages.	959
772	Same to same	...do....	Discrimination against American railroad employees. Acknowledges his No. 1326 and instructs him to continue to report fully on the situation.	91
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Mar. 22	Political affairs. States quantity of arms needed by the American colony. Requests instruction as to method of entering the shipment at the frontier.	756
	Mr. Letcher to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. The prohibition of entry of foodstuffs will cause much bitterness toward Americans. Mines will have to shut down within two weeks. Considers it best to shut down at once and have Americans withdraw. This, together with strict enforcement of the President's proclamation, will effectively stifle the revolution.	756
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegrams).	...do....	Same subject. Refers to Department's Mar. 21, 11 a. m., and his own Mar. 22, 11 a. m., Requests increase of arms shipment.	757
	Same to same (telegram)	...do....	Same subject. Mining companies report that prohibition of entry of dynamite will cause shutting down all mines and some 20,000 discharged employees will immediately join the forces of disorder. Obregón elected President.	757
	Mr. Letcher to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Mar. 23	Taxation of foreigners by provisional revolutionary Government. Requests instructions in view of demand by such government of taxes due to Federal Government.	907
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do....	American claims. Department's citations from Moore's Digest seem to deny a government's responsibility for mob violence unless lack of due diligence can be shown; the Ambassador considers Department's Feb. 12, 5 p. m., to hold Mexican Government liable without regard to the degree of diligence.	960
1327	Same to same	...do....	Same subject. Requests instructions in regard to claims for damages due to current disturbances.	960

	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	1912. Mar. 24	Political affairs. Inquires, relative to his Mar. 22, 9 p. m., if it is feasible to enter dynamite through Vera Cruz. The President's proclamation does not affect clothing, dry goods, hardware, and foodstuffs.	757
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Letcher (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. The entry of foodstuffs, clothing, dry goods, and hardware is not prohibited by the proclamation. The Attorney General is considering the exemption of dynamite for mines and other industrial purposes.	757
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Mar. 25	Same subject. Two responsible Americans desire to order additional arms for same purpose as stated in his Mar. 22, 12 m., and Mar. 22, 6 p. m.	758
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. Refers to his Mar. 22, noon, and Mar. 22, 6 p. m. Arms will be sent Mar. 28, consigned to him but invoiced to military attaché, who will be disbursing officer.	758
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. Refers to Department's Mar. 24, 7 p. m.; is making inquiries of miners about dynamite.	758
	Mr. Wickersham to President Taft.	...do.....	Same subject. Reviews the various interpretations that have been placed upon the term "arms or munitions of war;" gives a practical working definition thereof for the use of the officials on the border.	759
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Mar. 26	Same subject. Refers to Department's Mar. 24, 7 p. m., and his Mar. 25, 10 p. m. The Mexican Government will endeavor to bring out the supply of dynamite at Dinamita, for the use of mines in northern Mexico. If this prove not feasible, dynamite will be admitted from the United States.	761
	Same to same (telegram)....	...do.....	Same subject. He has requested the Governor of San Luis Potosí to protect Americans; he has agreed. Press censorship rigid; consular telegrams are being refused.	762
1334	Same to same...............	...do.....	Same subject. Transmits correspondence between the Embassy and the Foreign Office relative to guaranties of protection to Americans in Mexico City.	762
137	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Crespo...	...do.....	Same subject. Refers to his note No. 1170 of Mar. 21 and telegrams of Mar. 21 and 22. Informs him that the President has ordered released for exportation into Mexico the arms and munitions of war specified in the note No. 1170. Hereafter the consignors of arms and ammunition for the Mexican Government will take the matter up with the Mexican Embassy, which will submit the particulars to the Department; they will then be placed before the President for his decision.	765
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Letcher (telegram).	Mar. 27	Taxation of foreigners. Instructs that taxes should be paid under protest, which should be recorded; receipts should be taken. De facto authority may receive taxes, but this Government will regard such payment as relieving the payers from further obligation.	907
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. Instructs him to repeat to the Mexican Government the instructions to Mr. Letcher.	908
	Same to same (telegram)....	Mar. 28	Political affairs. Refers to his Mar. 26, 9 p. m. Instructs him to protest against refusal to receive consular or other official telegrams for the Embassy or the Department.	766
	Same to same (telegram)....	...do.....	Same subject. Refers to his Mar. 25, 11 a. m. The Department will not recommend shipment of arms except upon his responsibility, and is not inclined to grant request of the two Americans without more specific information as to urgency of the need and the purpose to which the arms will be put. Noncompliance with similar requests might be pointed out as adverse discrimination.	766
	Same to same (telegram)....	...do.....	Same subject. Refers to his Mar. 21, 10 p. m. Shipments therein mentioned have been authorized.	766
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. Refers to Department's Mar. 28, 2 p. m. He has protested verbally, and will repeat protest when in possession of better information.	767
	Same to same (telegram)....	...do.....	Same subject. Press censorship severe. Will the Department consult with Stone as to action by Embassy?	767
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	Mar. 29	Same subject. Refers to his Mar. 28, 10 p. m. Inquire whether or not Associated Press service can be continued and investigate the Mexican Government's general policy in this matter.	767

	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	1912. Mar. 29	Same subject. The use of the Associated Press wire is still refused. Other news deliberately stopped; wires cut. General situation bad.	767
1337	Same to same	...do....	Same subject. Incloses letter to the Minister for Foreign Affairs, stating the position of the Ambassador and of his Government toward Mexico; it is false that, as reported, he is conducting propaganda in behalf of Mr. De la Barra.	768
	Mr. Crespo to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	Mar. 30	Same subject. Refers to a shipment of arms said to be authorized without the formalities specified in the Department's note of Mar. 26.	768
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. Instruction to request the Mexican Government to retain enough troops at Durango to protect Americans and their interests.	769
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. Reports attack on American railway employee. Puebla and Vera Cruz situations bad. Mexico City foreigners alarmed. Rigorous censorship continued. No consular advices. Will make further protest.	769
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Crespo (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. Refers to his Mar. 30. Reason for irregularity of shipment was lack of time. Further explanations. Not being intended for the Mexican Government, the shipment is not of the kind contemplated in the Department's note of Mar. 26.	769
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	...do....	American claims. The Department deems it inadvisable to elaborate at present the subject of his telegram of Mar. 23, 11 a. m.	960
	Same to same (telegram)	...do....	Discrimination against American railroad employees. The representatives of the American railway employees intend to request the Department to take extraordinary steps in behalf of the men and a strike is likely if they are unsatisfied with the Department's or the Mexican Government's attitude. Instructs to urge upon the latter the desirability of stopping the discrimination against American employees.	917
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Apr. 1	Political affairs. Referring to Department's Mar. 29, censorship still in effect. The Government's course is neither consistent nor just.	770
	President Taft to Mr. Wilson	...do....	Same subject. The President concurs in the opinion (inclosed) of the Attorney General that an aeroplane about to be exported from El Paso to Mexico for the purpose of dropping explosives on Federals, should not be permitted exportation. An aeroplane, though not per se included in the definition "munitions of war," is specifically acquired for the purpose of destroying human life, clearly becomes a munition of war, and is within the purposes that gave rise to the congressional joint resolution and the embargo created by the President's proclamation thereunder.	770
	Mr. Vásquez to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. Repeats the language of his manifesto of Feb. 17. States that on Mar. 31 he sent to the press an open letter to President Madero, which he quotes. Assures Mr. Knox of the noble purposes of the revolution.	771
68	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Alger	...do....	Protection of Chinese subjects. His action as reported in his Mar. 17 is approved.	927
1235	Mr. Crespo to Mr. Knox	...do....	American claims. Commissioners have been named to investigate the Douglas and El Paso claims.	960
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Apr. 2	Discrimination against American railroad employees. The Cabinet has decided to reject all demands of American employees. States the nature of his representations to the Mexican Government.	918
	Same to same (telegram)	...do....	Political affairs. Refers to Department's Mar. 25, 4 p. m. The Mexican Government will take entire charge of the safety of the shipment of arms for Americans through Vera Cruz. Says the usual duty should be paid.	772
	Same to same (telegram)	...do....	Same subject. The duty on the shipment of arms will be about $16,000, which the American colony will find hard to pay. Asks whether the Mexican Government could be allowed to take part of the shipment in payment of duties.	772
	Mr. Letcher to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Apr. 3	Same subject. Mexican authorities require passports of all persons leaving Chihuahua. Telegrams to Department delayed several hours on repeated occasions. Protests seem unavailing. Money-order service discontinued.	773

	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Nagel....	1912. Apr. 3	Same subject. A shipment of cartridges from the United States to Salvador via Mexico is not in violation of the President's proclamation of Mar. 14, which put the joint resolution of Congress into operation as to Mexico only.	773
1341	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox....	...do....	Same subject. Refers to previous correspondence concerning the need of arming the American colony. Proposes that instead of paying the duty on the shipment, the Mexican Government take the whole shipment to its own account and turn it over to the colony for their use during a stated period.	773
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	Apr. 4	Same subject. Refers to his Apr. 2, 11 p. m. If the duty must be paid it should be done in the regular way.	775
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Apr. 5	Same subject. The American colony will pay the duty on the arms and ammunition.	775

	Mr. Letcher to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Apr. 7	Same subject. An American, Heberlein, put in jail incomunicado by rebels, who ignore the consul's demand for an explanation. Rebel chiefs in manifesto repudiate Vásquez Gómez.	776
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do.....	Discrimination against American railroad employees. The Mexican Government hopes for a reconciliation between the railway management and the men.	918
	Same to same (telegram)....	Apr. 8	Same subject. The American employees will strike Apr. 15.	918
790	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson...	...do.....	American claims. Acknowledges his No. 1327; instructs to bring all claims of the character mentioned to the attention of the Government, with reservations as to future action, and to send to claimants a circular worded in general as instructed June 16, 1911, adding that legal remedies must be exhausted before having recourse to diplomatic action.	961
132	Mr. Edwards to Mr. Knox..	...do.....	Same subject. Attorneys for El Paso claimants intend not to submit claims to consul, but to await the commission provided for in the joint resolution before Congress directing the Secretary of State to investigate American claims.	962
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	Apr. 9	Political affairs. Instructs to request permission for entry of additional arms and ammunition.	776
	Same to same (telegram)....	...do.....	Same subject. Instructs to inquire again what the general policy of the Mexican Government is in regard to censorship.	777
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. Censorship continues on all press telegrams to the United States. The Mexican press full of sensational stories about intervention. Anticipation of railway strike accelerating emigration. Revolution spreading.	777
	Same to same (telegram)....	...do.....	Same subject. The shipment of arms and ammunition for the American colony is in transit from Vera Cruz.	777
	Mr. Letcher to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. An American named Fountain threatened with execution. Protest made by consul, but rebel authorities insolent. Mail confiscated.	777
1351	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox....	...do.....	Same subject. Incloses correspondence with retiring Minister for Foreign Affairs, Calero, succeeded by Lascurain.	778
456	Mr. Hanna to Mr. Knox....	...do.....	Discrimination against American railroad employees. Comments on the railway situation.	919
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Apr. 10	Political affairs. Refers to Department's Apr. 9, 7 p. m., and his own Apr. 1, 11 p. m. The Associated Press will probably be forbidden free use of the wires. Asks for instructions.	779
	Mr. Letcher to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. Rebels under Salazar take Parral. Instructions requested regarding departure of Americans.	779
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Letcher (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. Instructs to insist on immediate release of Heberlein.	779
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Edwards (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. Instructs to investigate report that official despatches for American consul at Chihuahua were taken by rebels from messenger. If true, endeavor to secure the despatches.	780
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Letcher (telegram).	Apr. 11	Same subject. Quotes telegram to the President from Orozco as leader of the revolution, repudiating the ideas contained in a published letter from Gonzalo Enrile to the President, and avowing Orozco's friendly attitude toward the United States.	780

	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	...do...	Same subject. Replying to his request, Apr. 10, 11 a. m., for instructions, advises that no formal representations are desired.	781
	Mr. Letcher to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do...	Same subject. He has received from Orozco a letter saying that in view of nonrecognition of belligerency the rebel government will not recognize the consular representatives of the United States, who should not address the military commander on behalf the United States. This letter purports to be an answer to the consul's protest against seizure of mail.	781
	Mr. Wickersham to Mr. Knox.	...do...	Same subject. He has advised those interested in procuring from the President exceptions to the prohibition of the proclamation of Mar. 14, that the President will deal with each case as it arises, and that applications should show the necessity for the exception and also that the explosives will safely arrive at destination and not fall into the hands of insurrectionists or otherwise contribute to disorder. Suggests that all such applications hereafter be sent to the President instead of to the Department of Justice.	781

	Same to same (telegram)	Apr. 13	Political affairs. Arms for American colony have arrived; ammunition delayed by Mexican Government for lack of escort. Mr. Wilson has instructed the consul at Vera Cruz to protest and insist on immediate forwarding of the ammunition.	782
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wickersham.	...do...	Same subject. Refers to his letter of the 11th instant and accepts his suggestion that applications be forwarded directly to the President.	782
	Mr. Wilson to President Taft.	...do...	Same subject. Incloses copies of Mr. Wickersham's letter of Apr. 11 and the reply of Apr. 13.	782
	Same to same	...do...	Same subject. Refers to his own letter of Mar. 16, regarding the three aspects of the question raised by the proclamation of Mar. 14; mentions an application for exception thereto made by the Southern Pacific Railroad of Mexico for use in defense of their American employees; considers that the exception should be made.	78
	Same to same	...do...	Same subject. The murder of the American citizen Fountain and of American railroad employees, the increasing arrogance of the rebels, seizing of mails, depredations on American property, etc., seem to call for a strong protest and warning not only to the Government but also the people of Mexico. Submits draft of proposed representations. Submits for signature orders for exportation of arms to Americans (partly intended for American railroad employees) and to British residents of Sonora. Mentions the important group of Americans at Los Mochis, who are demanding that a warship be sent to the west coast; their isolation is causing the Department much anxiety. Discusses a plan as to the warships. Suggests that the impending strike of American railroad employees may call for a reiteration of warning to American residents to withdraw.	784
	Same to same	...do...	Same subject. Submits for signature letters to the Secretary of the Treasury regarding permission for shipment of arms to British subjects in Sonora (referred to in his Apr. 12).	786

	Same to same (telegram)	1912. Apr. 14	Same subject. Instruction to communicate textually the accompanying representations to the Mexican Government, stating that in view of the intolerable conditions in Mexico, the Government of the United States demands adequate protection for American life and property; gives warning that the Government and people of Mexico will be held responsible for all wanton or illegal acts that endanger American life and property; demands that American citizens arrested by either Federals or rebels for participation in insurrectionary disturbances shall be dealt with according to broad principles of equitable justice and humanity as well as in accordance with the principles of international law, for any departure from which the Government of the United States must hold the Mexican people strictly responsible. Also quotes instructions to the American consul at Chihuahua: To present to Orozco a copy of the foregoing, and further to say to Orozco that the practical murder of an American citizen by the order of one of his officers is viewed by this Government with grave concern; that this Government insists, where American citizens are arrested, on the observance of the rules of war followed by civilized nations; that failure to observe them will be deeply resented and must be fully answered for by the Mexican people. Also instructs him to say to the Mexican Government that retaliation against rebels who murder American citizens taken prisoners from Federals, by murder of those taken from rebels, is to be pointed out as utterly inhuman and should never be used in the case of American citizens.	787
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Letcher (telegram)	...do....	Same subject. Quotes telegram of Apr. 14 to the Ambassador, and instructs to make to Orozco the the representations therein formulated for him, informally and unofficially; also to say that he is instructed informally to say that he must continue to exercise his functions and make such representations to Orozco as occasion may demand; that he is warranted in doing so by possession of an exequatur from the Mexican Government as representative of the Mexican people.	788
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. Instructs him to communicate to all consular officers, for their information, the Department's telegrams of Apr. 14, 3 p. m., to the Embassy and to Mr. Letcher.	788

	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	May 24	Political affairs. Zapata warns Americans to leave City of Mexico before his intended attack.	811
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	May 25	Same subject. If Zapata report is true, instructs to inform the Mexican President and the American colony. No reply to be made to Zapata.	812
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. Perfect defense plans for the American colony have been made. Zapata's warning has caused little alarm.	812
	Mr. Letcher to Mr. Knox (telegram).	May 29	Same subject. A proclamation by Orozco addressed to both the Mexican and the United States Governments has been prepared, declaring that continuance of aid by the latter to the former will make it impossible to protect Americans. Mr. Letcher suggests demanding safe conduct of American and other foreigners to the border.	812
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Letcher (telegram).	May 30	Same subject. Instructs to make unofficial but firm demand of Orozco for explanation of his proclamation, protest informally but vigorously against any evasion of his obligation to protect noncombatants, and demand safe conduct for all Americans who desire to leave Mexico. Use his discretion as to advising Americans to depart.	813
	Mr. Letcher to Mr. Knox (telegram).	May 31	Same subject. Orozco's proclamation will be issued in greatly modified form owing to representations made by Mr. Letcher. Safe conduct promised. Rebels bitter toward Americans because of alleged frustration of their plans by permission by the United States of introduction of munitions of war.	813
	Same to same (telegram)....	June 3	Same subject. Reports assault on residence of an American, William H Craft; also seizure of powder. Consul's protest unavailing. Suggests concerted action of Americans.	814

	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Dye (telegram).	...do	Same subject. Nogales reported threatened by rebels; if attack is likely, instruct vice consul as you have been instructed (Sept. 12, 8 p. m.) as to Agua Prieta.	837
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do	Same subject. He has complied with instructions of Sept. 12, 8 p. m., and Mexican Government replies that immediate steps will be taken to prevent firing across the line at Agua Prieta and Nogales.	838
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Bowman et al (telegram).	Sept. 13	Political affairs. Instructs the Consul and Vice Consul at Nogales, the Consular Agent at Cananea, and the Consul at Hermosillo to tell the Americans who have been supplied with arms that these are to be used solely for self-protection.	840
	Mr. Dye to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Sept. 14	Same subject. Information concerning the distribution of arms to Americans.	841
	Mr. Garrett to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Sept. 15	Same subject. Describes military situation	841
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	...do	Same subject. Instruction concerning emendation of note, referred to in Ambassador's Sept. 12.	841
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Lascurain	...do	Same subject. Text of note to the Mexican Government concerning the treatment of Americans; specific instances are given of murder, rape, robbery, and other criminal assaults; redress is demanded for these and also for false imprisonment. Protest is made against censorship; also against restriction of American trade. The American Government can no longer, out of an unavailing regard for the amour propre of Mexico, patiently view the state of affairs as outlined; the Mexican Government must either show that it can handle the situation or confess that it can not; in the latter case the Government of the United States will consider what steps to take; and meantime desires a prompt statement of Mexico's intentions in regard to (1) the capture and punishment of murderers of Americans, (2) ending of discrimination against American interests, and (3) improvement in general conditions in Mexico such as subject American settlers to hardships.	842
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	Sept. 16	Same subject. Instruction to date the note Sept. 15 and present it at once.	846
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Sept. 17	Same subject. The note was dated Sept. 15 and was presented Sept. 17.	846
	Same to same (telegram)	...do	Same subject. The Minister for Foreign Affairs asked if the note was the same as that referred to by the President in the interview granted to Mr. Calero on Sept. 4. Mr. Wilson replied that it was. An answer was promised within four or five days.	846

	Mr. Adee to Mr. Stimson	...do	American claims. Transmits the data requested in his Sept. 3.	967
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	Sept. 19	Permission for Mexican troops to pass over American soil. Instructs him to say to the Mexican Government that, as the United States granted permission to pass Mexican troops over its soil for the primary purpose of aiding in the protection of endangered American citizens, the failure of such troops to move against the rebels causing the danger leaves this Government somewhat bewildered.	896
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Sept. 20	Political affairs. Discusses the difficulties of disposing of the person of Pascual Orozco, sr.	847
	Same to same	Sept. 21	American claims. The Foreign Office says that all the El Paso claimants intend to await the action of the Congressional investigating commission.	968
	Same to same (telegram)	Sept. 25	Political affairs. The Foreign Office requests the indefinite detention of General Campa, now in custody at Tucson. Mr. Wilson recommends refusal to extradite any rebel leaders, but to detain them as long as possible.	847
	Mr. Oliver to Mr. Knox	...do	American claims. Requests the original petitions of claimants, for use of the War Department's claims commission.	968
1016	Mr. Adee to Mr. Wilson	Sept. 27	Political affairs. The Department hears rumors of a coup d'état whereby Madero will be succeeded by Pino Suárez, of an uprising to be led by Felix Díaz, and of an understanding between Huerta and disaffected Federal troops.	847

	Mr. Colquitt to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. Texas does not object to the passage of the troops.	897
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. de la Cueva.	Sept. 29	Same subject. Informs him that the Mexican troops may pass unarmed and escorted from Piedras Negras across American territory to reenter Mexico at Del Rio and Marathon, Tex.	898
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	Sept. 30	Same subject. Instruction to inform the Mexican Government of permission granted as requested for Mexican troops to proceed from Piedras Negras to Del Rio and Marathon, over American soil.	898
	Same to same (telegram).....	...do.....	Same subject. Instruction to withhold or withdraw permission granted, in view of objection of Governor of Texas pending further information.	898
	Mr. Colquitt to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Oct. 1	Same subject. If Mexican Government will eliminate Marathon and detrain troops only at Del Rio, there will be no objection.	899
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Stimson..	Oct. 2	Political affairs. The Department desires that all Mexican insurrectionists that enter the United States be arrested under section 14, U. S. Penal Code, neutrality laws.	848
	Same to same..............	...do.....	Same subject. Gives names of Mexican insurrectionists in the United States now in custody; the Department of Justice is being requested to cooperate in detaining these persons.	849
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wickersham.	...do.....	Same subject. The Ambassador has been instructed that insurrectionists captured in this country can not be extradited on charges of insurrection, which is a political offense; nor even on account of civil crimes committed in Mexico while they are detained under our own laws, until these laws have been satisfied.	849
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Wilson (telegram).	Oct. 3	Same subject. Refers to his Sept. 20 and 25. The Department believes insurrectionary leaders captured in this country can not be surrendered to the Mexican Government on charges relating to the present revolutionary disturbances since the extradition treaty with Mexico excepts surrender for political offenses. Instructs him so to say to the Mexican Government, informally, and add that this Government expects to place such leaders in military custody under the provisions of the neutrality statutes, and that the laws of this country will have to be satisfied before request for extradition can be acceded to.	850
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Schuyler (telegram).	Oct. 4	Permission for Mexican troops to pass over American soil. Instructs him to advise the Mexican Government of the amendment suggested by the Governor of Texas to the itinerary of the troops.	899

	Mr. Schuyler to Mr. Knox (telegram).	1912. Oct. 18	Same subject. Foreign Office strongly objects to entrance of Des Moines into port of Vera Cruz at present on account of general excitement over her supposed mission. In view of Mr. Schuyler's remonstrances there will be no bombardment.	855
	Mr. Adee to MacVeagh	...do	Same subject. Requests holding up of all shipments destined for Vera Cruz.	855
	Mr. Canada to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Oct. 19	Same subject. Transmits a letter from Felix Diaz to the Secretary of State, requesting recognition of the belligerency of the armed forces under his command.	856
	Mr. Adee to Mr. Schuyler (telegram).	...do	Same subject. The Des Moines will arrive Vera Cruz Oct. 20 and will care for as many foreigners as possible. Instructs him so to inform the German Chargé d'Affaires.	857
	Same to same (telegram)	...do	Same subject. Instructs him to say to Foreign Office that in sending a gunboat to Vera Cruz—which is admittedly under rebel control—this Government is fulfilling an imperative duty toward Americans and their interests. The Department regrets that any other purpose should have been perceived than the one communicated to the Mexican Government.	857
	Mr. Azueta to Mr. Canada	...do	Closure of port of Vera Cruz. Notifies him of the closure of the port of Vera Cruz. The American ship Seguranza should leave as soon as possible.	900
	Mr. Canada to Mr. Azueta	Oct. 20	Same subject. Has notified this Goverment of the action of the Mexican Government closing the port of Vera Cruz to the Seguranza.	901
	Mr. Schuyler to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do	Political affairs. The Mexican Government's policy at Vera Cruz is to surround the city and prevent escape of Diaz; no bombardment is contemplated.	857
	Same to same (telegram)	...do	Same subject. The Mexican Government no longer objects to arrival of the Des Moines at Vera Cruz.	858
	Mr. Canada to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Oct. 21	Same subject. Transmits notification from Federal General Beltrán to Mr. Canada that Vera Cruz will be taken by force of arms and advising precautions in behalf of Americans.	858

	Mr. Canada to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Oct. 22	Same subject. Describes situation of noncombatants at Vera Cruz.	859
	Mr. Schuyler to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do	Same subject. The most stringent orders have been given to do as little damage as possible to foreign interests at Vera Cruz; no intention of bombardment.	859
	Mr. Canada to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Oct. 23	Same subject. The battle has begun all around Vera Cruz.	860
	Mr. Schuyler to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do	Same subject. Felix Diaz has been captured. This collapse will merely prolong the trouble; there should be United States war ships in every Mexican port.	860
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Meyer (telegram).	...do	Same subject. This Government does not claim the right of asylum, but that of temporary refuge is interpreted broadly enough to allow some latitude to the judgment of the officer called on to determine the specific case; upon him the Department places the responsibility, as in the case of Commander Hughes at Vera Cruz in regard to Felix Diaz.	860
768	Mr. Canada to Mr. Knox	...do	Same subject. Incloses a series of documents and reports referring to the taking of Vera Cruz and subsequent happenings.	861
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Schuyler (telegram).	...do	Closure of port of Vera Cruz. Instruction to say to Foreign Office, in view of its protest at entrance of the Seguranza at Vera Cruz, that closure by a sovereign power of a port held by enemies, whether foreign or domestic, can have no international validity, and no extraterritorial effect of imposing any obligation upon governments of neutral powers to recognize it. A blockade of a port held adversely can not be respected.	901
	Mr. Schuyler to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Oct. 24	Same subject. Inquires whether, now that the insurrection has collapsed, he shall nevertheless follow the instruction of Oct. 23.	902
	Mr. Canada to Mr. Knox (telegram).	...do	Asylum and temporary refuge. Felix Diaz has been captured by Federal forces. If he asks for asylum it will be refused.	924
	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Meyer	Oct. 25	Political affairs. Requests that in addition to the Des Moines and Tacoma, now on east coast, two other vessels be sent there; and that four vessels be kept ready for despatch to the west coast.	863

	Mr. Knox to Mr. Schuyler (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. Refers to Mr. Schuyler's Nov. 15, 2 p. m. reporting the Minister's statement; instructs him to say to the Mexican Government that the Department is astonished to learn that a member of the Cabinet is making such statements and takes it for granted that he will be immediately and appropriately cautioned, and that the Government of Mexico will exert every effort to protect the persons and property of Americans.	869
	Mr. Schuyler to Mr. Knox (telegram).	Nov. 27	Same subject. Anti-American feeling spreading; failure to take adequate steps to punish officials guilty of offenses toward Americans. The Mexicans generally seem emboldened by approaching change of administration in United States.	870
775	Mr. Canada to Mr. Knox....	...do.....	Same subject. Reviews conditions in city and State of Vera Cruz.	870
1792	Mr. Schuyler to Mr. Knox...	...do.....	Same subject. Transmits the reply of the Mexican Government to the Department's note of Sept. 15; it expresses surprise at the reproaches contained in the latter; claims that Mexico has fulfilled its obligations toward Americans, and reproach is not in keeping with the course followed by the United States within its own territory toward Mexican citizens; rejects the imputation of hostility to American interests: declares that the Government can not be held responsible for the present state of the country; if the United States had expelled from its territory the leaders of sedition, the Mexican Government would have found it easier to reestablish peace; objects to the language of the American note in qualifying the Mexican Government and prefers not to reply to the portion of the note containing such qualifications.	871

RUSSIA.

No.	From and to whom.	Date.	Subject.	Page.
	Mr. De Rosen to Mr. Knox..	1910. Apr. 12	Extension of limit of territorial waters to 12 miles. The Russian Government desires to learn whether the British Government have ever protested against the enactment of American laws providing for a zone of 4 leagues (12 miles) within which the authority of the United States Customs officers is exercised (Revised Statutes, sections 2760, 2867, and 3067); if so, the nature of the reply of the United States.	1287
	Mr. Knox to Mr. De Rosen..	Apr. 18	Same subject. Refers to the Russian Embassy's memorandum of Apr. 12; there is no record of any protest at any time by Great Britain against the enactment of the laws referred to.	1287
363	Mr. Rockhill to Mr. Knox...	Sept. 30	Same subject. Incloses copy of a law promulgated by Russia Jan. 1/14, 1910, extending authority of Russian Customs to 12 marine miles from low-water mark. The British Government, with reference thereto, gave notice that it reserved the rights of its subjects as fixed by international usage; to which the Russian Government replied that in the absence of treaty provisions to the contrary the extension was a question of domestic regulation. The British Government thereupon declined to acquiesce in a claim to jurisdiction beyond the 3-mile limit. To this the Russian Government has not yet replied. Requests instructions.	1287
	Mr. Woolsey to Mr. Knox...	Dec. 28	Same subject. Memorandum of the Solicitor of the Department of State in regard to municipal seizures beyond the three-mile limit.	1289
452	Mr. Rockhill to Mr. Knox...	1911. Jan. 16	Same subject. Refers to his No. 363. The disposition of the Russian Government to establish a 12-mile limit for other purposes than those of customs supervision is indicated by a bill relating to fisheries now before the Duma.	1298
135	Mr. Knox to Mr. Rockhill...	Jan. 21	Same subject. Acknowledges his No. 363 and instructs him to inform himself on the jurisdiction assumed under the Russian law and report fully. Also to inform the Minister for Foreign Affairs that the United States reserves all rights of whatever nature.	1298
466	Mr. Rockhill to Mr. Knox...	Feb. 13	Same subject. Refers to Department's No. 135, and says that the Minister for Foreign Affairs regards the control at 12 miles as in keeping with the principles of international law.	1299
148	Mr. Adee to Mr. Rockhill...	Mar. 11	Same subject. Refers to his No. 466; the Department awaits further information.	1300
506	Mr. Rockhill to Mr. Knox...	Mar. 28	Same subject. Refers to Department's 148; the Government is still discussing the matter with Great Britain.	1300
157	Mr. Knox to Mr. Rockhill...	Apr. 21	Same subject. Refers to his No. 506; the Department is awaiting further information.	1300
558	Mr. Rockhill to Mr. Knox...	May 16	Same subject. Acknowledges Department's 157; a bill extending the 12-mile limit for the protection of fisheries in the Government of Archangel is before the Duma.	1300
168	Mr. Knox to Mr. Rockhill...	June 6	Same subject. Acknowledges his 558; instructs him to keep the Department informed.	1301
592	Mr. Rockhill to Mr. Knox...	June 21	Same subject. Refers to Embassy's 558; the bill extending the 12-mile limit as to fisheries has passed the Duma; no agreement has been reached with Great Britain.	1301

RUSSIA—Continued.

No.	From and to whom.	Date.	Subject.	Page.
186	Mr. Knox to Mr. Wheeler...	1911. July 18	Same subject. Acknowledges the Ambassador's 592; instructs him to keep the Department informed.	1302
641	Mr. Wheeler to Mr. Knox...	July 21	Same subject. Refers to Embassy's No. 592 and incloses text of law extending 12-mile limit as to fisheries as promulgated.	1302
59	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Guild....	1912. Jan. 19	Same subject. Refers to Mr. Rockhill's No. 452 and 592 and instructs him to report upon the present status of the Russian Government's intentions in regard to extension of its jurisdiction for the control of fisheries, and as to any protest made by interested foreign powers.	1303
173	Mr. Guild to Mr. Knox......	Feb. 3	Same subject. Refers to Department's No. 59; discusses the laws promulgated by Russia in regard to the 12-mile limit, the British Government's protest against them, Japan's protest, and an interview with the Minister for Foreign Affairs and his views.	1304
179	Same to same...............	Feb. 9	Same subject. Incloses note from the Foreign Office in regard to the Minister's inquiries relating to Spitzbergen.	1305
231	Same to same...............	Apr. 13	Same subject. The Russian Government has not replied to the Japanese protest, and will probably make no concessions.	1306
257	Mr. Wilson to Mr. Knox....	May 15	Same subject. The Japanese Embassy informs him that no changes have occurred in the situation.	1307
313	Same to same...............	July 19	Same subject. Incloses copy of a note from the Foreign Office in reply to Japan's protest dated in Mar. 1911.	1307
367	Same to same...............	Sept. 10	Same subject. Notes are still being exchanged between Japan and Russia.	1308

SALVADOR.

116	Mr. Knox to Mr. Hitt.......	1911. Dec. 12	Political disturbances. Allegations having from time to time since September last reached the Department tending to show that the Presidents of Guatemala and Honduras are actively supporting a movement to subvert the Government of Salvador, and also to misrepresent in that connection the attitude of the Government of the United States and to prevent the proper observance of the Washington conventions and of the neutrality statutes of the United States, the Department contemplates giving publicity to the information on this subject at its disposal if the hostile movement against Salvador does not cease.	1310
197	Mr. Hitt to Mr. Knox.......	1912. Jan. 2	Same subject. Acknowledges Department's No. 116 of Dec. 12, 1911; incloses aide mémoire handed the President of Guatemala in pursuance thereof, and memorandum from the President of Guatemala in reply thereto.	1311
	Mr. Heimke to Mr. Knox....	Jan. 7	Same subject. Acknowledges receipt of a copy of the Department's No. 116 of Dec. 12, 1911, to the Minister to Guatemala. Reports upon the situation in question; incloses a memorandum from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of a conversation with President Araujo.	1316
	Same to same (telegram)....	Jan. 10	Same subject. The President of Salvador requests that the Department be informed of a probable invasion of Salvador from Guatemala.	1318
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Heimke (telegram).	Jan. 11	Same subject. Instructs him to repeat to Guatemala his telegram of Jan. 10.	1319
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Hitt (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. On receipt of Mr. Heimke's telegram of Jan. 10, he will immediately take up the matter with the President of Guatemala, impressing him with the necessity for stopping hostile movement against Salvador and disregard of the Washington conventions.	1319
	Mr. Heimke to Mr. Knox....	Jan. 11	Same subject. Refers to his dispatch of Jan. 7, and telegram of Jan. 10; transmits correspondence handed him by President Araujo showing that along the frontier Guatemala is maintaining military activities directed against Salvador in cooperation with Bonilla in Honduras and the disaffected Salvadorans Barahona and Alfaro.	1319

SALVADOR—Continued.

No.	From and to whom.	Date.	Subject.	Page.
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Hitt (telegram).	1912. Jan. 12	Same subject. Instructs him to say to the President of Guatemala that the Minister of Salvador states that Barahona and Alfaro are fomenting a revolution on Guatemalan soil against Salvador.	1321
	Mr. Knox to Mr. White (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. Instructions similar to the foregoing.	1322
206	Mr. Hitt to Mr. Knox.......	Jan. 16	Same subject. Refers to Department's telegram of Jan. 11, and Mr. Heimke's Jan. 10; reports an interview with the Minister for Foreign Affairs in pursuance thereof. It seems probable that the complaints of Salvador have caused a withdrawal of troops in excess of normal numbers from the frontier.	1322
	Mr. Knox to Mr. Hitt (telegram).	...do.....	Same subject. The Department learns that Guatemalan troops are leaving the frontier in large numbers and that Salvador believes it unnecessary to inspect the frontier as suggested by the President of Guatemala.	1324
75	Mr. White to Mr. Knox.....	Jan. 17	Same subject. Acknowledges Department's Jan. 12, and incloses note to the Honduran Minister for Foreign Affairs in pursuance thereof and reply thereto.	1324
	Same to same (telegram)....	Jan. 18	Same subject. Transmits telegram from the Honduran Chargé d' Affaires in Salvador to the Honduran Government concerning information regarding alleged movement led by Jacinto Velásquez with the object of invading Honduras from Salvador.	1325
	Mr. Heimke to Mr. Knox...	Jan. 19	Same subject. Refers to Department's telegram of Jan. 16 and incloses copies of telegrams showing retirement of Guatemalan troops from the frontier. The President of Salvador says that conditions are now quiet and no further trouble is apprehended for the present.	1326
208	Mr. Hitt to Mr. Knox.......	Jan. 23	Same subject. Refers to Department's telegram of Jan. 16. He has decided not to cause an investigation of the frontier.	1327

CORRESPONDENCE.

CIRCULARS.

TERRITORIAL INTEGRITY OF AMERICAN STATES.

File No. 710.11/69a.

Department of State,
Washington, May 7, 1912.

To the diplomatic officers of the United States in Latin-America.

Gentlemen: Mr. S. Perez Triana, the Colombian Minister in London, has recently addressed to the President a letter accompanied by a long memorandum. He states that he has sent copies of the memorandum to all the Presidents of America. Mr. Triana styles the memorandum in question a statement of "the reasons that militate in favor of a Pan-American union for a certain specific purpose, which is that the era of conquest which President Monroe declared as closed in 1823 to European Powers, should be declared as closed to American nations amongst themselves, that is, in other words, to declare that conquest per se is objectionable, irrespective of the conqueror."

The memorandum occupies several pages and it seems unnecessary to send you a copy thereof. The essence of it is that the United States—and incidentally the other American countries—should solemnly declare that conquest is forever proscribed from the continent of America, and should pledge itself not to practice nor to tolerate the conquest of territory.

If in the country to which you are accredited Mr. Triana's plan should be discussed in such a way as to come to your notice you should belittle the idea and simply call attention to the following extract from the speech delivered by the Secretary of State before the National Assembly of Nicaragua at Managua on March 6, 1912:—

> I note, Mr. President, what you have said in regard to the existence of some apprehension here and in other republics of Latin-America as to the true motives and purposes of the United States towards them under the Monroe Doctrine. I beg to assure you, and I am sure that what I say meets the approval of the people and President of the United States, that my Government does not covet an inch of territory south of the Rio Grande. The full measure and extent of our policy is to assist in the maintenance of republican institutions upon this hemisphere and we are anxious that the experiment of a government of the people, for the people and by the people shall not fail in any republic on this continent. We have a well known policy as to causes that might threaten the existence of an American republic from beyond the sea. We are equally desirous that there shall be no failure to maintain a republican form of government from forces of disintegration originating from within; and so far as we may be able we will always be found willing to lend such proper assistance as may be within our power to preserve the stability of our sister American republics.

You are no doubt familiar with the substance of the Secretary's speech at Panama which is so illustrative of the friendly and straightforward policy of this Government toward the other countries of this hemisphere, and which might be referred to with excellent effect in relation to the above.

I am [etc.]

HUNTINGTON WILSON,
Acting Secretary of State.

INTERCHANGE OF PROFESSORS AND STUDENTS AMONG THE UNIVERSITIES OF AMERICAN STATES.

File No. 810.42711/48.

The Secretary of State to the American Chargé d'Affaires at Buenos Aires.[1]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 3, 1912.

SIR: Among the resolutions adopted by the Fourth International Conference of American States, held at Buenos Aires from July 12 to August 30, 1910, is one dated August 18, 1910, recommending an interchange of professors and students between the universities of the American republics.[2]

The trustees of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace held a meeting in this city on December 14, 1911, for the purpose of establishing an exchange of representative scholars or scientists between Latin-American countries and the United States. It is proposed by the trustees to bring two scholars or scientists from two prominent Latin-American universities to the United States in each academic year, and to send in return two representative American scholars or scientists to Latin-America. For the year 1912-13 the sum of $20,000 has been appropriated by the trustees to provide an honorarium of $5,000 for each of the four scholars or scientists who may be selected and appointed.

Inclosed herewith is an extract from a recent report made to the executive committee of the trustees by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, Acting Director of Intercourse and Education, Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, in which he outlines the plan for the exchange. Dr. Butler informs the Department that that part of the project relating to the exchange of students has been postponed for future consideration by the executive committee of the trustees.

You will communicate the foregoing to the Argentine Government, for its information and for communication by it to the appropriate educational authorities in that country. You will also send to the Department as occasion may give rise, for communication to Dr. Butler, any suggestions and information pertinent to the matter.

VIII—EDUCATIONAL EXCHANGE WITH LATIN-AMERICA.

At the meeting of the executive committee, held June 13, 1911, the Division of Intercourse and Education was given authority to arrange "for the exchange of professors and students between the Latin-American countries and the United States in accordance with a plan the details of which are to be prepared and submitted to the executive committee at their next meeting."

The several Pan-American conferences and scientific congresses have made it clear that there is a large opportunity to bring the Latin-American peoples more closely in touch and sympathy with the people of the United States by taking steps to bring the intellectual classes more closely in contact. Our relations with Latin-America have heretofore been almost wholly either those of formal diplomatic intercourse, or those which are the outgrowth of commercial activity. The intellectual classes of the two continents have remained entirely without contact the one with the other. At the fourth Pan-American Conference held at Buenos Aires in 1910 a resolution suggesting and approving the formal interchange of students between the American universities was unanimously adopted.

Acting under the authority given by the executive committee on June 13 last, the Acting Director under date of June 16 submitted the outline of a plan for the exchange of professors and students between the Latin-American universities and those of the United States to the diplomatic representatives at Washington of Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Mexico and Peru. The plan then proposed has received the unanimous approval of these high officers of state, and in some cases it has already received the approval of their home Governments as well.

The following is the plan which is proposed as an important step toward promoting the peace of the world and bringing the Latin-American peoples and the people of the United States into better mutual understanding:

1. Arrange at the expense of the Carnegie Endowment to bring two representative Latin-American scholars or scientists to the United States in each academic year, and to send in return two representative American scholars or scientists to Latin-America.

Each representative so sent will be asked to divide his time between two educational institutions of the continent to which he goes, spending approximately one-half of the usual academic year at each. Each representative is to be sent not so much for the purpose of giving instruction in his own particular field of knowledge as for that of interpreting informally, and as occasion may offer, the civilization and the culture of his own people, and to gain more and more accurate knowledge of the civilization and culture of the people among whom he is a visitor.

The specific suggestion in this connetion is that for the year 1912–13 two of these institutions be selected, and each requested through the diplomatic representative of its government at Washington to name a representative scholar to spend the academic year in the United States. It is suggested that one such scholar might divide the academic year between the University of Texas and the University of Chicago and that the second might divide his year between the University of Nebraska and the University of Georgia.

In return it is suggested that the Division of Intercourse and Education shall select two representative American scholars and arrange that they shall spend the year 1912–13 in Latin-America, each American visiting two Latin-American institutions, as already stated.

The sum of $5,000 should be appropriated as a reasonable honorarium to each of the four scholars chosen, in view of the length, character and cost of the journey that they would be required to make.

2. It appears to be even more important that the younger generation in Latin-America and in the United States shall be brought into contact with the civilization of the other continent. For this purpose it is proposed to establish ten Pan-American fellowships of an annual value of $1,200 each.

Five of these will be offered to competition in Latin-America and five in the United States. These Pan-American fellowships are to be awarded after such an examination of the credentials of candidates as is usual at universities of the first rank, by the Division of Intercourse and Education—the Latin-American Fellows being named on the recommendation of their respective Governments—and the holders are to spend the following academic year in pursuing advanced or professional studies at one or more of the higher institutions of learning on the other continent.

It is proposed that only those shall be eligible for these fellowships who have completed their college education in the United States, or who have reached a similar stage of advancement in Latin-American institutions; and that when appointed these Fellows shall be free to study law, medicine, engineering, teaching, agriculture or go forward with higher studies in the arts and sciences at any institution which may be approved for the purpose on the other continent.

The Fellows who would go to South America would probably wish to study chiefly the language, history and economic problems of Latin-America. The Fellows who would come to the United States would probably wish to pursue chiefly professional studies. In both cases the effect would be happy as there would each year be sent back to their own continent a small company of select men who knew something from first-hand contact of the civilization and culture of the other.

INVITATION TO THE PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION, TO BE HELD AT SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, IN 1915.

File No. 811.607 G/41b.

Department of State,
Washington, February 5, 1912.

To the diplomatic officers of the United States.

Gentlemen: I herewith transmit a copy of a proclamation issued by the President on February 2, 1912, inviting, on behalf of the Government and people of the United States, the nations of the earth to participate in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in nineteen hundred and fifteen, at San Francisco, California, to celebrate the completion of the Panama Canal.

It is the desire of the President, speaking for the people of the United States, that all the nations of the earth may take part in the exposition by appointing representatives thereto and by sending such exhibits as will most fitly and fully illustrate their resources, their industries, and their progress in civilization.

In communicating this invitation to the Government to which you are accredited, you will express the pleasure which the President would feel should that Government decide to accept it by appointing commissioners and by further participating in the exposition through such a display of its arts and sciences and natural and commercial resources as is contemplated, and you will add that authority will be invested either in a national commission to be appointed pursuant to an act of Congress, or by a commsision to be appointed by the Secretary of State, as may hereafter be decided, to settle and determine any and all disputes arising between nations, or between or with foreign exhibitors regarding space, location or other matters connected therewith, and to require such provision to be made by the directors of the exposition as the commission shall deem reasonable for the entertainment, care and comfort of the representatives of foreign nations who shall visit the exposition in acceptance of this invitation.

It is not doubted that you will interest yourself in every proper way to promote the enterprise.

At an early date further information relating to the exposition will be communicated to you for transmission to the Foreign Office.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, in conformity with the conditions and requirements of the Joint Resolution of Congress approved February 15, 1911, "Authorizing the President to invite foreign countries to participate in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in nineteen hundred and fifteen, at San Francisco, California," satisfactory proof has been presented to me that a suitable site has been selected for the said Exposition and that the sum of not less than fifteen million dollars will be available to enable the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Company, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California, for the purpose of inaugurating, carrying forward, and holding an exposition at the City of San Francisco, California, in the year nineteen hundred and fifteen, to celebrate the completion and opening of the Panama Canal;

Now, THEREFORE, I, WILLIAM HOWARD TAFT, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the authority vested in me by said Joint Resolution, do hereby declare and proclaim that such International Exposition will be opened in the year nineteen hundred and fifteen, in the City of San Francisco, in the State of California. And, in the name of the Government and of the people of the United States of America, I do hereby invite all the nations of the earth to take part in the commemoration of an event of great interest and importance to the world by appointing representatives to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition and sending thereto such exhibits as will most fitly and fully illustrate their resources, their industries, and their progress in civilization.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 29th ultimo inclosing a description of one Oscar Pio Romero, who is charged with obtaining large sums of money by false devices and who escaped on November 21 last from the police authorities of Buenos Aires, and requesting to be informed whether the man is on American territory.

In reply I have the honor to advise you that such inquiry as is practicable will be made to ascertain whether the accused is in this country. It should be said, however, that this Department is not, under the system of jurisprudence in the United States, able to afford effective assistance in the matter of apprehending fugitives from justice of foreign countries, and the search for and location in this country of offenders against the laws of other countries is generally accomplished by the agency of private detectives, with such aid as the local police can from time to time give in the ordinary course of their duties.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas a copyright convention between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Hungary was concluded and signed by their respective Plenipotentiaries at Budapest, on the thirtieth day of January one thousand nine hundred and twelve, the original of which convention, being in the English and Hungarian languages is word for word as follows:

The President of the United States of America, and His Majesty the Emperor of Austria, King of Bohemia etc. and Apostolic King of Hungary,

Desiring to provide between the United States of America and Hungary for a reciprocal legal protection in regard to copyright of the citizens and subjects of the two countries, have, to this end, decided to conclude a convention, and have appointed as their Plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America: Richard C. Kerens, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to His Imperial and Royal Apostolic Majesty; and His Majesty the Emperor of Austria, King of Bohemia etc. and Apostolic King of Hungary: Count Paul Esterházy, baron of Galántha, viscount of Franknó, Privy Councillor and Chamberlain, Chief of section in the Ministry of the Imperial and Royal House and of Foreign Affairs, and Dr. Gustavus de Töry, Secretary of State in the Royal Hungarian Ministry of Justice;

Who, having communicated to each other their full powers, found to be in good and due form, have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE 1.

Authors who are citizens or subjects of one of the two countries or their assigns shall enjoy in the other country, for their literary, artistic, dramatic, musical and photographic works (whether unpublished or published in one of the two countries) the same rights which the respective laws do now or may hereafter grant to natives.

The above provision includes the copyright control of mechanical musical reproductions.

ARTICLE 2.

The enjoyment and the exercise of the rights secured by the present Convention are subject to the performance of the conditions and formalities prescribed by the laws and regulations of the country where protection is claimed under the present Convention; such enjoyment and such exercise are independent of the existence of protection in the country of origin of the work.

ARTICLE 3.

The term of copyright protection granted by the present Convention shall be regulated by the law of the country where protection is claimed.

ARTICLE 4.

The present Convention shall be ratified and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington as soon as possible.

ARTICLE 5.

The present Convention shall be put in force one month after the exchange of ratifications, and shall remain in force until the termination of a year from the day on which it may have been denounced.

In faith whereof the Plenipotentiaries have signed the present convention in two copies, each in the English and Hungarian languages, and have affixed thereto their seals.

REMOVAL OF DISCRIMINATION AGAINST AMERICAN LUBRICATING OILS.

The Secretary of State to the American Minister.

No. 10.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 24, 1912.

SIR: The Department acknowledges receipt of your despatch No. 12 dated January 5, 1912,[1] on the subject of the discrimination against American crude oils appearing in published specifications of the Belgian State Railway Administration. It is noted that the crude and lubricating oils specified for the use of the Belgian State Railways are required to be of Russian origin in the latest issue of the "Cahier des Charges Spécial No. 688" and that bids under this specification were called for on December 20th last. The discrimination therein against the American product consists in the exclusion of all oils other than those of Russian origin. This matter is properly one for your early consideration, since for more than three years it has been the subject of correspondence between the Department and the Legation and between the latter and the Government of Belgium.

When in January 1910 the Department entered into negotiations with the Government of Belgium to determine whether the minimum tariff of the United States should be granted to products imported from Belgium or originating in that country the Belgian Legation at Washington was informed of the willingness of the President to proclaim in behalf of Belgium the extension of the minimum tariff to imports of Belgian origin into the United States, upon the assumption that the Belgian Government would give its prompt and earnest consideration to the several matters of concern which had been brought to the attention of the Department. One of these matters as set forth in the note of January 29, 1910, to the Belgian Minister at Washington, Count Conrad de Buisseret, was the recognition of American petroleum lubricating products on an equality with those of other countries in the specifications of requirements for railroad supplies. The Department was assured, by note dated February 1, 1910, from the Belgian Minister that he had not failed to transmit the contents of the Department's note of January 29 to his Government, recommending at the same time a prompt and earnest consideration to the matters which had been brought to his Government's attention through the American Legation at Brussels and through himself.

Notwithstanding the pledge of the Belgian Minister that the alleged discrimination against American crude and lubricating oils would have consideration in view of the granting of the minimum tariff of the United States, no such consideration appears to have been given in the preparation of the specifications published in the latter part of 1910 relating to the requirements of the Belgian State Railways. Upon notification of this apparent oversight the American Minister at Brussels again brought the subject to the attention of the Belgian Minister for Foreign Affairs. This could not be done until too late to obtain the recognition to which, as a matter of good faith, under all the circumstances of the case, the Department felt American oil was entitled.

[1] Not printed.

It is noted that the correspondence enclosed in your dispatch No. 12 of January 5 shows that the Continental Petroleum Company, acting in behalf of the Texas Oil Company, anticipating the annual advertisement of the Belgian State Railways Administration, had especially prepared itself during 1911 to meet all the requirements as to the points relating to the quality of its oils, and had kept the legation informed of the results of analyses and experiments conducted for the purpose of demonstrating that the American product, if fairly considered, would meet all the conditions as well as Russian oil. It also appears that the Continental Petroleum Company received no official advice of the adjudication of crude mineral lubricating oils for the Belgian State Railways then about to be made until December 13, 1911, and that the limit for the receipt of bids was fixed in the advertisement as December 20, 1911. Notwithstanding this short notice the Continental Petroleum Company proceeded to tender its oils under date of December 16, 1911, a copy of which tender was forwarded to the Legation on the same day.

You state that you made an appointment with the Minister for Foreign Affairs, when the subject was discussed at length, but you have omitted giving the date of the interview, which presumably was held previously to December 20, 1911, the date of expiration of the time limit for receiving bids. The Department will be interested to learn the result of the personal visit which the Minister for Foreign Affairs agreed to make to his colleague of the Administration of Railways for the purpose of discussing the matter, as referred to in the final paragraph of your despatch.

The course of the Belgian authorities in their treatment of this case has not demonstrated a willingness to reach a conclusion in accordance with the understanding heretofore referred to. The Department now desires that the subject be pressed, and that a settlement be reached if possible for the admission of the American product to competition on terms of equality. If such recognition in the future is to be denied, the Department desires to be definitely informed.

AMERICAN LEGATION,

No. 29.]

SIR: I have the honor to refer to the Department's instructions No. 10 of January 24 last and No. 12 of February 16, and to state that on investigation the "black oil" referred to in the latter dispatch proves to be the same oil as has been the subject of previous correspondence and discussion. With reference to the inquiry contained in the dispatch of the 24th of January, I beg to say that my interview mentioned, with the Minister of Foreign Affairs, took place on January 4, as I did not receive the visit of the officials of the Continental Petroleum Company till after the 20th of December.

On the 26th of February, on the return of the Minister of Foreign Affairs from an absence, I sought an interview again to present to his excellency another note, a copy of which is inclosed, and again personally to press the matter of the discrimination against American oils. I referred to my previous visit and to the subject as it was then discussed, and said that I brought on this occasion new matter to his attention, stating that my Government was very anxious to have a definite reply and repeating the contents of the note which I had brought. Monsieur Davignon said that he had interested himself in the matter; that he recognized the subject as one with an international aspect; but that a difficulty lay with the technical experts, who were prejudiced in their opinions. I told him that the Department was anxious for a definite decision as to the attitude of the King's Government, and his excellency replied that he hoped soon to send me an answer.

To-day I have visited the Baron de Broqueville, the Prime Minister, who is also the Minister of Railways, Posts and Telegraphs, and I asked his particular attention to this subject, with which he seemed to be familiar. I went over a few of the main points but particularly assured him, with more pressure than I have felt able to write into my notes on the subject, of the serious interest which my Government took in the matter and of my desire for an early and definite reply which I might forward for the information of the Department. Baron de Broqueville said that of course the desire of the King's Government was to buy the best oil in the best markets and added that he also hoped soon to give a definite answer.

Mr. Grant-Smith also, this morning, called on Baron Capelle at the Ministry for Foreign Affairs, whose attention was drawn to the fact that the simple omission of the word "Russian" would not be satisfactory should the other narrow specifications, and particularly that of specific gravity, remain as at present. Baron Capelle expressed his interest in the matter and assured him that the Belgian Government was earnestly seeking a solution of the question which would be mutually satisfactory.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
No. 28.] Brussels, February 23, 1912.

MR. MINISTER: I have the honor to refer to previous correspondence during the past five years on the matter of the discrimination which appears in the specifications issued by the Belgian State Railway Administration, in calling for bids for crude lubricating oils. This discrimination consists in the exclusion from competition of all oils other than those of Russian origin.

When in January of 1910 the Department of State of the United States entered into negotiations with the Government of Belgium, to determine whether the minimum tariff of the United States should be granted to products imported from Belgium, or originating in this country, the Belgian Legation in Washington was informed of the willingness of the President to proclaim, on behalf of Belgium, the extension of the minimum tariff to imports of Belgian origin into the United States, upon the assumption that the Belgian Government would give its prompt and earnest consideration to the several matters of concern which had been brought to the attention of the Department of State. One of these matters, as set forth in a note of January 29, 1910, to the Belgian Minister at Washington, Count Conrad de Buisseret, was the recognition of American petroleum lubricating products on an equality with those of other countries in the specifications of requirements for railroad supplies. The Department of State was assured by a note dated February 1, 1910, from the then Belgian Minister, that he had not failed to transmit the contents of the Department's note of January 29 to his Government, at the same time recommending prompt and earnest consideration of the matters which had been brought to his Government's attention, both through the American Legation at Brussels and through himself.

Notwithstanding the assurances of the Belgian Minister that the alleged discrimination against crude and lubricating oils would have consideration in view of the granting of the minimum tariff of the United States, no such consideration appears to have been given in the preparation of the specifications published in the latter part of 1910, relating to the requirements of the Belgian State Railways. Upon notification of this oversight the American Legation at Brussels brought the subject again to your excellency's attention, seeking the consideration to which as a matter of good faith, under all the circumstances of the case, the Department felt American oil was entitled.

The same discriminations continued to appear in the specifications in question during the year 1911. As a special instance it may be added that the Continental Petroleum Company, acting on behalf of the Texas Oil Company, anticipated the annual advertisement of the Belgian State Railway Administration and prepared itself especially to meet the requirements as to points relating to the quality of these oils, and has expressed its belief that, if fairly considered, its oils would meet all the conditions as well as the Russian. It also appears that the Continental Petroleum Company received no official advice of the adjudication of crude lubricating oils from the Belgian State Railway Administration until December 13, 1911, and that the limit for the receipt of bids was fixed in the demands as December 20, 1911. Notwithstanding this short notice the Continental Petroleum Company proceeded to tender its oils under date of December 16.

I beg to refer to the occasion of my personal visit to your excellency on January 4 last when the subject of this matter of the discrimination against American oils was discussed at length. Your excellency was then so good as to say that you would confer personally with your colleague of the Railway Administration in this matter. I have the honor accordingly to ask your excellency to examine this further exposition of the subject, especially with regard to the consideration which was given on the occasion of the application of the minimum tariff to Belgium, as may be found in the correspondence referred to in this note, and I beg to add that my instructions are to express the earnest desire of my Government to obtain for American oils in this instance a just and fair consideration, and I would be gratified if your excellency would be so good as to advise me with regard to any definite conclusions on the subject to which the Government of the King may have come, in order that I may transmit the same to the Department of State for the information of my Government.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Brussels, April 1, 1912.

No. 36.]

SIR: I have the honor to refer to my despatch of March 8 last No. 29, and to inclose further correspondence on the subject of the discrimination against American oils which appears in the specifications for lubricating oils on the Belgian State Railways.

In a note from the Foreign Minister, of March 19, it is stated that notwithstanding the previous lack of success of American oils in experiments a new series of tests were undertaken on the basis of offering all guarantees of impartiality. It was deduced from these trials that Russian oils gave better results than American oils, as well as proving cheaper, but that nevertheless the Minister of Railways felt that these experiments for certain reasons might not have been made under entirely normal conditions, and so his excellency has ordered new competitive trials to be undertaken as soon as possible in order to come to a decisive opinion on this subject. In a correspondence with the Continental Petroleum Company which followed, and copies of which are inclosed,[1] it was pointed out that an error in calculation might have suggested this conclusion of the cheaper character of the Russian oils, while really the figures as given in the Foreign Office note showed that the American oils were cheaper, certainly in this instance. Also subsequent study and discussion of the matter brought to light the fact that the mixture of tallow with the oils, as described in the Foreign Office note, would suggest that the test, mentioned as disadvantageous to the American oils, was in the lubrication of engine-cylinders only, as such a mixture is made use of as a rule for engine cylinders only while the more general lubrication of rolling stock requires a mixture of crude oil and rapeseed oil.

Accordingly in a note to the Minister for Foreign Affairs of today's date, of which a copy is inclosed, this possible error in calculation as to the comparative cost of American and Russian oils was pointed out and inquiry was made as to the character of the experiments mentioned as disadvantageous to American oils, for if these experiments were only applied in the lubrication of the engine-cylinders and not to the general use of railway needs, they would be certainly insufficient and unsatisfactory in extent. It was also pointed out that in the great production of oil in America all sorts were to be found, and that the lack of quality in one, or in several, should not be a bar to the trial of others, and that the Department desired only an opportunity for fair tests of American oils, to be used only if found satisfactory, which would result in mutual advantage to the Belgian Government and to American competing concerns. I expressed gratification at the decision of the Baron de Broqueville, Minister of Railways, to give another test and stated I should notify the Department of this decision, in which a hope might be found for a final and favorable conclusion of this long standing question and a settlement to mutual advantage.

Mr. Minister: I did not fail to advise the Minister of Railways, Posts and Telegraphs of the contents of the communication which the Legation addressed me on October 19 last[1] and of those succeeding, regarding the use of American oils for lubricating the rolling stock of the Belgian State Railways.

Mr. de Broqueville advises me that the Administration of Railways, notwithstanding the lack of success of the previous experiments, undertook a new series of tests on a basis offering all possible guaranties of impartiality. * * * To sum up, it appears that it can be deduced from the trials made that the Russian oil gives better results than American oil, as well as being cheaper, on account of the smaller proportion of tallow used in the mixture. Nevertheless Mr. de Broqueville considers that these experiments were not made under sufficiently normal conditions as regards the quantities of tallow added to the oils tested, which considerable exceeded for both kinds of oil the proportions prescribed by instructions and sanctioned by practice.

Therefore my colleague has ordered that new comparative trials be undertaken as soon as possible, with the precautions mentioned above, in order to permit the forming of a well founded and decisive opinion on this question. * * *

Mr. Minister: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your excellency's note of the 19th of March, in reply to this Legation's note of October 19 and subsequent correspondence, on the subject [etc.].

Your excellency refers to comparative trials that have proved in the past disadvantageous to American oils and is so good as to give certain figures with regard to a late test from which a deduction is made that the Russian oils give not only better results but proved cheaper than the American oils which were used in the experiments in question. While these figures may possibly suggest this conclusion, yet I beg your excellency to be so good as to consider the following calculations which show, on the contrary, that notwithstanding the excess in the percentage of tallow the eventual cost of the American oils would be about ten per cent less than the cost of the Russian oils. * * *

My Government seeks only a fair and just opportunity for the trial of American oils, now so categorically denied in the specifications, and for their use only if found satisfactory. This would be of advantage certainly to the Belgian Railway Administration as well as to any competing American oil concerns.

I am gratified that the Minister of Railways, because of his conviction that the experiments just terminated departed somewhat from normal conditions of service, will institute a fresh set of tests, and I shall at once inform the Department of State of this intention. I beg further to ask your excellency, and your colleague of the Railways, to be so good as to consider that the removal of the restriction contained in the specifications for so many years past really need not depend at all on the success or failure of American oils, either in any one or in any series of tests, but the right for American oils to be fairly tested, and used only if found of advantage, is desired.

The Department of State considers that the correspondence already referred to in previous notes on the subject, which took place between the Department of State and the Belgian Legation at Washington at the time when the President determined to apply the minimum tariff to Belgium, gave assurances that this matter would be earnestly considered, and will no doubt see, in the delay due to the further tests to be undertaken by direction of Baron de Broqueville, a hope that a final and favorable decision may soon be reached concerning the removal of this discrimination, which so completely prohibits even the trial of American oils, and that this long-standing question may be settled happily and to mutual advantage.

SIR: Referring to the correspondence which has taken place during the past five years on the subject of the discrimination against American oils which has appeared in the specifications of the Belgian State Railways, I am happy to advise the Department that at last steps toward a more satisfactory condition have been taken by the Belgian Government. While I have received no direct communication from the Foreign Office as yet, I have the honor to inclose a copy of the Cahier des Charges Special No. 721[1] containing the latest specifications for oils to be used by the service of traction and material of the Belgian State Railways, with appropriate passages marked, which show that the restriction against American oils has been removed.

This note refers to the change to be found in the Cahier des Charges which was inclosed in my dispatch referred to above and which had appeared sometime previously.

In my reply to the Baron de Broqueville I expressed gratification at the removal of the discrimination in this instance, but added that the changes in the specifications had been published so short a time before the adjudication that it had seemed quite impossible for any American firms to compete on that occasion, and I added the hope that the admission of American oils would be continued in the future in order that fair trials might be made with advantage to both countries.

SIR:—I have the honor to refer to my despatch No. 44 of April 26 last, and to previous correspondence on the subject of discrimination against American oils which appeared in the specifications of the Belgian State Railway Administration, and to say that the Legation, noting that a similar discrimination had at the same time appeared in the Cahier des Charges of the Administration of Marine (which is a Bureau of the Ministry of Railways, Posts and Telegraphs in this country, which has no navy) continued to press the matter of free admission of American oils into Belgian State competitions.

I am happy now to report that the Minister of Foreign Affairs advises me that in the future the specfications relative to the adjudication of oils for the Administration of Marine will not contain conditions excluding American oils.

MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT, MARSHAL HERMES R. DA FONSECA, TO THE CONGRESS.

File No. 832.032/4.

(Translation of extracts containing all references to the Government of the United States.)

A few days ago we expressed to the Governments of the United States of America and Great Britain the profound regret which we felt at the terrible disaster to the Titanic, while later we also forwarded the vote of condolence passed by the Chamber of Deputies at its preparatory sittings. * * * On July 26, 1911, the convention with the United States of America, signed at Washington on January 23, 1909, was mutually ratified and [was] promulgated by Decree No. 8890 of August 9, 1911. * * * The conventions for a mutual parcels post service which we concluded * * * with the United States of America on March 26, 1910, * * * were still waiting, as I had the honor to inform you in my last message, the mutual ratification of the signatory powers. So far as we are concerned these international agreements have already been approved. * * * We are now drawing up the necessary regulations for these agreements (which had not yet been done) in order that they may be put into execution without delay. * * * The Ninth International Red Cross Conference is to meet in Washington on the 7th instant, and Brazil has been invited to be represented. The Brazilian Ambassador at Washington has been appointed to represent us at this conference, which will be honored with the presence of the President of the United States.

AMERICAN INTERNATIONAL LAW. THE REPORT OF THE UNITED STATES DELEGATES TO THE INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION OF JURISTS AT RIO DE JANEIRO.

File No. 710 C2/103.

The United States Delegates to the Secretary of State.

WASHINGTON, December 31, 1912.

SIR: The undersigned have the honor to submit the following report of the proceeding of the International Commission of Jurists which met at Rio de Janeiro during the past summer:

By a convention concluded by the Third International American Conference, at Rio de Janeiro, August 23, 1906, the American nations agreed to establish an International Commission of Jurists, consisting of one delegate from each country, to codify international law, public and private. (Exhibit 1.[1])

The commission, for which provision was thus made, was by the terms of the convention to hold its first meeting at Rio de Janeiro "during the year 1907," but this stipulation was afterwards tacitly waived, most of the Governments, including that of the United States, having ratified the convention after the expiration of that year. The governing board of the Pan American Union therefore concluded, at Washington, on January 15, 1912, a supplementary agreement, by which it was stipulated that the commission should meet at Rio de Janeiro on June 26, 1912. It was also provided that each Government might be represented "by two delegates instead of one, but with a single vote." (Exhibit 2.[2])

In conformity with this agreement, the International Commission of Jurists met at Rio de Janeiro on the 26th of June last, assembling in the Monroe Palace, a handsome edifice, named for President Monroe, in which were held the sessions of the Third International American Conference.

By the convention of 1906 it was provided that the presence of representatives of 12 of the signatory States should be necessary for the organization of the commission. At the preliminary session, which was held on the afternoon of the 26th of June, the delegate of Mexico presiding, delegates of 14 States appeared, as follows:

America (United States of): John Bassett Moore, delegate; Frederick Van Dyne, technical delegate.

Argentina: Dr. Norberto Quirno Costa, Dr. Carlos Rodriguez Larreta, jr.

Brazil: Dr. Epitacio Pessôa, Dr. Candido Luiz Maria de Oliveira.

Chile: Dr. Miguel Cruchaga, Dr. Alejandro Alvarez.

Colombia: Dr. José Maria Uricoechea, Dr. Roberto Ancizar.

Costa Rica: Dr. Alejandro Alvarez.

Ecuador: Dr. Alejandro Alvarez, Dr. Matias Alonso Criado.

Guatemala: Dr. Antonio Batres Jáuregui, Dr. José Matos.

Mexico: Dr. Victor Manuel Castillo.

Panama: Gen. Dr. Don Santiago de la Guardia.

Paraguay: Dr. Cecilio Baez.

Peru: Dr. Hernán Velarde. An additional delegate, Dr. Alberto Elmore, subsequently appeared.

Salvador: Dr. Alonso Reyes Guerra.

Uruguay: Dr. Juan Zorrilla de San Martin, Dr. José Pedro Varela.

Other countries were subsequently represented, as follows:

Bolivia: Dr. Victor Sanjinés.

Cuba: Dr. Aniceto Valdivia.

Venezuela: Dr. Pedro Manuel Arcaya.

Seventeen States were thus finally represented in the congress; but a delegate from yet another State, Dr. Américo Lugo, from Santo Domingo, was on his way to Rio de Janeiro when the congress adjourned.

The congress was formally opened on the evening of the 26th of June. Mr. Lauro Müller, Minister of Foreign Relations of Brazil, presided and made an address of welcome (Exhibit 3,[2]) to which a response was made by the delegate of the United States. (Exhibit 4.[1])

[2] Not printed.

Dr. Epitacio Pessôa, first delegate of Brazil, was elected permanent president. A translation of his address on taking the chair is hereto annexed. (Exhibit 5.[1])

The first ordinary session of the commission was held on the 28th of June. At this session a motion was presented by the Chilean and Argentine delegations, with reference to the work which the commission should undertake and the methods by which it should be carried on. (Exhibit 6.[1]) Divested of argumentative matter, the motion raised various questions, namely, whether codification should be effected by means of identical national laws or by means of international conventions; whether it should be at the first moment complete, or should be gradual and progressive; in what form amendments should be made, or defects supplied; whether new rules should continue to be elaborated, so as to keep the code, or the agreed points, in harmony with the progress of nations. For the consideration of these and other preliminary points, including that of the codification of rules which specially or more directly interest the nations of America, the motion proposed that a committee should be appointed, consisting of five members, to collect the views of the various delegations and to submit a report. This motion, which was seconded by Mr. Moore, of the delegation of the United States, having been adopted, the president of the commission appointed the following committee: John Bassett Moore, Norberto Quirno Costa, Alejandro Alvarez, Hernán Velarde, and Candido Luiz Maria de Oliveira, being delegates, respectively, of the United States, Argentina, Chile, Peru, and Brazil. The committee, on motion of the delegate from Argentina, designated the delegate from the United States as chairman.

The committee thus constituted became in reality a committee on permanent regulations, and in this capacity dealt with what proved to be the crucial question before the congress. This was the result of certain circumstances which will be briefly narrated.

The committee, as has been seen, was charged with the duty of collecting the views of the various delegations on the work before the congress. At the preliminary session of the delegates, on the afternoon of the 26th of June, a complete printed draft of regulations, in Portuguese, for the government of the commission and its work, was presented by the Brazilian delegation. (Exhibit 7.[1]) This draft the delegates were not asked to adopt finally; but in order that they might proceed to organize, it was, on motion of Mr. Moore, adopted provisionally, the question of its permanent approval being thus deferred. A subsequent examination of its contents disclosed the fact that its framers apparently intended to propose that the commission should proceed at once to the adoption of codes; and the proposed regulations were in this sense laid before the committee, as embodying the views of the Brazilian delegation, to the end that the committee might report them to the commission for adoption as permanent regulations. This proposal, which, in view not only of the magnitude and difficulties of the task before the commission, but also of the provisions of the convention of 1906, would otherwise have been incomprehensible, was explained by the circumstance that two eminent Brazilian jurists, Dr. Epitacio Pessôa, of the supreme court of the Republic, and Dr. Lafayette Rodriguez Pereira, a former minister of justice, had respectively prepared drafts of codes of public international law and private international law, for the use of the commission.

[1] Not printed.

The Argentine member of the committee presented a proposal for the division of the commission into five committees, to sit, respectively, at Washington, Rio de Janeiro, Santiago (Chile), Montevideo, and Buenos Aires. The Montevideo committee was to be charged with the codification of private international law, Montevideo having been the seat of the congress of 1888 on that subject. To the other four committees were respectively to be assigned for codification: (1) The laws of war on land and sea; (2) neutrality and civil wars; (3) the laws of peace; (4) the organization of international tribunals. This proposal, like the previous Chilean-Argentine motion, was based upon the understanding that the sole object of the first meeting of the commission was that of organization and distribution of work.

The delegate of the United States, in his speech at the formal opening of the congress, had previously expressed the same understanding, saying:

> The duty of the present congress is comparatively simple, and as it does not embrace the discussion of principles or the conclusion of conventions on controverted topics may no doubt be expeditiously performed. Our meeting upon the present occasion marks only the beginning of the great work that lies before us, a work that will involve hereafter the prolonged and profound study of general principles, of conventional agreements, and of domestic legislation and judicial and administrative decisions, to the end that, by becoming acquainted with our points of disagreement, as well as of agreement, we may be sure of our ground and go forward with a precise knowledge of the actual legal situation in each country concerned.

In conformity with this view the American member of the committee, taking the Brazilian draft regulations as a starting point, presented an amended draft containing the following clause:

> ART. XV. In order to lay the foundation for the performance by the commission of the task committed to it of drafting a code of public international law and a code of private international law, each delegation shall, after the adjournment of the present congress, proceed to make a preliminary report, dealing with the subject of the codification of international law, public and private, fully and in detail from the point of view of the jurisprudence, the constitutional law, the legislation national and local, and the decisions of the authorities administrative and judicial, of its own country. In making such reports the several delegations shall take into consideration the draft codes already prepared by the Brazilian jurists, Messrs. Epitacio Pessôa and Lafayette Rodrigues Pereira, as well as the treaties of Montevideo of 1889, the acts of the international American conferences, the acts of the peace conferences at The Hague, the acts of the conferences at The Hague on private international law, and any other pertinent international conventions, and also any projects and propositions which the present congress may decide to include in such preliminary examination and reports.
> The text of the preliminary reports shall be printed in English, Portuguese, Spanish, and French, and 25 copies of the report of each country, in each language, shall be delivered to each delegation.

The amended draft (Art. XVI) went on to provide that, after these preliminary reports should have been exchanged, the commission might, as indicated in the convention of 1906, divide itself into two committees to consider, respectively, the preparation of drafts of codes of public international law and private international law. A further amendment was also elaborated, by which these committees were to be authorized to constitute out of their members subcommittees for the consideration of particular subjects, but this amendment was never formally presented, it appearing that the immediate division of the commission into more than two committees, in accordance with the Argentine proposal, was generally desired.

As the result of this divergence of proposals, the proceedings of the committee became the center of a very active contest, in which there was exhibited on the part of the Brazilians so much earnestness and feeling that the American delegation sought a conference with Dr. Epitacio Pessôa, first Brazilian delegate and president of the Congress, in order to ascertain the precise views and wishes of his delegation. We thus learned that the Brazilian delegation maintained that the convention of 1906 contemplated or at least permitted final action by the commission at its first meeting on codes or parts thereof; that the note (Exhibit 8), with which the Brazilian draft codes were communicated to the other Governments, indicated that those particular codes were to be discussed and acted upon in whole or in part at that meeting; that this indication was at least tacitly accepted and that the omission to act upon it would involve the defeat of the object of the meeting and in effect the abandonment of the task of codification.

Our instructions, which did not refer to the Brazilian note nor inclose a copy of it, were framed upon the understanding that the first meeting of the commission was to be essentially and appropriately preliminary for the attainment of the necessary and important object of organization and distribution of work. This understanding appears to be in strict conformity with the convention of 1906. By that convention (art. 3) it was provided that the "first meeting" of the commission should be held at Rio de Janeiro; that the commission, having met for "the purpose of organizing and distributing the work to the members thereof," might divide itself into committees, and that it should designate the "time and place" of its subsequent sessions. Not only do these stipulations all indicate that the sole design of the first meeting was that of organization and distribution of work, but the requirement that the place as well as time of subsequent sessions should be designated would be devoid of meaning if it had been supposed that the commission would on its first assembling proceed, either as a body or by means of committees, to draft codes in whole or in part. The intention that the commission should deliberate upon its work is further shown by the provision (art. 3) that the "final meeting" should be held at a date sufficiently early to permit "all drafts or all important portions thereof" to be submitted to the several Governments at least a year before the coming together of the ensuing international American conference. The time, originally set for the first meeting of the commission made it morally certain that two years would thus be allowed for the preparation of drafts, an interval of less than four years between the international American conferences never having been contemplated. Equally obvious is the meaning of the provision (art. 4) that the work shall be distributed "among the members" of the commission, and that if the commission should divide itself into committees such committees "must proceed separately." It never was contemplated that the commission should as a body remain in continuous session while committees or individual members were engaged in the preparation of drafts of codes. The signatories of the convention evidently understood that the preparation of such drafts was a serious task, involving minute and prolonged study; that the holding together of all the members of the commission in continuous session during the performance of this task would be useless and impracticable; and that any detention of the commission in session, after it was organized and its work distributed, would represent merely loss of time and opportunity and involve to that extent the defeat of the object for which it was created.

An examination of the Brazilian note with which the draft codes were communicated to the other Governments shows that it contains certain clauses which may be construed as conveying the expression of a wish that those Governments might give to their delegates such instructions as would enable them to proceed with the discussion of the projects. The distinctness with which this impression would be received would no doubt largely depend upon the mental attitude of the person to whom the intimation was intended to be made. The department, having in mind not only the terms of the convention of 1906 but also the nature, magnitude, and complexity of the task of codifying international law, public and private, seems not to have supposed that the immediate discussion and adoption of codes was expected in any quarter. In any event, the indication of such an expectation by one of the interested Governments could be regarded only as the expression of a wish, the utterance of which would not relieve the task of codification of its difficulties or dispense with the necessity of proper preparatory investigations in all the countries concerned.

It having become apparent that a majority of the committee were adverse to the attempt to adopt codes at the first meeting of the commission, the Brazilian delegation, seeking to combine and reconcile the opposing views, proposed a regulation to the effect that the commission should divide itself into two committees for the preparation of drafts of codes, taking as a basis the Brazilian projects, and that if these committees should consider it to be impossible to draw up complete projects at the pending meeting, then each one should codify "one or more of the more practical and urgent subjects, such as, for instance, extradition in public law and foreign judgments in private law, and submit these partial works for the approval of the commission."

After much consideration, the committee decided for the sake of harmony to accept this proposal to the extent of providing for the appointment of two special committees, respectively, to report drafts on extradition and the execution of foreign judgments, it being understood that these committees would report without delay. For the rest, it was decided to recommend that the commission should be divided for future work into six committees instead of five, the creation of a second committee on private international law, to sit at Lima, having been agreed upon, on motion of the delegate from Peru.

We have here reviewed all the important proposals formally laid before the committee. Various proposals or suggestions were informally put forward, such as that of the appointment of a committee near each ministry of foreign affairs to collect and furnish data, that of the appointment of agents to obtain information, and that of the submission of the work of the committees to "scientific associations, especially of international law," such "scientific institutes" also to have the power, after prolonged deliberation upon a certain matter, to ask the committee to which it pertained to examine it and order its publication. These proposals or suggestions, being apparently outside the competency of the commission under the convention of 1906, did not reach the stage of a formal vote by the committee.

The report of the committee (Exhibit 9, q. v.), which was signed on the 6th of July, embraced (1) a draft of permanent regulations for the government of the International Commission of Jurists when in session, (2) a plan for the division of the commission into six committees for the preparation of codes, (3) a resolution fixing Rio de Janeiro as the place and June, 1914, as the date of the next meeting of the commission, and (4) a resolution providing for the appointment of two committees of five members each, respectively, to prepare projects of codes on extradition and the execution of foreign judgments for the consideration of the pending Congress. This report was signed by all the members of the committee, including the delegate from Brazil, but the delegate of the United States annexed to his signature a "provisional reservation" as to the recommendation that committees be appointed immediately to report draft codes on extradition and the execution of foreign judgments.

The report of the committee was presented to the congress on the 8th of July, and with the exception of the adverse vote of the delegate of Salvador, who spoke in favor of the immediate consideration of the Brazilian draft codes, was adopted unanimously and without amendment. The delegation of Guatemala made, however, a reservation similar to that of the United States, as to the appointment of committees to report drafts on extradition and the execution of foreign judgments.

The object of the first meeting being, as has been pointed out, the organization of the commission and the distribution of its work, the regulations adopted for the attainment of these ends may now be summarized.

The regulations for the organization of the commission (see under Exhibit 9) provide that the president of the commission, elected at the formal opening, shall retain his position till the next meeting, which, as has been seen, is to take place at Rio de Janeiro in June, 1914. Thus, Dr. Epitacio Pessôa, of the Brazilian delegation, who was elected at the opening session, remains as president. It is not improbable that the commission will continue to observe the rule, which has been followed by the international American conferences, of electing as its presiding officer a delegate of the country in which the meeting is held.

The precedence of the delegations is to be determined by the alphabetical order of the names of their respective countries. Under this rule, as applied by the international American conferences, the first place was assigned to the United States of America (America, United States of), the second to Argentina, and so on. The order, however, in which the delegations are, in the absence of the president, to be represented in the chair is determined by lot. The United States held the third place in the list thus made up at the late congress.

The commission also has a secretary general, who is named by the Government of the country in which the meeting is held. The duties of this officer, who has under his direction the secretaries, assistants, and other employees of the commission, are detailed in the regulations.

In conformity with the convention of 1906, by whose terms the presence of representatives of at least 12 of the signatory States was necessary to the organization of the commission, the regulations provide that the presence of representatives of at least 12 of those signatories shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the commission, but that the presence of two-thirds of the delegations taking part in the meeting shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business at a particular session.

A majority of the votes of the delegations present at a session suffices for the approval of a resolution, but for the approval of drafts intended to be incorporated in the codes the concurrence of two-thirds of those delegations is required. While the consideration of the extradition draft, article by article, was in progress, a question was raised as to whether, under this rule, a two-thirds vote was not essential to the approval of a particular article or of an amendment thereto. This question was not passed on by the commission, as it was found, on a second ballot, that the amendment was approved by more than two-thirds of the delegations. The question seems, however, to have arisen out of what may be regarded as the defective procedure followed on that occasion, under which the votes upon the several articles and the amendments thereto were treated as constituting in the aggregate a final approval of the draft as amended, the project in its entirety never having been put to a vote. It is obvious that the sense of an assembly on a project as a whole is not necessarily disclosed by the votes taken on separate articles, even though each article be thus voted upon. The requirement of a two-thirds majority for the approval of drafts designed to be incorporated in the codes was no doubt intended to apply to the final vote, namely, the vote by which the decision of the commission upon the project as an entirety should be given, and not to votes upon particular articles or amendments thereto.

One other clause of the regulations for the government of the commission when in session should here be noticed. The convention of 1906 having provided that reports and motions shall be printed in English, Portuguese, Spanish, and French, and distributed to the delegates for their examination, the regulations provide that they shall not be discussed except in a session subsequent to that in which they shall have been distributed in printed form. In connection with the requirements which also prevail in the international American conferences, it is proper and indeed important to observe that more attention should be paid than is sometimes done to the obtaining of competent translations and interpretations. In the work of the International Commission of Jurists this is a matter not of convenience but of necessity.

REGULATION FOR THE DISTRIBUTION OF WORK.

By the regulation for the distribution of work the International Commission of Jurists is divided into six committees, whose places of meeting, membership, and subject matter are as follows:

I. INTERNATIONAL LAW.

1. Washington: John Bassett Moore (United States), chairman; Frederick Van Dyne (United States), Victor Manuel Castillo (Mexico), Antonio Batres Jáuregui (Guatemala), José Matos (Guatemala), Alonso Reyes Guerra (Salvador), a delegate of Costa Rica (to be appointed in place of Alejandro Alvarez), Gen. Santiago de la Guardia (Panama).

The subjects assigned to this committee for the preparation of drafts of codes are maritime war and the rights and duties of neutrals.

As this committee, if all the Central American States and Haiti and Santo Domingo should send full delegations, would greatly exceed any of the rest in the number of its members, it is empowered to divide itself into two committees as nearly as possible equal in number, indicating at the same time the subjects which each is to study.

2. Rio de Janeiro: Epitacio Pessôa (Brazil), chairman; José Maria Uricoechea (Colombia), Hernán Velarde (Peru), a delegate of Cuba (who, it was understood, would be the Cuban minister at Rio de Janeiro).

This committee is to deal with war on land, civil war, and claims of foreigners growing out of such wars.

3. Santiago (Chile): Norberto Quirno Costa (Argentina), chairman; Alejandro Alvarez (Chile), Victor Sanjinés (Bolivia), Matias Alonso Criado (Ecuador).

Subject matter: International law in time of peace.

4. Buenos Aires: Miguel Cruchaga Tocornal (Chile), chairman; Carlos Rodriguez Larreta (Argentina), Roberto Ancizar (Colombia), Juan Zorilla de San Martin (Uruguay). (Mr. Ancizar, it may be explained, resides at Buenos Aires).

Subject matter: The pacific settlement of international disputes, and the organization of international tribunals.

II. PRIVATE INTERNATIONAL LAW.

5. Montevideo: Cecilio Baez (Paraguay), chairman; Eusebio Ayala (Paraguay), José Pedro Varela (Uruguay), Candido Luiz Maria de Oliveira (Brazil).

Subject matter: Capacity, status of aliens, domestic relations, succession.

6. Lima: Alberto Elmore (Peru), chairman; Pedro Manuel Arcaya (Venezuela), a delegate to be appointed by Bolivia, and a delegate to be appointed by Cuba.

Subject matter: Matters of private international law not embraced in the preceding enumeration, including the conflict of penal laws.

The regulation provides that, if any of the delegates above named should resign or become disabled, the committee to which he was assigned shall request his Government to fill his place; and that delegates appointed from countries not represented in the late Congress, as well as any additional delegates appointed from countries that were so represented, shall be assigned by the president of the commission in such manner as he may deem most conducive to the performance of the work.

Each committee is to meet at the time designated by its chairman, acting in accord with his committee.

With a view to the preparation of drafts of codes, it is provided that each committee shall request from each Government a detailed report as to its domestic legislation, its judicial and administrative decisions, its conventions and practices, its international cases and their solutions, and as to the regulation which it deems most suitable on the subject with which the committee is charged. These reports, with the exception of printed documents annexed to or mentioned in them, are to be printed in English, Spanish, Portuguese, and French, and 25 of each report are to be furnished to each Government.

The regulation then provides that the committee, having before them the information thus obtained—> shall proceed to the preparation of drafts, and in so doing shall take into consideration the draft of a code of public international law and the draft of a code of private international law, prepared by the Brazilian jurists, Dr. Epitacio Pessoa and Dr. Lafayette Rodriguez Pereira, respectively, > in the conduct of their work the committees shall give preferential attention, as is recommended by the convention of 1906, to subjects and principles uniformly agreed upon in existing treaties and conventions and as to which there exists uniformity among the laws of the American nations, and particularly to the treaties of Montevideo of 1889, the conventions signed by the international American conferences and the debates thereon, and all other matters the treatment of which may promise judicial progress or tend to the elimination of misunderstandings or conflicts between those nations.

The drafts prepared by each committee are to be printed in English, Portuguese, Spanish, and French, and to be communicated to each Government. The same thing is to be done with regard to points on which the committee may be unable to agree. The drafts and disagreements are to be laid before the commission at its next meeting; and any draft adopted by the commission, by a vote of two-thirds of the delegations present, is to be considered by the next Pan American conference, unless the Governments should immediately embody it in a convention.

Each committee may request one or more of the Governments represented on it to assign experts for the consideration of special topics.

Finally, the regulation provides that the expenses occasioned by the preparation and printing of reports and drafts, as well as all other expenses of the committees, shall be paid in conformity with Article VI of the convention of 1906, which reads as follows:

> ART. VI. Expenses of preparation of the drafts, including those of experts, shall be paid by all the States in the proportion and form established for the support of the International Bureau of the American Republics (now Pan American Union); but each Government shall pay its own members of the commission.

Such is the plan adopted by the International Commission of Jurists for the performance of the task committed to it. It was adopted only after prolonged and conscientious deliberation, and may be regarded as a worthy testimonial to the united desire of the congress to discharge its whole duty, faithfully and effectively. The execution of the task which the plan imposes will require, on the part of the committees into which the commission has been divided, serious and exacting labor, and the manner in which this labor is performed and the results which it affords will disclose the possibilities of codification under the conditions prescribed by the convention of 1906.

In this relation we beg leave to annex hereto a public statement made by Mr. Moore, of the delegation of the United States, on his departure from Rio de Janeiro. (Exhibit 10.) This statement was made in response to questions submitted by a person connected with the secretarial staff of the commission. In these questions there is, as will be observed, a reflection of the expectation which had been entertained in certain quarters, and to which reference has heretofore been made, that the congress would proceed at once to the adoption of codes. In these circumstances the submission of the questions afforded an opportunity which had not before been presented to exhibit the subject in its proper and necessary relations.

As has heretofore been stated, the commission agreed to the appointment of committees to report drafts of codes on extradition and the execution of foreign judgments. These committees were appointed on the 8th of July. The committee on extradition signed its report on the following day. This report is annexed to the minutes of the fourth regular session of the congress, at which it was discussed and amended. The draft as amended is annexed to the minutes of the fifth session.

The report of the committee on the execution of foreign judgments is annexed to the minutes of the sixth session. On motion of the delegate from Mexico, it was decided to refer the report to the committee on private international law at Lima for consideration and further action.

The commission held seven regular sessions, the last of which took place on the 20th of July. It finally adjourned, to meet again in Rio de Janeiro in June, 1914.

We can not express too strongly our appreciation of the generous hospitality with which the delegates to the congress were received and treated. Not only was every effort made to facilitate the work of the commission, but its members were in every way made to feel the warmth and cordiality of their welcome by the Government and people of Brazil. Nor can we close this report without acknowledging our deep sense of obligation to Mr. Morgan, our ambassador, and to Mr. Lay, our consul general, at Rio de Janeiro, for their unfailing aid and many courtesies.

Annexed hereto are English versions of the protocols of the congress. (Exhibits 11–17.)

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN B. MOORE.

The Brazilian Ambassador at Washington to the Secretary of State of the United States.[1]

EMBASSY OF BRAZIL,
Washington, December 5, 1911.

Mr. SECRETARY: Referring to this embassy's communication of March 14 last and to the memorandum of the 31st of the same month replying thereto, I have the honor to offer to your excellency two copies of the drafts of codes of public and private international law which the Brazilian Government has ordered to be prepared for presentation to the Governments interested with the object of forwarding the work of the board of jurists that is to meet in the city of Rio de Janeiro under a resolution of the Third International American Conference.

In having the said two drafts of codes written out on the subject my Government proposed to facilitate the task to be undertaken and was actuated exclusively by the desire to put at once into a concrete form the labors the beginning of which we found ourselves much to our regret constrained to defer.

The circumstance that the preparation of these drafts was entrusted to such jurists as Counsellor Lafayette Rodrigues Pereira, former senator and president of the council of ministers of the Empire, representative of Brazil on the arbitration commissions of Chile and at the First International American Conference of Washington, member of the Permanent Court of Arbitration at The Hague and author of a treatise on international law and various other law books; and Dr. Epitacio Pessôa, delegate of Brazil on the board of jurists, former lecturer at the law school of Recife, former justice of the federal supreme court, does not prevent Brazil from regarding those drafts as mere bases that may serve to harmonize as far as possible the political views and expression of judicial culture of the American nations.

By systematizing principles, condensing the latest conquests of law, and defining the main points for study and investigation in the generally accepted doctrine, the drafts properly appreciated shall be of assistance in the practical labors of the board of jurists, which can thereby be attended by the delegates provided with instructions on certain fundamental and concrete points, thereby removing conditions of uncertainty and unexpectedness which may always spring from a lack of definite and formal ideas to discuss.

If, with that object in view, the drafts should be favorably received by the Governments concerned, Brazil will hold its initiative to have been fully rewarded.

My government further honors me with the pleasant duty of availing myself of this opportunity to renew to your excellency's Government the assurance of the pleasure with which Brazil will receive the delegates to the board and to express the firm hope cherished by us that the spirit of cooperation and good will manifested in the American conferences will produce every possible practical result that we Americans must all sincerely desire to achieve.

In order to agree upon additional measures that may prove practicable and serviceable to the meeting of the board, it would be expedient to call an early meeting of the Pan American Union. As your excellency is aware, Brazil proposed that the date of the meeting of the board be set for April 22 next and also proposed that each country be represented thereon by two delegates instead of one, but with one vote only in the deliberation, a measure which would facilitate the labors of the board by making it possible for substitutes to take the place of members unable to attend, besides other considerations to be taken into account.

I avail [etc.]

Exhibit 9.

Report of the committee of five members appointed to study the draft regulations and the motion of Chile and Argentina.

On June 28 last the Commission of Jurists appointed a committee composed of the undersigned to study the draft of regulations prepared by the Brazilian delegation, as well as the motion of the Chilean and Argentine delegations, to the effect that the commission begin no codifying work until the several delegations have exchanged notes regarding certain subjects mentioned in said motion or any others which the other delegations may suggest.

I.

For the first time in the life of nations it is a question of realizing an aspiration of humanity, viz, the codification of public international law and of private international law.

Thanks to the solidarity which exists among the nations of the New World, the latter have been able, thus anticipating Europe, to agree to codify the rules which are to govern their mutual relations.

However, in order to carry out a work of this magnitude under the proper conditions, it is necessary that it be done in a way which will combine all the advantages of codification while avoiding its drawbacks.

Two currents of opinion have manifested themselves at the meetings of this committee in regard to the trend which should be given to the first meeting of the commission, one holding that the work of codification, complete or partial, should be proceeded with at once, and the other deeming it necessary, in order to accomplish this purpose, to agree previously on an organization and method of work which should enable an acquaintance to be made with the international life of the nations of America in order that the work might conform to the needs and aspirations of the New World. Moreover, those who held the latter opinion thought that the procedure pointed out by them was that provided by article 4 of the convention of 1906 which created the present commission.

After the agreement has been reached, which will be set forth at the end of this report, we take pleasure in stating that all the undersigned, as well as all the delegates with whom we have exchanged notes in this regard, are agreed that it will be impossible to proceed to a complete codification of international law at the present meeting of the commission.

The committee to which we have the honor of belonging has deemed it its duty to prepare two drafts, that of the permanent regulations of the commission and that on the organization of the several committees into which it has been decided to divide it. For the former, the draft prepared by the Brazilian delegation was taken as a basis and approved with slight modification.

For the latter, the drafts presented by the United States, Argentine, and Chilean delegations were taken into account and an endeavor made to harmonize them.

The idea prevailing in this latter draft is to divide the commission into six committees assigning international law subjects to each. Before undertaking their labor, these committees will have to request each Government, in regard to the subject assigned to them, to furnish information concerning the internal legislation of its respective country, the judicial or administrative resolutions, usages, international cases which have arisen, and modes of settling them, and finally, the mode of settlement which these Governments deem most adequate for the subject in question.

Each committee shall study all this data, as well as all international acts in which the uniform will of the nations of America is shown, especially the treaties of Montevideo of 1889 and the resolutions of the Pan American conferences. It shall give special consideration to the drafts prepared by the distinguished Brazilian jurists, Messrs. Epitacio Pessôa and Lafayette Rodrigues Pereira.

Taking into account all this information, the committees shall, in regard to those subjects on which it is possible to reach an agreement, prepare such drafts as they may deem suitable, making a note of those points on which it has been impossible to come to an agreement.

These drafts, as well as the reports embodying the points of disagreement, shall be printed in Spanish, Portuguese, English, and French for transmission to each government represented on the commission. Being given publicity, this work will be subjected to that criticism which is so necessary for a better study and perfection of work of this kind. Thereupon, they shall be studied at the next meeting of the Commission of Jurists.

The drafts which receive the approval of two-thirds of the delegations in the commission shall be considered at the next international Pan American conference, it being possible also, if the Governments so decide, to adopt them diplomatically.

II.

The motion of the delegations from Chile and Argentina, of which we have made mention at the beginning of this report, demonstrates the complexity of the mission intrusted to the commission. They furthermore deemed that, before undertaking the work of codification, it will be absolutely necessary for all the delegations to proceed to an exchange of ideas in regard to fundamental points, which shall relate chiefly to the underlying idea of codification, to a determination of the subjects thereof and to the method of work.

The commission shall likewise consider the motion presented by the Chilean delegation to the Fourth Pan American Conference, according to which the draft codes are to be divided into two parts, one comprising matters of world-wide interest and the other subjects of concern to America only.

The undersigned Chilean delegate, who sanctioned this proposition, declares that its purpose was not, as was supposed by some, to establish a material division implying an antagonism between the two groups of subjects and leading to the creation of a set of exceptional rules or rules opposed to international law. The grounds stated for this proposition define its real scope, which is to take matters of world-wide interest to The Hague conference in order that they may be discussed there by all the nations of the earth, a procedure which there would be no reason for recommending that it be applied to subjects solely American in character; that is, which concern our continent in a special or more direct manner.

We deem very worthy of consideration the various observations contained in the material presented to this commission by the Chilean and Argentine delegations, as well as that presented by the Chilean delegation to the Fourth Pan American Conference.

In regard to some of these ideas, the undersigned express their opinion in the appended drafts of regulations, and regarding the others we deem it more suitable that each special committee attach to it such importance as in its judgment it may deserve.

III.

While we, the undersigned, agree that the present session of the commission should deal particularly with the organization and method of work, we likewise think that two committees may be appointed at once to propose at the next session of this assembly only two drafts of resolutions, one regarding extradition and the other on the execution of judgments.

In view of the foregoing considerations, we have the honor to propose that the assembly of jurists adopt the following resolutions:

1. To approve the appended draft of regulations for the International Commission of Jurists.
2. To appoint two committees of five members each for the preparation during this session of a draft on extradition and another on the execution of foreign judgments.
3. To approve the appended draft on the organization of six special committees intrusted with preparing a codification of public international law and private international law.
4. To designate the month of June, 1914, for the second meeting of the Commission of Jurists at Rio de Janeiro.

DRAFT OF REGULATIONS FOR THE INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION OF JURISTS.

ARTICLE 1. The president of the commission, elected by a majority of the delegations present at the inaugural meeting, will discharge this office until the next session.

The commission shall have a secretary general appointed by the government of the country in which the commission holds its meetings.

The order of precedence of the delegations shall be determined by the alphabetical order of the respective nations. At the first session the delegation whose members are to take the place of the president in case of absence shall be designated by lot.

Each delegation shall designate the delegate who is to preside over the session in this case.

ART. 2. It shall be the duty of the president—

1. To preside over the sessions of the commission and place under discussion the subjects comprised in the order of the day.
2. To recognize the delegates in the order in which they ask the floor.
3. To decide all questions of detail raised during the discussions. If any delegation should so request, this decision shall be submitted to deliberation.
4. To submit the matters under discussion to a vote and announce the result of the ballot.
5. To designate through the secretary general, and at the end of each session, the matters which are to be dealt with at the following session.
6. To have the secretary, after the approval of the minutes, give an account to the commission of the matters and projects presented subsequently to the previous session.
7. To adopt all necessary measures for the maintenance of discipline and the enforcement of the regulations.

ART. 3. It shall be the duty of the secretary general—

1. To have under his direction the secretaries, assistants, and other employees necessary for the service of the commission, and to distribute their work among them.
2. To carry on the official correspondence of the commission in conformity with the resolutions of the latter or of the president.
3. To prepare the minutes of the sessions and see to their printing and distribution among the delegates.
4. To prepare the order of the day in accordance with the instructions of the president.
5. To examine the translations made by the secretaries or interpreters.
6. To distribute among the special committees at the meetings of the commission, the matters which belong to them, and to place at their disposal all supplies necessary for the performance of their tasks.

ART. 4. Each delegation shall have a single vote. The ballots shall be taken orally, unless some delegation shall ask that they be in writing. In such case, each delegation shall deposit a ballot with the name of the nation it represents and the way it votes. The secretary shall read the ballots aloud and count the votes.

ART. 5. The presence of the representatives of at least 12 of the countries which signed the convention of 1906 shall be necessary to constitute a quorum of the commission.

No meeting of the commission shall be held without two-thirds of the delegations represented being present thereat.

ART. 6. In order that a resolution may be considered as being approved, it must receive a majority of the votes of the delegations present at the meeting in which the vote is taken. A delegation which has sent its vote in writing to the secretary general shall be considered to be present.

For the approval of drafts intended to form part of the codes, two-thirds of the votes of the delegations present shall be necessary.

ART. 7. When, owing to absence or abstention from voting, the majorities required by the preceding article are not obtained, the vote shall be repeated at the following session; and if the abstentions continue at this session, the vote shall be taken by the majority or two-thirds of the delegations which do not refrain from voting.

ART. 8. The delegates may speak or express their ideas in writing in their own language. The delegate or one of the interpreters or secretaries of the commission shall make a summary of the speech or written work in such language or languages as any delegate may request.

ART. 9. No delegate shall speak more than once or longer than 30 minutes on the same subject. However, the author of any draft or proposition may speak a second time for 15 minutes.

Any delegate may take the floor for five minutes only on a question of personal privilege, or to give the grounds for his vote.

ART. 10. The deliberations of the assembly shall not be public. The only persons admitted to the meeting room shall be the delegates, secretaries, assistants, and employees of the commssion. The commission may, nevertheless, permit such persons as it may deem suitable to attend the sessions.

The secretary general shall furnish the press a summary of each session, unless a resolution be taken to the contrary.

ART. 11. The reports and motions presented to the commission shall be printed in Spanish, English, Portuguese, and French, and distributed to the delegates for their study, and they shall not be subjected to discussion until a session subsequent to that in which they were distributed.

ART. 12. In cases not provided for by the present regulations, whatever may be decided upon by the majority of the commission shall prevail.

DRAFT FOR THE ORGANIZATION AND METHOD OF WORK OF THE COMMITTEES INTO WHICH THE INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION OF JURISTS IS DIVIDED.

ARTICLE I. The International Commission of Jurists intrusted with the preparation of a draft code of public international law and another of private international law to govern the relations among the nations of America, shall be divided into six committees.

ART. II. The committee shall be organized as follows:

1. The first committee shall meet in Washington and be composed of delegates John Bassett Moore, chairman (United States); Frederick Van Dyne (United States); Victor Manuel Castillo (Mexico); Antonio Batres Jáuregui (Guatemala); José Matos (Guatemala); Alonso Reyes Guerra (Salvador), a delegate from Costa Rica, and Gen. Dr. Santiago de la Guardia (Panama).

This committee, meeting at Washington, shall have power to divide itself into two, as far as possible equal in number, indicating the delegates who are to compose them and the subjects which they are to study.

2. The second committee shall meet in Rio de Janeiro and be composed of delegates Epitacio Pessôa, chairman (Brazil); José Maria Uricoechea (Colombia); Hernán Velarde (Peru), and a delegate from Cuba.

3. The third committee shall meet at Santiago de Chile and be composed of delegates Norberto Quirno Costa, chairman (Argentina); Alejandro Alvarez (Chile); Victor Sanjinés (Bolivia); Matías Alonso Criado (Ecuador).

4. The fourth committee shall meet at Buenos Aires and be composed of delegates Miguel Cruchaga Tocornal, chairman (Chile); Carlos Rodriguez Larreta (Argentina); Roberto Ancisar (Colombia); Juan Zorilla de San Martín (Uruguay).

5. The fifth committee shall meet at Buenos Aires and be composed of Delegates Cecilio Baez, chairman (Paraguay); Eusebio Ayala (Paraguay), José Pedro Varela (Uruguay), Candido Luiz Maria de Oliveira (Brazil).

6. The sixth committee shall meet at Lima and be composed of Delegates Alberto Elmore, chairman (Peru); Pedro Manuel Arcaya (Venezuela), a delegate of Bolivia, and a delegate from Cuba.

ART. III. If one of the delegates appointed shall resign or be unable to discharge his duties, the special committee to which he belongs shall request the Government concerned to fill his place.

ART. IV. Delegates appointed by countries not represented in the present commission, as well as delegates designated by countries which have now designated only one delegate, shall be assigned by the president of the commission to the various committees, with the consent of the governments of the countries concerned.

ART. V. It shall be the duty of the first of these committees to prepare drafts relating to maritime war and the rights and duties of neutrals; of the second, drafts relating to land warfare, civil war, and the claims of foreigners arising from such wars; of the third, drafts relating to subjects comprised in what is called a state of peace; of the fourth, drafts relating to the peaceful settlement of controversies and the organization of international tribunals; of the fifth, drafts relating to the following subjects of private international law—capacity, status of foreigners, family rights, successions; of the sixth, drafts relating to subjects of private international law not comprised in the foregoing enumeration, including matters relating to the conflict of penal laws.

ART. VI. The committees established by the foregoing articles shall be intrusted with the preparation, within the limits of the subjects assigned them, of draft codes of public international law and private international law in accordance with the following provisions:

ART. VII. In order to prepare these drafts each committee shall ask each Government to furnish, with respect to the matter assigned to the committee, a detailed report concerning its domestic legislation, its judicial or administrative decisions, its conventions, its usages, the international cases which have arisen and the way in which they have been settled, and, finally, the mode of regulation which each Government considers most adequate for the subjects in question.

These reports, with the exception of the printed documents appended to or mentioned in them, shall be printed in Spanish, Portuguese, English, and French. Each Government shall be furnished 25 copies of each report.

ART. VIII. The committees, with the documents mentioned in the foregoing article before them, shall proceed to prepare the draft or drafts. For this purpose they shall also take into consideration the draft code of public international law and the draft code of private international law edited by the Brazilian jurists Messrs. Epitacio Pessôa and Lafayette Rodrigues Pereira, respectively. It shall likewise give preferential attention, as recommended by the convention of 1906, to the principles and points which have formed the subject matter of uniform agreements in treaties and conventions and in regard to which there is conformity among the laws of the nations of America, and especially the treaties of Montevideo of 1889, the conventions signed by the international American conferences, the debates to which they severally gave rise, and other subjects which constitute a substantial juridical advance or which tend toward the elimination of misunderstandings or controversies among those same nations.

ART. IX. The drafts prepared by each committee shall be printed in Spanish, English, Portuguese, and French, and communicated to each Government. The same shall be done in regard to the points on which the committee is unable to reach an agreement. These drafts or points of disagreement shall be dealt with at the next meeting of the commission.

Each committee may ask one or more Governments represented to assign experts for the study of special subjects.

ART. X. Every draft adopted by the commission by a majority of two-thirds the delegations present shall be considered at the next international American conference, or else the Governments may adopt it immediately by convention.

ART. XI. Each committee shall meet on the date designated by its chairman, in accord with the committee itself.

ART. XII. The expenses incident to the preparation and printing of the reports and drafts referred to in the foregoing articles, as well as any other expense connected with the work of the committee, shall be defrayed in accordance with article 6 of the convention of 1906, which established the Commission of Jurists.

EXHIBIT 10.

Public statement made by Mr. Moore, United States delegate, after the adjournment of the Congress, in reply to certain questions.

"A. Do you think that successive international conferences will give a practical result?"

Answer. The great and beneficient results already accomplished by international conferences justify an unhesitating affirmative answer. There is indeed every reason to believe that even more important results will be obtained by this means in the future than have been secured in the past.

"B. Especially in reference to the codification of international public and private law, do you think the results will be favorable?"

Answer. Undoubtedly. In so answering, however, I interpret the word "codification" in a general and comprehensive sense. During the past hundred years, and especially during the last fifty, great progress has been made in the work of embodying the rules of public international law in international agreements of world-wide operation. This is in reality codification, whether we describe it by that name or not. The process will go on. The codification of private international law is more difficult, because it deals with private rather than with public law, and involves to a great extent the element of procedure, which, according to a well-recognized rule, is governed by local law. This rule is not artificial, but inheres in the nature of the subject. It is important always to bear in mind that the object of law is the attainment of justice; that the different forms which prevail in different countries under their various legal systems have presumptively been worked out for the accomplishment of that end; and that efficiency is more to be desired than a preconceived uniformity of methods.

"C. Do you think it possible and reasonable that such codification should be for the exclusive use and interest of the North and South American countries?"

Answer. I do not, except so far as it may relate to conditions peculiarly local. So far as concerns principles of general application and interest, American countries will work in the spirit of cooperation, in the hope that the results of their labors may find world-wide acceptance through The Hague conferences or otherwise.

"D. Do you think that this work is well begun, or do you think like many people that the actual meeting was a fiasco?"

Answer. I unconditionally take my place with those who think that the work is well begun. Although I am aware that there has been some difference of opinion on this subject, I believe that the difference was due solely to the general and earnest desire felt on all sides to adopt the course that would best assure the accomplishment of the great object which all had at heart. This was the motive of those who wished the congress to proceed at once to the discussion and adoption of codes, just as it was the motive of those who, without regard to the intrinsic merits of the Brazilian projects, believed that such a course was impossible, and would, if entered upon, prove to be fatal.

According to the latter view, it was not enough that preparatory work, no matter how able and admirable it was, had been done in one country, for nothing could become a law without the assent of all the countries concerned, and the possibility of obtaining such an accord could be ascertained only by a thorough and comprehensive study of the jurisprudence, statutes, decisions, and practices of each country, as well as of international decisions and international conventions. This was not the task of a day or of a few months, nor could it be performed offhand by any body of men, no matter how capable and learned they might be. In this relation it is pertinent to recur to the history of the recent Imperial German Civil Code. In the first place, a commission was created for the purpose of preparing a project. This commission was appointed in 1874, and devoted 13 years to its work, presenting its report in 1887. After three years of public discussion, the project was committed to another commission, in 1890. The code received the imperial approval only in 1896, but did not take effect till 1900, 26 years after the appointment of the first commission. And yet the States for which this code was adopted were not only united under a Federal Government with a supreme legislature, but had similar political and legal traditions. I do not intend to intimate that the American nations, although they lack such similarity of traditions, may not progress more rapidly in the codification of international law than the Germans did in the codification of their civil law, but such progress will be possible only after the necessary groundwork has been laid through the labors of the committees into which the International Commission of Jurists has, by the decision of the recent Congress, been divided. This plan I believe to be the best that was attainable under the provisions of the convention of 1906, and we may look forward with confidence to the possibility of achieving valuable results on the reassembling of the commission at Rio de Janeiro in June, 1914, after the delegates have had an opportunity to become better acquainted with their task.

"E. If more could have been done, who should be held responsible for the bad result, and what are the reasons that caused it?"

Answer. The International Commission of Jurists is as a body responsible for the decision at which it arrived, but the votes of the members are a matter of record, and it is hardly possible that any delegate who by argument or by vote contributed to that decision would desire to evade a full measure of individual responsibility for it. The commission, acting intelligently, and with a full comprehension of the question before it, decided by a vote that bordered on unanimity, that the object of its first meeting was, as the convention of 1906 indicated, that of organization and distribution of work. The appointment of committees immediately to report projects on extradition and the execution of foreign judgments was a concession to those who, with equal intelligence and sincerity, maintained the opposite view; but I venture little in saying that the results demonstrate that the attempt to proceed at once to the discussion and adoption of projects of codes was premature. I yield to no one in homage to Brazil and her distinguished jurists for having gone far in advance of what the convention of 1906 required. It was an achievement worthy of a generous and high-minded nation, and the highest tribute that could be paid to it was to take care that it should not be lost by hasty, superficial, and ill-considered action.

Speaking for my own Government, I may say that the draft codes reached it only toward the end of last year, and the agreement to hold the congress was signed only in January, 1912. On the eve of sailing for Brazil I was furnished with copies of the original drafts in Portuguese and with an English translation of them, but I do not hesitate to say that there had scarcely been an opportunity to make a competent translation of the texts into English, for by a translation I mean not the mere matching of word for word, but the conversion of the sense and idiom of the one text into the equivalent sense and idiom of the other. Nor was this all. The phraseology was legal, and the task of finding equivalents, involving as it did the comparison of widely different systems of law, could be performed only by legal experts and under expert legal supervision. The services of men competent for such a task can not usually be secured on a moment's notice. It is to be remembered, too, that the preparation of the different texts is not a mere matter of convenience, for, as is perfectly understood and agreed, each Government will deal with and primarily be bound by the text in its own language.

For the performance of work such as this, as well as for the performance of other preliminaries essential to the adoption of codes, the organization of the commission and the distribution of its work has now for the first time provided, in conformity with the design of the convention of 1906, the appropriate machinery. Only those unfamiliar with the subject can fail to grasp the necessity and the importance of what has been done. The plan adopted was the result of long and conscientious deliberation, and may be regarded as a worthy testimonial to the united desire of the late congress to discharge its whole duty faithfully and effectively. The execution of the task which the plan imposes will require, on the part of the six committees into which the commission has been divided, serious and exacting labor, and the manner in which this labor is performed and the results which it affords will disclose the possibilities of codification under the conditions prescribed by the convention of 1906.

DRAFT ON EXTRADITION.

ARTICLE 1. Extradition between the nations shall be compulsory.

ART. 2. In order that extradition may be granted, it shall be necessary—

(a) That the claimant nation have jurisdiction to prosecute and try the act on which the extradition is based.

(b) That the persons demanded be guilty, as principal or accomplice, of a violation of a penal law punishable in both nations with a penalty not under two years of imprisonment.

(c) That the demanding nation present documents which, in accordance with its laws, warrant the imprisonment of the person in question. (Art. 13.)

(d) That the violation or penalty be not barred by limitation according to the laws of both nations.

(e) That the fugitive, if he has already been convicted, shall not yet have served his penalty.

ART. 3. If the offense has been committed outside the territory of the demanding nation, the extradition shall not be granted unless the law of the nation of refuge authorizes, under identical conditions, punishment of the same offense when committed outside its territory.

ART. 4. Extradition shall not be permitted—

(a) When the person whose extradition is requested is under prosecution or has already been tried or pardoned in the nation of refuge for the same offense.

(b) When it is a question of political crimes or others connected therewith (excepting the murder of heads of nations), or of crimes against religion, or of purely military offenses.

(1. It shall be the duty of the requested nation to decide as to the political nature of an offense, taking into account the law which is most favorable to the fugitive.

2. Acts characterized as anarchy by the laws of both nations shall not be considered political crimes.

3. The surrender of naval or land deserters shall be optional, but it shall not be permissible for any nation to enlist the deserters from other nations in its armed forces, army, navy, or police.

ART. 5. The nationality of the fugitive shall never constitute a hindrance to extradition; however, no nation shall be obliged to deliver up its own citizens, unless the citizenship has been acquired since the act giving rise to the demand was committed.

SECTION 1. A nation which refuses to deliver up one of its citizens shall be obliged to prosecute and try him on its own territory, in accordance with its own law, and on the basis of such evidence as may be furnished it for this purpose by the demanding nation.

ART. 6. The surrender of the fugitive shall be delayed as long as he is under penal prosecution for another cause in the nation of which the extradition is requested but this fact shall not interfere with the progress of the extradition proceedings.

ART. 7. Any civil obligations contracted by a person whose extradition is requested toward the nation of refuge shall not interfere with his surrender.

ART. 8. If the act committed by a person demanded is subject to the death penalty, the nation of refuge may, before granting the extradition, demand that this penalty be commuted to that next below.

ART. 9. When the extradition has been obtained, the demanding nation shall not be allowed to hold the guilty party responsible for any other act than that on which his surrender was based, unless the demanded nation has previously consented to his being tried for other offenses, or unless it is a case of an offense connected therewith and based on the same evidence as that of the request.

ART. 10. The provision of the foregoing article shall not comprise the case in which the extradited party himself freely and expressly consents to being tried for another act, or, after being set at absolute liberty, remains within the territory of the nation for a period exceeding one month, nor the case in which it is a question of offenses committed subsequently to the extradition.

ART. 11. The demanding nation shall not, without the consent of the nation of refuge, deliver up the extradited party to a third nation demanding him except in the cases contemplated in the foregoing article.

ART. 12. If several nations request the extradition of the same person for the same act, the nation in whose territory the offense has been committed shall be given preferential attention; if the extradition is requested for different acts, the nation to be given preference shall be the one in which the gravest offense has been committed, in the opinion of the nation of refuge; or, if the acts are of equal gravity, the first nation to request extradition shall be given the preference. When all the requests are presented on the same day, that of prior date shall prevail; if all are of equal date, the nation requested shall determine the order to be followed. In all the cases contemplated by this article, except the first, the reextradition of the offender may be stipulated so that he may be subsequently delivered up to the other requesting nations.

Art. 13. The extradition shall be requested through the diplomatic officers, and in the absence of the latter, through the consuls, or directly from Government to Government, the request being accompanied—

(a) By a copy of authentic transcript of the final sentence, together with proof that the criminal was summoned and represented at the trial or declared legally in default; or, if it is not a case of a convicted party, by a writ instituting criminal proceedings, issued by a judge or competent authority and formally decreeing or ipso facto effecting the subjection of the accused party to trial and substantiated by an authentic copy of the penal law applicable to the offense on which the request is based.

(b) By all the data and facts necessary in order to establish the identity of the person whose extradition is demanded.

Section 1. The documents required under (a) shall be issued in the form prescribed by the legislation of the demanding nation and shall contain an accurate statement of the acts charged and of the place and data at which it was committed.

Art. 14. In urgent cases the fugitive may, even by virtue of a telegraphic request, be placed under provisional arrest until the demanding nation presents to the requested nation, within the period to be fixed by the latter, and which shall not exceed two months, the formal request duly substantiated.

Section 1. All responsibility arising from the provisional detention shall be borne by the nation requesting the latter.

Art. 15. When the documents accompanying the request are deemed insufficient or irregular, owing to form, the requested Government shall return them in order that the deficiencies may be supplied or the defects corrected, and the party, if under arrest, shall remain under arrest until the period referred to in the foregoing article has expired.

Art. 16. The request for extradition, as regards the formalities connected with it, the decision as to whether it shall be admitted, and the admission and weighing of any defense which may be made against it, shall, as far as is not contrary to the provisions of this code, be subject to the decision of the competent authorities of the nation of refuge, in accordance with the legislation of that nation.

Section 1. The right of the individual demanded to utilize the remedy of habeas corpus or amparo shall be guaranteed in all cases, as shall also the right to demand release on bail, provided the conditions prescribed by the law of the demanding nations are fulfilled.

Art. 17. Together with the person claimed, or even subsequently, there shall be seized and delivered all articles found in his possession or deposited or hidden in the nation of refuge and which may have occurred in the perpetration of the punishable act or which may have been obtained by means of this act, as well as those which may serve as convicting evidence.

1. These articles shall be delivered up, even though because of the death or flight of the fugitive, the extradition does not take place, provided it has already been granted. If it has not yet been granted, the proceedings shall continue for that purpose.

2. Articles seized and which are in the possession of third parties, or in the hands of the offender but belonging to third parties, shall not be surrendered unless the latter are heard and state whatever objections they may have, and the articles shall be restored to them, if they are entitled thereto, without any expense, upon the termination of the proceedings.

Art. 18. The fugitive shall be taken, by agents of the requested nation, to the frontier of the latter, or to the port which is most appropriate for embarkation, and he shall there be delivered to the agents of the requesting nation.

Art. 19. The transit of the extradited party through the territory of a third nation shall be permitted upon the mere extradition of the original copy or an authentic transcript of the document granting the extradition, provided the offense is also punishable according to the laws of such third nation.

1. If the extradited party is a citizen of the third nation, the granting of the passage shall be optional.

2. The transit shall take place under the escort of agents of the third nation.

ART. 20. The expenses of the extradition shall be borne by each nation within the limits of its territory. Those of transportation through intervening nations, or by sea, shall be borne by the requesting nation.

ART. 21. A nation which secures the extradition of a person who has not been convicted shall be obliged to communicate the final sentence to the nation granting extradition, as rendered in the trial for which the extradition was requested.

ART. 22. The extradition of persons accused of acts of anarchy may be requested, provided the legislation of both nations punishes such acts. In this case the extradition shall be granted, even if the penalty prescribed is less than two years' imprisonment.

ART. 23. The person demanded may be restored to liberty and shall not be again arrested for the same cause if, after the extradition has been granted, the proper diplomatic or consular officer fails to send him to his destination within 20 days from the date on which he was placed at his disposal.

ART. 24. Existing treaties shall remain in force so far as they are not contrary to the foregoing principles or afford greater facilities for extradition, especially as regards offenses which warrant extradition and as regards the preference in granting it when it is requested by several nations on the same date.

The nations may likewise conclude new agreements on extradition provided they observe these conditions.

EXHIBIT 16.

Minutes of the sixth regular session.

[Extract.]

On July 17, 1912, at 3 p. m., the session was opened. * * *

* * * The president states that, when the previous session adjourned, he thought of having a copy prepared of the approved draft on extradition, in order to receive the signatures of the delegates present; but in view of the opinion of the majority of the latter (which he heard) to the effect that the labors of the commission should not have assigned to them the character of final treaties, he agreed with the delegates that the chair should merely authenticate the copies which are to be sent to the Governments here represented.

The order of the day is now taken up, consisting of a discussion and vote on the report of the committee charged with preparing a draft on the execution of foreign judgments.

The secretary general reads the report, first giving explanations of the omissions and discrepancies which are noted in the printed copies distributed among the delegates. When the reading is finished, Dr. Candido de Oliveira, of Brazil, sends to the desk the draft he had prepared and of which the committee had meanwhile adopted some ideas.

The report having been placed in discussion, Dr. Victor Castillo, of Mexico, takes the floor and sets forth some lengthy considerations regarding what transpired in the committee regarding the difficulties which it encountered (as mentioned in its written note), and he finished by proposing that the Commission of Jurists, in view thereof, decide to send the report, the drafts annexed thereto, and the respective amendments to that one of the committees charged with the study of private international law which has to do with the execution of foreign judgments.

This proposal being placed in discussion, Drs. Candido de Oliveira, of Brazil, and Alberto Elmore, of Peru, speak against it, as does also Dr. Victor Castillo, of Mexico, in reiteration of his arguments. The president states that as no one else wishes to speak he will declare the discussion closed, and he will call for a vote first on the proposition of the delegate of Mexico.

The proposal is approved, in view whereof the president declares that the Chair will send the whole matter under discussion to the sixth committee, which is to meet at Lima, and which appears to him to be the competent one.

DRAFT ON THE EXECUTION OF JUDGMENTS AND LETTERS ROGATORY.

The special committee encountered serious difficulties in preparing a draft on the execution of foreign judgments which should embrace all the points which this subject should cover. The opinion was then expressed in the committee by one of its members (this being appended separately as a note to this draft) regarding the impossibility of arranging this draft independently of the data which would be necessary in order to obtain the probable consent of the interested nations, these data being properly deemed necessary by the international commission in order that the other committees might undertake their work, but in the case of our committee they were deemed unnecessary in spite of the fact that the question submitted to our study so intimately concerns the sovereignty of the nations.

The said note is also founded on a variety of systems followed by the legislation of the American nations, which systems are difficult to harmonize in spite of the great spirit of conciliation with which those who sign the present draft are imbued.

The most serious difficulty seems to relate to a lack of knowledge of the system to be adopted by the fifth and sixth committees, which are instructed to present a draft code of private international law, so that the work projected by us lacks the unity which is essential to every conscientious work if we were now to decide in favor of some system.

The committee being aware of the force of these arguments, nevertheless thought that it ought to perform its duty, even though in an insufficient manner, according to its own view, provided it obeyed, as far as possible, the instructions which it received from this honorable assembly. Even though it does not succeed in attaining anything but an embodiment, as a principle of international law, of the execution of judgments rendered abroad, nevertheless, in view of the impossibility of accepting a uniform system, we believe that the only thing possible at the present time consists in respecting in this point the law of the country of execution.

This circumstance greatly diminishes the sphere of our action; but, on the other hand, we leave the field open for the study of more important questions by the fifth and sixth committees, which, with the draft which we now present, will encounter no obstacle in adopting the system which they may deem most suitable to propose to the Commission of Jurists.

We must state, as an homage to the illustrious author of the draft presented by the Brazilian Government, his excellency Mr. Lafayette Rodrigues Pereira, that the special committee accepted in general the articles of his draft with the modifications suggested by the difficulties set forth.

The committee, moreover, deemed it necessary in order to sanction a universal practice among nations and in order to better elucidate the ideas of some of the articles of the draft, to add one relating to letters rogatory in connection with court proceedings during trial, likewise taken from the Lafayette draft.

In view of the foregoing, we submit the following to the Commission of Jurists:

ARTICLE 1. A judgment rendered in one nation shall be capable of being executed in another.

ART. 2. In order that it may be admitted to execution, it will be necessary for the judgment to first obtain the proper exequatur or approval of the executive or judicial branch, in accordance with the laws in force in the country where the judgment is to be executed.

ART. 3. The granting of the exequatur shall be subject to the following requirements:

(1) The judgment shall be provided with the external formalities showing its authenticity.

(2) It shall have become final in accordance with the legislation of the country in which it has been rendered.

(3) It shall not be contrary to the laws of public order of the nation in which it is admitted to execution.

(4) It shall have been preceded by a summons of the parties.

ART. 4. It shall be necessary to present to the executing judge an authentic translation of the judgment in the language of the country in which the judgment is to be executed.

ART. 5. A foreign judgment which has received an exequatur or approval shall become final.

ART. 6. The foregoing provisions are applicable to arbitral awards whose authenticity and effectiveness are attested by a certificate of the court of the country in which they have been rendered.

ART. 7. The execution proceedings and incidents thereof shall be governed by the laws and practices in force in the nation in which the judgment is to be executed.

ART. 8. Letters rogatory sent by the judge of one district to that of another shall be subject to compulsory execution when they request the performance of certain acts or formalities of importance during the course of legal proceedings, such as the summoning of parties, the taking of testimony, inspections, examinations of books, taking of oaths, etc.

The requested judge shall observe the formalities of the laws of his country.

Rio de Janeiro, Monroe Palace, July 22, 1912.

Article 1 accepted on condition that the judgment to be executed is not opposed to the laws of the country of execution.

(Signed) ROBERTO ANCIZAR.
A. BATRES JÁUREGUI.
VICTOR MANUEL CASTILLO.

The committee charged with preparing at this meeting a draft on the execution of judgments can not, according to my idea, duly fulfill its mission for the following reasons:

The idea which prevailed in the international commission when it divided between several committees the preparation of the drafts of a codification of international law was based on a desire to give greater solidity and constancy to the work undertaken, especially from a practical standpoint, and to this end the said commission approved the directing part of the opinion which imposes on the committee before undertaking their work the duty of requesting of each Government in regard to the subject indicated information on the internal legislation of its respective country, the judicial or administrative resolutions, conventions, international cases which have occurred, and settlements which have been given them, and finally the mode of regulation which these Governments deem most suitable for the matter under consideration. I do not see any reason why, since this rule was considered very appropriate and suitable for the other committees, an exception should be made in the case of our committee in a matter which so intimately concerns the sovereignty of the nations.

The diversity of systems adopted in American legislations, from the necessity of an exequatur, accompanied by the possibility of a contentious suit and the intervention of the public prosecutor, to the simple decision of a judge of first instance, rendered on a petition by a party and without summoning the litigants; from those which admit only of the execution of judgments which have been brought about by a personal action to those which give executory force to any judgment, even if rendered by default, with the exception of those which offend recognized public order; this constitutes another obstacle in the way of the committee's entertaining the fond hope of arriving in a short time at an acceptable conclusion, even though its members be animated, as they are, with the best spirit of conciliation.

Moreover, the international commission appointed two committees (the fifth and sixth) charged with the elaboration of the drafts on private international law, so that we could not, without breaking the unity of the work, without knowing the system to be adopted by these committees, work out beforehand a draft on the execution of judgments which might deviate from the trend given them by those committees. Nor shall it be said that we can accept general or optional principles or exclude from the draft the indispensable examination of the international jurisdiction which is inevitably entailed by the application of the dominant system accepted in each country, for we should thus be performing an exceedingly deficient work on the one hand and an unnecessary work on the other, since there is not an American nation which does not, with more or less restrictions, admit the execution in its territory of judgments or decisions of foreign judges.

From what has been said I am of opinion, subject to the better judgment of my illustrious colleagues, that the International Commission of Jurists should be requested to permit our special committee to present its work after the committees charged with the drafts on private international law have adopted the system which they are to present in the way of a draft for its approval at the next session of the Commission of Jurists.

Candido de Oliveira, with restrictions. The Brazilian delegate thinks there is no difficulty in the immediate arrangement of the draft relating to the execution of foreign judgments which the Commission of Jurists almost unanimously thought ought to be prepared at this same session.

The jurists of the several nations previously had knowledge of the two drafts prepared by the Brazilian Government to serve as a basis for the discussion.

In the draft on private international law there was Chapter VII, which deals with the very subject the examination of which was intrusted to this committee.

Even if it were a case of a new law, which can only be in force after approval by the legislative branch of each nation, it would matter little if rules were established which were contrary to some principles laid down in the local laws.

The very purpose of private international law is to settle conflicts between legislations.

I therefore think that we ought to perform a more complete work than that outlined by the majority of the committee.

Some of the ideas which I expressed during the discussion were, to be sure, accepted and form part of the draft which is to be submitted to the consideration of the illustrious general commission. However, I deem that the following provisions should not be left aside, they having been embodied in the draft which I had the honor to submit to the committee and which the latter revised in the draft which it prepared.

Thus it is suitable that the following be added:

> To article 6, No. 1:
> The territorial judge or court shall not have the authority to modify, alter, derogate, supersede, or annul the judgment; he shall confine himself solely to declaring the judgment not subject to execution in case it contains a decision which infringes or offends laws of public order.

Let the following also be added:

> ART. 9. Independently of the approval and solely on exhibition of the judgment of bankruptcy and of the certificates of appointment, in authentic form, of the legal representatives of the creditors these representatives shall be authorized, as mandatories, to demand, in the nation where the judgment is being executed, proceedings tending to preserve the rights of the creditors, collect debts, compromise, if they have powers of attorney for this purpose, and bring actions without the obligation of furnishing bond or costs. However, the attorney who institutes judicial proceedings shall be liable for these costs
> 1. Any acts which involve the execution of judgments, such as the receiving and sale of the property of the bankrupt, shall be performed only after the judgment is rendered executory, by means of the approval or exequatur, the forms of the local law being observed.
> 2. Notwithstanding the approval or exequatur, the creditors domiciled in the nation where the judgment is executed and who have mortgages on property there situated shall be prohibited from demanding their claims and foreclosing the mortgaged property.
> 3. Concordats and other means of forestalling a declaration of bankruptcy shall be subject to approval or exequatur, and they shall only be binding on those creditors who have been summoned to take part therein.

Final meeting of the commission.

[Extract from the Jornal do Comercio (Rio de Janeiro) July 20, 1912.]

The seventh meeting of the Commission of Jurists was held yesterday. * * *

The floor was taken by Dr. Epitacio Pessôa, who gave a summary of the labors; by Dr. Zorilla de San Martin, delegate from Uruguay, in behalf of all the foreign delegates; and finally by Dr. Lauro Müller, who gave thanks in the name of the Brazilian Government and people.

The speech of Dr. Epitacio Pessôa was in part as follows:

> The work of the International Commission of Jurists being terminated for the present, in accordance with the opinion approved on the 5th instant, at its second regular session, I must, before declaring the work to be adjourned until the time assigned for our second meeting (June, 1914), present to you a slight sketch of the work accomplished during this first period.
> At the first regular session, held on June 28, the delegations from Argentina and Chile presented a statement proposing that, before any work were undertaken on the codification, a committee of five members be appointed to secure the opinions of the several delegations regarding the underlying idea of the codification, the subjects which it should embrace, the method of work connected therewith, and any other points which might be suggested by the delegations, and to ascertain wherein and to what extent an agreement might be reached.

On July 6th the committee appointed presented, together with its opinion, a draft of internal rules and a draft on organization and method of work, and proposed besides: (1) That there be appointed two committees of five members each, one to prepare during these very sessions a draft on extradition and another on foreign judgments; (2) that the month of June, 1914, be set as the date for the next session of the International Commission of Jurists. This opinion was approved at the session of the 8th instant. * * * The aforementioned draft on organization and method of work provides for the division of the International Commission of Jurists into six special committees, four for the codification of public international law and two for that of private international law, which committees are to act, during the interval between the two meetings, as follows: The first at Washington, with the privilege of subdividing into two parts; the second at Rio de Janeiro; the third at Santiago de Chile; the foutrh at Buenos Aires; the fifth at Montevideo; and the sixth at Lima. The first four are to have in charge the codification of the following subjects of public law: The first, maritime war and the rights and duties of neutrals; the second, land war, civil war, and claims arising from such wars; the third, a state of peace; and the fourth, pacific settlement of controversies and organization of international courts. Private law was distributed as follows: To the Montevideo committee, capacity, status of foreigners, family rights, and successions; to the Lima committee, everything not comprised within this enumeration, including penal law.

Each special committee is to request of the American Governments, in regard to the subject allotted to it, minute information regarding the internal legislation of the nation, its judicial and administrative precedents, conventions, usages, settlements of international cases, and finally the mode of settlement which these Governments deem most suitable for the subject in question; and when in possession of these data it is to proceed to a codification of the point within its jurisdiction, taking into consideration the draft codes presented by the Brazilian Government, the principles in regard to which an agreement already exists in conventions or laws, the treaties of Montevideo of 1889, the labors of the Pan American conferences, etc. The drafts worked out by the committees, as well as those subjects on which it is impossible to come to an agreement, are to be submitted to the international commission at its next sessions in 1914.

I take pleasure in stating that the third and sixth special committees have already met here and arranged the plan of their labors.

In accordance with the proposition approved at the second session, the committees were appointed which are to take charge of the drafts on extradition and the execution of foreign judgments.

The draft on extradition, presented afterwards, was approved at the session of the 1[illegible], and, in its final form, at the session of the 16th, and it will be sent to the American Governments in accordance with what was decided upon at the convention of August 23, 1906.

As to the draft on the execution of foreign judgments, it was submitted to the international commission at the session of the 17th, and, on motion of the delegation from Mexico and a vote of the majority of the commission, it was deferred to the sixth special committee of Lima for such consideration as it might deserve.

The International Commission of Jurists thus worked from June 26 until July 19, having held six regular sessions. During this period of time it prepared a draft on extradition and arranged the plans for its future labors.

We might have done more if the drafts offered by Brazil as a basis for the labors of the commission had been known to all the delegates after their distribution among the several nations, and if, on the other hand, all the Governments had furnished their representatives with the necessary instructions regarding the principal points of the codification, as had been laid down at the Pan American conference of 1906, so that the commission might immediately, with decision and method, begin the preparation of the two codes, as was the reason and object of its convocation. Nevertheless, the first efforts of the International Commission of Jurists should not be considered sterile along the line of accomplishing the extraordinary labor which the codification of the public and private international law of the two Americas will be. The working out of the draft on extradition—a matter of frequent application and of evidently practical scope—is already an accomplished fact, being the first result obtained in this crusade in which we are engaged, and at the same time it attests the commission's capacity for labor. * * *

NOTE.—The official protocol of the proceedings at the seventh meeting of the Commission of Jurists has not been received, and this extract from the Jornal do Comercio is substituted, so that the present record may be complete.

REVOLUTION. ABDICATION OF THE MANCHU RULERS. ESTABLISHMENT OF A PROVISIONAL REPUBLICAN GOVERNMENT. CONCERTED ACTION OF THE POWERS. CORRESPONDENCE CONCERNING RECOGNITION OF THE REPUBLIC OF CHINA.

Note.—Early in the disturbances the revolutionary military leaders in the Yangtze provinces and in southern China established a cabinet form of government with Nanking as headquarters, and convoked an assembly composed of their representatives. On December 29, 1911, this Nanking assembly unanimously elected Dr. Sun Yat Sen Provisional President of the Republic of China and he was inaugurated on January 1, 1912. On February 12 the Manchu Emperor abdicated, vesting the sovereignty in the people, declaring for a republican form of government, and appointing Yuan Shih Kai to organize such a government. On February 15 Yuan was elected Provisional President by the Nanking assembly, to succeed Dr. Sun, who resigned in his favor. Yuan was inaugurated at Peking March 10, and the Nanking assembly, with the approval of the Peking authorities, adopted a provisional constitution providing for the calling of a representative national assembly to adopt a permanent constitution and elect a president, thereby providing for the normal establishment of constitutional government. The national assembly was to meet at Peking within 10 months after the promulgation of the provisional constitution; meantime the authority of the State was to be exercised by an Advisory Council, the Provisional President, and his Cabinet.

American Legation,
No. 253.] Peking, June 5, 1911.

Sir: At the present time there are not lacking signs of a renewed and somewhat widespread discontent among the Chinese toward their Manchu rulers. This feeling seems to have arisen first from the evidence of the weakness of the Central Government in dealing with Russia and Japan over territorial jurisdiction in Mongolia and Manchuria, and with Great Britain in the Yunnan-Burma border delimitation dispute, and in the opium trade arrangements. The organization of the Provincial and National Assemblies offers the people a new method of voicing their discontent, from which they soon drift into an attitude of antagonism to the Central Government. For several months past rumors have been in circulation all over the Empire to the effect that the foreign powers were planning the partition of China. These rumors have been circulated by the native press and from mouth to mouth in all parts of the country with a persistency which suggests some organized activity with the intention of stirring up the people against foreigners and against their own Government. * * *

I have instructed those of our consuls who have reported to me on this general subject that they should take advantage of every opportunity to impress upon the Chinese officials that there is absolutely no foundation for the wild rumors current that China is to be partitioned among certain of the powers, and that the Chinese populace should not be allowed to proceed with any supposed defensive measures because of such rumors. I moreover instructed them that they might well impress upon all the local authorities with whom they came in contact the urgent necessity, for China's own sake, that the public peace be preserved, and that with this end in view they might find it beneficial to join with their colleagues in the event of its being decided by the local consular body to take concerted action in adopting necessary measures to suppress effectually the circulation of any inflammatory literature and bring to an end this foolish movement, which is only calculated to deceive ignorant people to instigate riots and disturbances, thus endangering the lives and property of all foreigners, Americans included.

The movement to organize a militia among the people (kuo min chun) has for its ostensible motive the lending of assistance to the Central Government against the aggressions of foreign nations, but it is generally understood both by the officials and the people that such a militia, if organized, would be used to intimidate the Central Government and enforce any demands which might be made by the people. The Government is therefore very wisely discouraging the movement. * * *

The strong stand taken by the Central Government in regard to the construction and control of all the main lines of railway in the Provinces, the conclusion of foreign loans contrary to the wishes of the people, and the refusal to convene an extra session of the National Assembly for the discussion of the budget and loans, have exasperated the radical element of the people to an extreme degree. * * *

The Government is however paying no attention to the opposition of the people, but has issued a series of strong edicts announcing its determination to carry out unswervingly the policy adopted. The probable effect of this unwonted exhibition of firmness on the part of the Government will be that the opposition of the radicals will expend itself in violent speeches. The situation can easily become critical, however, so that it requires careful watching.

But all articles supplied to Imperial Government by foreign nations will be confiscated; treaties hereafter concluded with Imperial Government will not be recognized; foreign powers assisting Imperial Government will be considered enemies. AMERICAN EMBASSY, Tokyo, October 15, 1911.

The Japanese Government expects to be asked by the Chinese Government to put down the rebellion by force in case it becomes more serious. Japan will refuse to take any action whatever unless Japanese interests are seriously menaced. Disorders will be allowed to continue indefinitely unless the powers urge Japan to act. Japanese Government will then be ready to take speedy and efficient action, which Russia will not oppose.

This relates only to China proper. If the rebellion becomes serious in Manchuria, Japan and Russia will send troops at once without consulting the powers. Twenty thousand Japanese soldiers can reach Peking before any other powers could have a man there. Five thousand British troops at Hongkong are unable to leave through fear of Canton.

I have urged upon Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs that Japan take no action without previously consulting the United States Government. He promised to let me know before anything is done, and added that Japan and the United States were the only powers in a position to act promptly.

Japan will, I believe, act independently of other countries; whatever she does will be with a view to making herself indispensable to the future government of China.

SIR: In continuation of my No. 349 of October 11, 1911,[1] I have the honor to report that * * * taking a general survey of the Empire one cannot but admit that the present Manchu Dynasty is face to face with the gravest crisis in its history. Unless a reconciliation can be effected there is at hand either a division of the Empire or the entire overthrow of the Manchus. If Yuan Shih-Kai takes the leadership and is successful in winning back the disaffected provinces by the introduction of a reformed government, the dynasty may be saved. Otherwise there seems but little hope of recovering control of the south except by the assistance of a foreign power. * * * The Cabinet is without a definite policy except that of endeavoring to persuade Yuan Shih-Kai to save the country. The Court appears to be terror-stricken and princes are preparing for flight. * * * The consuls have carefully refrained from any acknowledgment of the revolutionary authorities, but since the Imperial authorities have fled they do not consider it possible to avoid all intercourse. The doyen of the diplomatic corps in circulating the telegram[2] expressed the opinion that the consuls could not avoid holding intercourse with General Li on matters affecting the security of foreign life and property, and that they should be allowed a discretionary power of deciding on the spot what questions fall within this category.

No. 363.] AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, November 22, 1911.

SIR: * * * On November 11 Mr. Wu Ting-Fang, former Minister to the United States, sent a telegram to the Legation, asking the Legation to transmit to the Regent a message from the revolutionists' Government urging the abdication of the Emperor. The Legation, of course, took no action in the matter. * * *

The thing most to be feared in the attempt to establish republican government in China is that after the Manchus are removed, the common hatred of whom forms the bond of union among the seceding provinces, there will be no sentiment to bind them together. * * * The term which they use to express the conception of the form of government desired is confederation or, more freely, a federation of commonwealths. The thought that is uppermost in their minds in using this phrase undoubtedly is "local autonomy." I had occasion to point out the difficulties in the way of preserving a just balance between local self-government and national supremacy when a delegation from the National Assembly, representing eight different provinces, called upon me on the 20th instant to ask my advice as to the best course to take in the present crisis. Upon inquiry I learned that they had not yet called upon other ministers but intended to do so later; that they had come first to me because of the friendly interest in China's welfare shown by the American people. I am inclined to believe that they were influenced also by the fact that our own Government is such a federation of States as they desire. I replied to them that I could not as American Minister interfere in their domestic politics, but that I was deeply interested in the welfare of China and hoped they would soon be able to restore peace to their country. I pointed out the need of a long period of preparation to fit people for the exercise of self-government and called attention to the differences that sometimes spring up in our own land between the States and the general Government, pointing out the value of our Supreme Court as an agency for the adjustment of these questions. They expressed themselves as pleased with the conference and stated that they were happy to find that their views coincided with my own. I must own, however, that the present National Assembly does not wield much influence, since the Provinces from which its members come, for the most part, refuse any longer to recognize the Peking Government.

The British, German and Japanese ministers, the French and Russian chargés, and myself held an informal meeting this evening to discuss the situation, which, we agreed, is daily growing worse, and unless a peace agreement result from the meeting at Shanghai[1] on the 18th, anarchy is near at hand; hence it was thought advisable to exert some moral pressure on both sides to bring them together. The Russian Chargé suggested that an informal and unofficial note be sent by each of us to Tong Shao Yi and Wu Ting Fang (representing the respective sides) and worded as follows:

> Very confidential. The ——— legation at Peking has been instructed by its Government to make the following unofficial representation to the Commissioners entrusted with the duty of negotiating the conditions of the reestablishment of peace in China:
> The ——— Government considers that the continuation of the present struggle in China seriously affects not only the country itself but also the material interests and the security of foreigners. While maintaining the attitude of strict neutrality adopted by it up to the present time, the ——— Government considers that it is its duty in an unofficial manner to call the attention of the two delegations to the necessity of arriving as soon as possible at an understanding capable of putting an end to the present conflict, being persuaded that this attitude responds to the desires of both parties in question.

The Japanese Chargé d'Affaires at Washington to the Secretary of State.

[Memorandum—Extract—Translation. Composed of the substance of a telegram received by the Japanese chargé d'affaires from his Government. Handed to the Secretary of State December 18, 1911.]

While realizing from the first the very serious nature of the present disturbance in China, the Japanese Government have so far found wisdom in abstaining from taking any special steps in connection therewith and have confined themselves to the position of keeping watch over developments of the situation. Progress of events however appear to bring a keener apprehension that the situation is growing worse. The dignity and power of the Manchu Dynasty have been reduced to naught. [Here follows a review of the Imperial Government's condition.]

On the other hand the revolutionists, who are divided among different localities, evidently lack cohesion and a real leader. [Review of the situation of the revolutionists.]

If this state of affairs is allowed to continue indefinitely not only will it arrest trade and commerce but may eventuate in an anti-foreign uprising somewhat similar to the Boxer trouble. Besides, with the approaching winter the indigent condition of millions of people who barely emerged from the effect of the recent flood and famine is likely to give rise to many acts of wantonness on the part of the newly enlisted soldiers and the otherwise peaceful populace in different localities. In such circumstances there can be little or no hope for the revolutionists successfully to maintain order in localities under their occupation.

The fundamental point of controversy in China to-day is in the choice between monarchy and republic. In the opinion of the Japanese Government however it would seem essentially difficult in a country like China to adopt a republican form of government nor do they believe that the Chinese people are at all prepared to carry into effect such a system of government even if it were adopted; especially when the actual state of affairs of the revolutionists' side is such as above reviewed there is little likelihood of their proving equal to the task they have imposed upon themselves. Yet, on the other hand, the powerlessness of the Manchu Dynasty can no longer be disputed. To restore its authority and let it reign over and govern the country under the old system would be equally beyond practicability.

Accordingly the best way to meet the present situation in China seems, in the opinion of the Japanese Government, to be by establishing practically a Chinese rule under nominal reign of the Manchu Dynasty, thus insuring on the one hand due respect for the rights of the Chinese people and checking, on the other, the arbitrary exercise by the Manchus of their power, and dismissing the impracticable idea of a republic. Fortunately enough the new Articles of Constitution, to which the Regent on behalf of the throne has solemnly sworn adherence, are already there. Imperfect as they are, they may nevertheless be helpful to the situation. It would thus appear to be very wise for China of to-day to adopt the course above indicated and endeavor to adjust its affairs accordingly.

Such being the case the Japanese Government deem it advisable to bring both sides to terms by making, on the one hand, the Manchu Dynasty accept the above principle and realize the wisdom of thus maintaining its reign, and making, on the other, the revolutionists understand not only the impracticability of establishing a republic, but the danger of such a scheme to the existence of the whole Empire as well as to the welfare of the Chinese themselves, leaving in the meantime the question of future guaranty for observance of the terms—that is to say, the maintenance of the present Dynasty and respect of the position of the Chinese—to the concert of the powers having important interests in China.

These are the views the Japanese Government take of the present situation in China, and they desire to be informed of what may be the views of the United States Government on the situation.

IMPERIAL JAPANESE EMBASSY,
Washington (Undated).

File No. 893.00/785.

[Aide Memoire.]

The reports received by the American Government from its representatives in China lead it to share the apprehension as to the seriousness of the present situation there expressed in the memorandum of the Imperial Japanese Government presented to the Secretary of State on the 18th instant. These reports are further confirmed by the statements of responsible Chinese officials to the effect that the situation is critical, with the result that both Chinese and foreigners suffer.

It was these considerations that led the American Government cordially to approve the recent suggestion[1] emanating from the foreign representatives at Peking that some moral pressure should be exerted on both sides to bring them together in order that a peace agreement might result from the conference at Shanghai which convened on the 18th instant, and that to that end each present, with the authorization of their respective Governments, an informal and unofficial note to the commissioners representing both the parties in question.

The language of the note as drafted by the representatives at Peking commended itself to the Government of the United States in that while it did not minimize the serious effects of the present disturbances not only upon China itself but also upon the material interest and security of foreigners and emphasized the necessity of arriving as soon as possible at an understanding capable of putting an end to the present conflict, it still adhered to the attitude of strict neutrality adopted up to the present time by the common consent of the powers.

The Government of the United States believes that this joint action by the powers may well be considered as a first step toward the solution of the important questions presented by the memorandum of the Imperial Japanese Government, and would therefore be inclined to await the outcome of the present effort, reserving for future consideration by the concert of powers having important interests in China what further measures may be conducive to stable and responsible government in China.

[Memorandum.—Translation of the substance of the telegram received by the Japanese Chargé d'Affaires from his Government. Handed to the Secretary of State December 21, 1911.]

In reference to the views of the Imperial Government on the present situation in China, which have been communicated to the Government to which you are accredited, the Imperial Government had also laid them before the British Government for an expression of the latter's view. Prior to this the British Minister at Peking, at the request of Yuan Shih Kai, instructed the British Consul General at Hankow to use his good offices between the Government and the revolutionaries, with consequent agreement between the two parties to the articles of armistice leading to the present negotiations for a settlement between them.

In view of what has thus been reached, the British Government approached the Imperial Government, independently of the latter's views above referred to, with the proposition of assisting the negotiations between Yuan Shih Kai and the revolutionaries. The proposition having been agreed to by the Imperial Government, it has been decided that the two Governments of Japan and Great Britain jointly lend assistance to the contending parties in their negotiations. This move on the part of the two Governments being however intended as no more than affording an assistance of merely benevolent nature in the interests of the parties directly concerned, it is hoped that the Government to which you are accredited will understand accordingly.

The Undersecretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Langley, has just sent me the following note:

> About a fortnight go Sir John Jordan suggested that the Japanese Government should be invited to cooperate with us in assisting the negotiations between Yuan Shih Kai and the revolutionaries. He pointed out that it would strengthen our hands if we were in a position to let it be known that the other powers were with us.

> That there is no change in the policy of joint action hitherto pursued is quite clear from the telegrams subsequently received from Sir John Jordan, showing that he is in constant communication with his American colleague as well as with the Japanese minister; and as late as the 20th instant the American, British, French, German, Japanese and Russian representatives at Peking made a joint communication to the Commissioners of the Peace Conference at Shanghai, which shows conclusively that there is no change of policy.

Government and the revolutionaries, and His Majesty's Minister proposed that the Japanese Government be invited to cooperate in assisting these negotiations, to which proposal His Majesty's Government at once assented in view of the terms of the Anglo-Japanese alliance. Instructions were accordingly sent to His Majesty's Minister at Peking and His Majesty's Consul General in Shanghai.

Sir John Jordan, at the time that he made the above proposal, added that it would strengthen his hands if he were in a position to let it be known that the other powers were with him, but that concerted action of more than two or three legations was too unwieldy to be workable. His Majesty's Government agreed with this view, and in order that Sir John Jordan might continue to keep in close touch with his United States colleague, they reminded him of the wish expressed a short time before by the United States Government that they and His Majesty's Government should act in perfect accord in the Chinese question.

From the information received from Peking there is no doubt that all legations are working together and are kept as fully informed as is practically possible of everything that passes between Yuan Shih Kai and His Majesty's Minister. His Majesty's Government intend to adhere strictly to the policy of concerted action at Peking and to take no steps which are not fully approved by all the powers interested.

Sun is leaving Shanghai tomorrow for Nanking to be inaugurated. He thus ignores the peace conference at Shanghai and the proposals to submit the form of government to a national convention.

Today Yuan asked if a suggestion could not be made by the six powers that the armistice be prolonged for several months or a year, each side controlling territory now in its possession. The powers might well urge both sides to prolong the armistice for such a reasonable time as would allow the selection of delegates to the convention. Yuan's insistence that the convention be fairly representative of the people seems reasonable.

The fact of holding communication, whether oral or written, with the revolutionary leaders can not be regarded as a recognition of the revolutionists as a responsible government. The revolutionists, however, being in control of the public machinery of local government and administering the functions of state throughout various districts, are to be held accountable for any acts committed therein affecting the public interests of the United States and the security of American life and property. Peking, January 16, 1912.

Sir: I have the honor to report that ever since my return here the situation has been so confused and so obscured with doubt and uncertainty that it has been impossible to make any satisfactory estimate of it. It seems to change every day. * * *

There are various estimates of Yuan. He is generally regarded as the ablest man that China has to-day. * * * I have no doubt he came here in good faith, intending to support the Manchu dynasty. But he has been overwhelmed by the tide of opposition to the Manchus. * * * The result is Yuan has been wavering and hesitating and listening to all kinds of advice. It is manifest that up to this moment he has not formulated any definite policy; he is simply drifting with the tide. * * * Yuan appears to have reluctantly come to the conclusion that the Manchus must go, but he has not had the nerve, or else has not deemed it wise, to tell them so. * * * It is believed, however, that it is only a question of days when abdication will be announced. * * *

The feeling in the north seems to be very strong against the south and especially against the new republic. The weakness of the republican movement in the south seems to be that it is promoted, supported, and controlled almost entirely by Cantonese influence. And Sun Yat Sen, whatever his character and ability may be, is not regarded here as a representative man. He was born on the coast. He was educated and has lived most of his life abroad. He knows nothing of the interior of China, or of the life, character, traditions, and habits of the Chinese people. There is much jealousy and many antagonisms between the provinces, and especially between the interior and coast provinces. It is therefore very doubtful if Sun Yat Sen can hold the situation or command the varied and conflicting influences which will become active once the Manchu influence is removed.

Therefore at this writing the crisis seems to be close at hand. No one is wise enough to predict what will happen.

YOUR EXCELLENCY: In reply to your note of the 31st ultimo requesting information as to the attitude of the Government of the United States with regard to conditions in China, I have the honor to state that since the beginning of the present disturbances this Government has from time to time as occasion arose exchanged views with the other interested powers—particularly France, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, and Russia, as well as the Imperial German Government—as to what course was expedient for the protection of the common interests. From these exchanges it has been quite clear that all the powers concerned were as one as to the wisdom of maintaining the policy of concerted action in the circumstances.

[1] Mutatis mutandis to the French, British, Italian, Japanese, and Russian Embassies and the Netherlands Legation at Washington.

The unanimity of this view found concrete expression in the identic note presented by the representatives of France, Great Britain, Germany, Japan, Russia and the United States simultaneously to the peace commissioners at Shanghai on December 20, as well as in the cooperative measures taken for the protection of their common interests throughout China.

The advices received by this Government, moreover, show that the other Governments concerned have likewise had similar exchanges of views and that official statements of policy to the same effect have appeared in the public press of various countries.

It is therefore evident to this Government that all the powers have up to the present by common consent not only refrained from independent action and from intervening in China's internal affairs, but have acted in full accord with their mutual assurances that they would respect its integrity and sovereignty. There happily has thus far been no reason for interference on the part of the foreign powers, inasmuch as both Imperialists and Republicans have guaranteed the life and property of the foreign population, and the latest reports tend to strengthen the belief that it is improbable that future developments will necessitate such interference. If, however, contrary to all expectations, any further steps should prove necessary, this Government is firm in the conviction that the policy of concerted action after full consultation by the powers should and would be maintained in order to exclude from the beginning all possible misunderstandings.

Moreover, this Government has felt it to be a corollary of the policy of strict neutrality hitherto pursued by common accord with respect to loans to China to look with disfavor upon loans by its nationals unless assured that such loans would be of neutral effect as between the contending factions, as it has also felt that the present was an occasion where there might be invoked with peculiar appropriateness the principles of the lending Governments deterring their nationals from making loans not approved as to their broad policy by their own Governments in consultation with the other interested powers.

No. 428.]

American Legation,
Peking, February 12, 1912.

Sir: I have the honor to report that the international situation here is critical, and at times very much strained. Despite the concerted action agreed upon, there is much jealousy and suspicion of each other manifested by the representatives of the six leading powers. The tendency seems to be for the English and Japanese to work together, and the intimacy between the French and Russians is marked. These combinations are, for many reasons, to be expected, but they leave the Germans and the Americans very much to themselves. * * *

All of the powers are more or less suspicious of the Americans. They seem to think we have some exclusive or personal policy in mind: that our professions of altruism are a mere blind; and that we hope or intend, somehow or somewhere, to secure an advantage, either in prestige or substance, in which the rest will have no share. * * * It was all right so long as we released indemnities, educated Chinese youth at home, and sent missionaries to China. But when we rather forcibly injected ourselves into the Hukuang loan, tried to neutralize the Manchurian railways, proposed to build the Chinchow-Aigun railway, and finally negotiated a preliminary contract for the currency loan, we were then and are now believed to entertain an active and aggressive policy, which is competitive if not hostile to all other foreign interests in China. * * *

It is therefore probable that for some time to come American influence in China will be obstructed in every way possible. It is not enough that the Chinese people may be friendly to us. They have been, and doubtless will continue to be, the subject of foreign coercion of one kind and another that deprives them of freedom of action. They will not dare to oppose either Russia or Japan. They know that all the support we can give them is sentimental and philanthropical in its character. * * *

If the necessities of market conditions once came home to the American people in such a way as to make them support a national policy in the Far East that insured the "open door" and equal opportunities, the attitude of other nations toward us might be very different. As it is, we are comparatively helpless. Diplomacy, however astute, however beneficent and altruistic it may be, if it is not supported by the force which not only commands but demands respect and consideration, will avail but little.

Sir: I have the honor to send inclosed copies in duplicate of translations of three notes[1] received last night from the Chinese Government.

The first is from the Acting Minister of Foreign Affairs of the former Imperial Government communicating the imperial edict which vests sovereignty in the people and empowers His Excellency Yuan Shih-kai, the Premier, to organize a provisional republican government. The second is from His Excellency Yuan Shih-kai, plenipotentiary for the organization of the provisional government, inclosing the terms agreed upon with respect to the treatment of the Imperial family and of the edict accompanying the same; and the third is from His Excellency Hu Wei-te, Chief of the Office of Foreign Affairs of the Provisional Government, informing me that the members of the former Cabinet, by order of the plenipotentiary, will for the present retain their portfolios.

These documents are of profound significance, marking the close of the Ta Ch'ing Dynasty and the rule of the Manchus, and ushering in a new era whose character is yet to be determined, but which will undoubtedly be marked by the return of the Chinese to the control of their country.

We are now confronted by a situation of extreme delicacy, which calls for the exercise of great forbearance on the part of the representatives of the two Provisional Governments. Only if real unselfish patriotism be manifested can the questions at issue be settled speedily and without further conflict.

The two parties having thus far respected the interests of foreigners, the Imperial Government perceives no reason for departing from that attitude.

SIR: I called yesterday upon the president of the provisional government, Dr. Sun Wen. I told Dr. Sun that I received his message regarding the activity of the Japanese and asked if he had anything to add. He replied that he had nothing more to say except to explain that the proposition for the offensive and defensive alliance with the Chinese republic came, not from the regular Japanese Cabinet through the Minister for Foreign Affairs, but from the "elder statesmen" who controlled the Japanese Government unofficially, and that the negotiations were with them. This method of managing the affair, of course, gives the Japanese Foreign Office the power to deny that any such negotiations are taking place. * * *

In the course of the conversation I told him that the American Government had tried to maintain strict neutrality throughout the present struggle in China and that we considered it the part of true friendship so to act. I assured him that not only the American Government but the mass of the American people entertained feelings of sincere friendship for the Chinese people; that we wished to see the integrity of China preserved, and we wished to allow the Chinese people to settle for themselves the question of the form of government under which they would be ruled without any outside interference; that the American legation had given no aid or support to either side, in order to avoid establishing a precedent for outside interference which might be used by other powers to prolong the civil war and weaken China. I assured him that when the Chinese had finally settled their disagreement and north and south had reunited, America would not be backward in showing her friendship. * * *

[Summary of an undated memorandum handed to the Acting Secretary of State by the Japanese Ambassador, February 23, 1912.]

IMPERIAL JAPANESE EMBASSY,
Washington.

The powers will be called upon to recognize any new and stable government established in China, and it is essential to continue under any such new order of affairs the rights, privileges and immunities of foreigners at present enjoyed. The majority of these rest upon treaty grants, but some depend upon legislative enactment or upon custom. Therefore a confirmation of all these rights, privileges and immunities should be secured by the powers at the time of recognition of any new government. At the same time they should secure from such new government formal engagements regarding the foreign indebtedness of China. In view of the foregoing the Imperial Japanese Government suggest that the principle of joint action, adhered to so successfully during the present crisis, be extended to the recognition of any new government and to the above-mentioned conditions thereof, in order to secure guaranties more satisfactory than could be obtained otherwise.

[Memorandum—Summary.]

With reference to the memorandum handed to the Acting Secretary of State on February 23 by the Ambassador of Japan, the Government of the United States welcomes this fresh affirmation by the Imperial Japanese Government of the policy of concerted action and agrees in principle to its application to the recognition of the Republic of China as far as this course will entail no delay. The Government of the United States will be glad to reply more definitely in regard to the other questions raised when more explicitly informed as to the nature and terms of the guaranties proposed. It may be said in the meantime that this Government regards the established obligations of China as holding irrespective of the form of government, and as passing automatically to the de facto provisional government with which the United States will informally deal, and thence to such ultimate government as may merit formal recognition.

MY DEAR MR. AMBASSADOR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 24th instant, regarding the recent memorandum of the Japanese Government on the question of the formal recognition of a new government in China and wherein it is suggested that such recognition be conditioned upon the giving by the new government of certain guaranties and that the concert of the powers should be continued in the consideration of this question. Besides stating that your Government agrees in principle to the suggestions of the Japanese Government, you request to be informed as to any reply this Government may make to the communication of the Japanese Government.

In reply I beg to state that in a memorandum handed to the Japanese ambassador yesterday this Government, besides welcoming the fresh affirmation by the Japanese Government of the principle of concerted action, agrees in principle to the application of that policy to the recognition of the republic of China in accordance with the accepted principles of international law, so long as no undue delay is entailed thereby. The Japanese Government was advised, moreover, that this Government would be glad to make more definite reply to the other questions raised when informed more explicitly as to the nature and terms of the proposed guaranties. The view was also expressed that the established obligations of China hold irrespective of the form of government and pass automatically in turn to the de facto provisional government and to such ultimate government as may merit formal recognition.

No. 446.] AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, March 1, 1912.

SIR: Last evening about half-past 7 o'clock we were surprised by the sound of rifle firing in different parts of the city, and almost immediately a 3-inch percussion shell landed in the compound of the marine guard. Fortunately, the shell did not explode, otherwise it would probably have killed or wounded a number of men. * * *

The rifle firing seemed very heavy in the neighborhood of the new Wai Wu Pu building, now occupied by President Yuan and his executive staff. Our first thought was that it indicated an attack upon the president, and that his assassination, so long feared, had come at last. But he is safe and the attack appears not to have been made against him. The firing soon became quite general and evidenced a concerted movement of some kind. It was evident that no conflict of any kind between contending forces was going on, because there was no volley firing; it was a case of quite general but indiscriminate shooting.

Members of the marine guard, who were out on leave, and other Americans, began to come in, and they reported that a general looting of shops on the principal streets was going on; that it was being done entirely by soldiers, assisted in some instances by the police, who were shooting indiscriminately, yelling like fiends, smashing in doors and windows, carrying off merchandise of all kinds, and setting fire to the buildings. * * *

The special phase of the outbreak, which may be said to be one redeeming feature of it, was the absence of any antiforeign demonstration. Evidently the sole purpose of the outbreak was loot.

It is said the troops engaged left the city early this morning, captured two or three trains, and have gone down the railroad toward Paoting-fu. The city seems to be free from them.

It is apparent that Yuan has little or no control over his troops. He has lost much "face" over this unfortunate affair, and the effect upon the pending negotiations with the Nanking delegation will be bad.

The following is the text of a joint resolution passed by the House of Representatives February 29:

> Whereas the Chinese Nation has successfully asserted the fact that sovereignty is vested in the people, and has recognized the principle that government derives its authority from the consent of the governed, thereby terminating a condition of internal strife; and

The text should be circulated among the American consulates in China to be discreetly given such publicity as will be conducive to the interests of the United States. It may be regarded as an expression of the sympathy of the American people, through their representatives, with the new order of things in China. Due care should be taken, however, particularly with the leaders now assembled at Peking, that this action be not confused with recognition, which is a prerogative of the Executive and as to which it is the present intention of the President and the Department to proceed in harmony with the other powers by entering automatically into effective informal relations with the de facto provisional government, pending the establishment of such ultimate government as may merit formal recognition.

No. 463.] AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, March 8, 1912.

SIR: Supplementing my No. 446, of March 1, 1912, I have the honor to further report that the outbreak in Peking which occurred on Thursday evening, February 29, continued all of that night; shooting, burning, and looting everywhere. Friday night the riot started up again, with shooting, burning, and looting going on over most of the city. Soldiers of other divisions, together with most of the police, participated in it; they looted vigorously. No apparent effort was made to suppress it.

Yuan Shih-kai seemed overwhelmed with the disaster. He was simply stunned. All evidences of authority possessed by him shriveled to nothing. He did not have a soldier or a policeman upon whom he could rely. While the storm was still raging on Saturday, about noon, Tong Shao-yi (who had taken refuge in the legation quarter) addressed a note to Sir John Jordan, the British minister and dean of the diplomatic corps, in which he said the situation was becoming more serious; he had word that a large body of troops were coming from Paoting-fu to Peking, and he suggested that the diplomatic body should be convened at once to take action to protect the city and to prevent bloodshed.

The British Minister issued an urgent call for a meeting of the diplomatic body, and it convened very soon afterwards. The diplomatic body agreed that the situation was grave. While no antiforeign feeling had been so far displayed, yet the temper of the mob, in that respect, could not be relied upon; the antiforeign feeling might develop any moment. Even the legation quarter might invite attack, not so much because it was occupied by foreigners as of the well-known fact that immense stores of valuable property had been deposited there for safety by wealthy natives.

The diplomatic body, however, deemed it inexpedient and inadvisable, at this time, for foreigners to actively interfere in the situation or to assume police control of the city. The time might arrive wherein it would be necessary to do so in order to protect human life, but that time apparently had not arrived. It was agreed, however, that conditions justified and demanded that the number of foreign troops in Peking should be increased, not so much for defensive purposes as for the effect on the Chinese. If a show of foreign force were made, it was believed it would have a restraining effect on the mob; that the legations which were in a position to do so might bring troops up from Tientsin and have them go through the streets a few times, and thereby show the irresponsible Chinese soldiers and the mob of looters following them that there was a force here which they must respect, and which they would have reason to fear if their depredations went too far or continued too long. The gravity of the situation was increased by the fact that there were some 30,000 native troops, including the Manchu contingent, in and around Peking. All of them, so far as we knew anything about them, were either in open mutiny or mutinous and aggressive in spirit, and were liable to break loose any moment. At least it was apparent that Yuan himself was afraid of them and that he did not dare to use them, or any part of them, to suppress the existing disorder; besides, many of them were at that moment actively engaged in looting. And if these forces should combine and dare to make an assault upon the legation quarter, we would have our defensive strength strained to the utmost limit to hold them off.

The British minister was of the opinion that at least 1,000 additional troops should be brought to the city at once. He said he would bring 200 men from Tientsin. The French and Japanese Ministers agreed to do the same. The Russian chargé d'affaires assented to the proposition, but did not bring any, because he did not have them at hand. I agreed to bring 100 and an additional hundred if I could. The German Minister was not present, but he afterwards brought in 100 men. I called up on the telephone Major Arrasmith, the commander of the Fifteenth Regiment, at Tientsin, stated the situation to him, and he sent 200 men. He put them on the cars that night and they arrived in Peking Sunday morning. The troops of the other nationalities followed soon after.

On Saturday evening, March 2, the riot subsided. The city was then policed, strange to say, by the old Manchu police and gendarmerie, and they are policing the city now. Fairly good order has since been preserved.

Tientsin was the next place to have trouble. On Saturday evening, March 2, the rampage started there, and was even more destructive in its depredations than in Peking.

Paoting-fu was the next place to be heard from. This is said to have been a wealthy and prosperous city. The business section of the city is wholly destroyed; the devastation is complete.

The mutinous soldiers have gone on their way looting, burning, and sacking villages in every direction. The fact is, there is general disorder throughout the entire north. And it has something of a political cast. These soldiers who broke out in Peking told missionaries here and in Paoting-fu that their conduct was incited by their opposition to the republican movement. They condemned Yuan in severe terms for having gone over to the republicans. They also complained of not receiving their pay and of reductions in the same, but still they were pronounced in their dissent with the turn political events had taken.

The revolution was comparatively easy; it had no opposition; but now the great strain, the great test, of the movement has come. It is not too much to say that the north is seething with unrest, and if the Manchus had a leader among them with a grain of courage a coup could be pulled off in the north even more easily than the triumph of the republican movement was achieved.

Even the south is not free from trouble. There is conflict at Wuchang, at Nanking and Wuhu, Canton, and elsewhere. A counter revolution is brewing at Foochow, and there is a factional contest between the civil and military authorities there. The army, whether north or south, is the disturbing, the dangerous, element in the situation. It is without discipline, without patriotism, without leadership, and is now arrogantly conscious of its power. It won the revolution, and its members know it. The soldiers do not care a fig for the collection of intelligent, amiable, spectacled young returned students now at Nanking, who are so busily engaged in writing constitutions for China. These soldiers have no intelligent conception of what a republic is, or what their relations to it ought to be, and they have no higher or stronger feeling than lust and loot.

It may be that if Yuan gets some money, so that he can pay these soldiers, he may be able to hold them in line, and he may, in time, be able to organize from them a force upon which he can depend and by which he may restore and maintain order. But as things are now it is not too much to say that the fires that blazed through the streets of Peking, Tientsin, and Paoting-fu are only a part of the flame of anarchy with which this unhappy, this distracted, country is now threatened. There is no one here, whether diplomat or what not, but fears and believes a period of great strife is before us.

MR. ACTING SECRETARY: The Federal Government will have had before it the Japanese proposition that advantage be taken of the moment when the new Chinese Government is recognized to secure the integrity of the rights, privileges, and immunities enjoyed by all foreigners in China, both by virtue of treaties and by accepted usages. Japan therefore suggests that the powers should arrive at an agreement not to recognize the new Government until they have secured from it adequate guaranties for the safeguard of their common interests. This proposition was also made by the Ambassador of Japan at St. Petersburg to the Imperial Government, which gave it its assent.

The American Ambassador to Russia to the Secretary of State.

[Telegram.—Extract.—Paraphrase.]

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
St. Petersburg, March 12, 1912.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs frankly states that Russia does not wish to see a strong military power in China. He further expressed his doubt of the ability of China to maintain law and order as a republic. Nevertheless Russia may join the four powers already interested in emergency loans to China, but with the proviso that if so her interests, notably in railways available in war, shall be strictly conserved in Manchuria, Mongolia and Western China; and with the further proviso that Russia by so joining incurs no implied recognition of the Chinese Republic.

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
St. Petersburg, March 13, 1912.

SIR: Confirming my yesterday's telegram, the Russian Government appears to be acting in good faith with the other powers. Russia is protecting her consulates in Mongolia with troops and increasing the consulates. The Russian Government is profoundly dissatisfied with the prospects in China and believes the Provisional Government a failure. Every possible influence will be used to prevent creation of another strong military power on Russia's borders, or the construction of railroads that could be used against Russia in war.

EXCELLENCY: In acknowledging the receipt of the note of March 8, in which your excellency courteously informed me of the assent of the Imperial Russian Government to the recent proposals of the Government of Japan relating to an agreement of the powers as to the recognition of the new Government of China, I have the honor to state that, as your excellency has already informally been advised, the Government of the United States likewise expressed its agreement in principle to the policy of concerted action in the recognition of the Republic of China in accordance with the accepted principles of international law, so long as no undue delay was entailed thereby, and stated that the American Government would be glad to make more definite reply to the other questions raised when informed more explicitly as to the nature and terms of the proposed guaranties. The view was expressed that the established obligations of China held irrespective of the form of government and passed automatically in turn to the de facto Provisional Government and to such ultimate government as might merit formal recognition.

I take note of the statement in your excellency's communication that in approving the idea of joint action by the powers in the defense of their general interests in China, the Imperial Russian Government reserves, in respect of Russia's particular rights and interests based on treaties and conventions, the right to take such protective measures as necessity may demand.

DEAR MR. WILSON: I wrote to you on the 21st,[1] telling you that His Majesty's Government had received from the Russian Ambassador a communication similar to that sent to your Department regarding the reserves which his Government made in agreeing to the Japanese proposals regarding the recognition of the new Chinese Government.

I informed you that Sir Edward Grey, in reply to that communication, had not then made a reference to those reserves. I am now, however, told that he has now informed the Russian Ambassador that His Majesty's Government recognize the right of Russia to take such action as may be necessary to safeguard her special rights and interests in northern Manchuria, Mongolia, and the Chinese west, in so far as such special rights and interests arise out of treaties and agreements with China.

Very sincerely, yours,

No. 531.] AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, May 2, 1912.

SIR: I have the honor to send enclosed in duplicate five clippings from the Peking Daily News[1]; three from its issue of April 30 and two from that of May 1. One of the former reports the opening of the National Council in Peking on April 29; a second gives the text of the address of the Provisional President of the Republic delivered on that occasion; and the third is an editorial comment upon the event. * * *

The opening of the Council was a noteworthy event and inasmuch as a rather serious disagreement developed among its members immediately after assembling which is but briefly mentioned in the clipping, I have the honor to explain the reference more fully.

When the Council met it at once appeared that of the 76 members reported present a large number were never elected members of this National Council but were members of the Advisory Council that formerly sat at Nanking. [The minister here gives the details of this complication.] A compromise was finally reached on the afternoon of May 1, when it was decided that the representatives of Kiangsi and Hupei in the Nanking Assembly now in Peking, who come from Provinces as yet unrepresented here, should be allowed to sit in the National Council until duly elected representatives of these Provinces shall arrive. There are six Provinces which have as yet held no election, and to those telegrams were sent yesterday urging the immediate election of representatives. * * *

The acting chairman made a few remarks in which he sought to enforce his view that this was none other than the Nanking Assembly transferred to Peking, and then introduced President Yuan Shih-kai, who was received with applause. The President read his address and on its conclusion a reply was read by the acting chairman.

The address of the President, which has been widely published in Chinese and in English, made an excellent impression upon the foreign residents of China. It will be noticed that he recognizes the financial problem as the one of paramount importance. He speaks of the necessity of borrowing foreign capital and of improving the national credit by introducing financial reform. He admitted too that China has few men qualified to undertake financial reform, and this admission may perhaps have been intended to prepare the way for the engagement of foreign expert advice. * * * In short there is more than a suspicion that the passages of the address to which attention has been called [tariff and land tax] were designed for foreign consumption.

The present coalition Government is nominally in possession of 20 Provinces, under military governors the extent of whose submission to the central Government is problematical. The north and south are not yet well fused, but the only organized resistance is in Mongolia, Kanush, Turkestan and Thibet. There is acquiescence but not hearty support on the part of the wealthy and educated, and the real will of the mass of the people is not known. The National Council cannot therefore be considered representative. The Government was established by the poltical manoeuvers of a few, not by general demand of the people. But it is the only government in sight, and recognition would strengthen its hold on the country, particularly if given by concerted action of the powers.

As intimated to you in our recent conversation the Department has received no reliable information on the subject from any source except that kindly furnished by your excellency. We have therefore not given the subject any special consideration, but with respect to similar reservations made by Japan and Russia relating to South Manchuria and to North Manchuria, Mongolia and Western China, respectively, we have been proceeding upon the understanding that the reservations in question related only to such rights and interests as were based on treaties or conventions with China, from which it seems clear that the positions of our Governments are quite in harmony in this matter, as to which, moreover, I understand that the British Government takes precisely the same view.

Memorandum of a conversation between the Acting Secretary of State and the Japanese Ambassador.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 16, 1912.

The Japanese Ambassador said that he was ordered by his Government to explain to us that, in view of Russia's reservation of rights in relation to Northern Manchuria, Mongolia and Western China, the Japanese Government had felt that silence might be misconstrued and that therefore Japan must make reservation as to eastern Inner Mongolia (bordering on Southern Manchuria) in which quarter Japan was naturally interested.

I replied that this Government would take due note of the fact that Japan desires thus to extend the reservation previously made in correspondence here and in the European capitals wherein, with regard to both Japanese and Russian reservations, this Government had been quite willing to acquiesce, on the understanding of course that the rights and interests referred to were those covered by treaty or convention.

According to information privately received by the Department, the bankers' negotiations in connection with the Chinese loan may be delayed indefinitely or even disrupted by the insistence of the Japanese and Russian financial agents upon recognition in the bankers' agreement of the political rights of Japan and Russia in Mongolia, Manchuria and elsewhere. The attitude of these representatives is taken in pursuance of instructions from their Governments.

The position of the Government of the United States in regard to these political questions is that they should be the subject of an understanding between the Governments concerned rather than between the bankers, although the bankers would doubtless be expected to subscribe to the agreement reached by the powers. The Department understands that this position is also that of the Governments of France and Great Britain.

This question you may promptly and confidentially discuss with the Foreign Office, in order to see if the Foreign Office can do something toward reaching an understanding about it with the Governments of Japan and Russia, if possible before the next session of the bankers' conference on June 15.

Confidential memorandum. The powers are in full accord, the American Government believes, in the view that a stable central government is the first desideratum in China and that formal recognition by the powers, when granted, would go far to confirm the stability of the established government.

The Provisional Government appears now to be generally in possession of the administrative machinery, to be maintaining order, and to be exercising its functions with the acquiescence of the people. The situation accordingly seems to resolve itself to the question whether there are any substantial reasons why recognition should longer be withheld.

Would the Government of (insert name of country) now be disposed to consider whether the present Chinese Government may not be regarded as so far substantially conforming to the accepted standards of international law as to merit formal recognition?

In handing the foregoing textually to the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Government to which you are accredited you may in strict confidence intimate that in this country public opinion is such that a strong demand for early recognition will probably be made through the Congress in case of undue delay of Executive action.

The French Government considers that under existing circumstances the conditions for recognition seem far from fulfilled. Until the Provisional Government shall have been succeeded by a regularly constituted parliamentary régime, according to the properly expressed desire of the people, and until such new and well-established government shall have given formal guaranty of treaty stipulations and rights of foreigners in China, the French Government does not consider that the question of recognition of the Chinese Government can be advantageously advanced.

Summary of the aide-mémoire: The Ministry for Foreign Affairs acknowledges the embassy's aide-mémoire of July 30 relating to recognition of the Chinese Republican Government. This Government is only provisional; the period for which it was elected soon expires; under its administration the conditions in China seem not to have sensibly improved; the Russian Government believes that none of the powers who have sent troops to China is thinking of recalling them. Consequently the Russian Government believes that it would be prudent to postpone formal recognition of the Chinese Republic until that Government, having been definitely established, shall have given sufficient proofs to judge of its stability.

No. 612.] AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, August 3, 1912.

SIR: Referring to your telegram [of July 20] repeated from Tokyo July 22, I have the honor to report that on July 26 I received a call from Mr. Ijuin, the Japanese Minister. He said his Government had informed him of your inquiry or suggestion concerning recognition of the Chinese Republic, presented to his Foreign Office in Tokyo through the American Ambassador. He said his Government had asked for his opinion on the subject but before replying he called to confer with me and to learn my opinion. I replied substantially as follows:

I suppose the basis for recognition is the existence of a government which has the appearance of stability or offers reasonable assurance of permanence. There may be reason to doubt whether or not the present Government in China gives evidence of such right to recognition; I had some doubt on the subject myself. But after careful consideration of the situation, I am now of the opinion that the present Government affords reasonable assurance that, if not permanent, it will at least last an indefinite time. * * * For these and other reasons I am in favor of immediate recognition and think that it will be both a friendly and helpful act on the part of the powers to give it. * * *

The Japanese Minister said that he was of my opinion, or, rather, he agreed with me upon the whole, but with him it is largely a question of the proper time. He is afraid that recognition at this time will serve to influence the ambition, increase the arrogance and add to the excitement of the young fledglings now in the Government and in the National Assembly. It is now very hard to deal with them and recognition would make it still harder.

I replied that at present, as a result of the recent Cabinet resignations, very few of the class to whom he referred are in the Government. * * * Now that they are out of the Cabinet and their places filled with men who are more closely identified with Yuan, the latter will be entitled to credit for recognition and will be made that much stronger in his position, especially in the eyes of his own people.

Mr. Ijuin seemed to accept my estimate of the situation as correct and left leaving the impression on my mind that he would report to his Government in favor of recognition.

The next day however, Mr. Midzuno, the First Secretary of the Japanese Legation, also called to see me. * * * He thinks there is a probability of considerable feeling and conflict at the coming election, and the result may be destructive of all our hopes for peace and order.

I told him I had thought of that phase of the situation. I had however made inquiry among the best informed Chinese I knew, and they all seemed to think the election will not develop any serious trouble and that Yuan is reasonably sure to be reelected.

But Mr. Midzuno was not convinced. He thinks there are enough clouds in the political sky to suggest a storm of some kind.

The day following Mr. Krupensky, the Russian Minister, also called and he brought up the same question. He was quite pessimistic in his view of future possibilities. He said he thought his Government will reply that the time for recognition has not arrived. I did not argue the question with him. * * *

I have not seen or talked with the other ministers on the subject. They are nearly all out of the city on vacations. * * *

NOTE.—The principle of concerted international action in China previously announced by the Department of State is reaffirmed in a note to the Ambassador of Great Britain, dated October 4, 1912. As this note is directly concerned with the matter of the international loan it is printed under that head.

See also the Message of the President at the beginning of this volume, page XXIV.

CHINESE LOAN NEGOTIATIONS. CONCLUSION OF THE HUKUANG RAILWAY LOAN. CORRESPONDENCE CONCERNING PROPOSED CURRENCY REFORM, INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT, AND REORGANIZATION LOANS. CURRENT-EXPENSE ADVANCES.

HUKUANG RAILWAY LOAN.[1]

NOTE.—In 1903 the Chinese Government promised the British Government that if Chinese capital should prove insufficient for building a proposed railroad from Hankow to Szechuen, British capital would be invited to participate. In 1904 a promise was made that if foreign capital should be needed, Americans and British should have the preference. Reference to this promise was made by China in replying to French capitalists who requested the concession. The British and French then arranged to discuss the loan, and the British Government inquired concerning American capital. No action was taken by the Americans and a British-French syndicate was formed, provision being made for admission of Belgian and American capital. (For. Rel. 1909, pp. 146–147, 156.)

In 1905 the British Government invited American participation but no action was taken (id. 147–148). Subsequently the British and French admitted a group of German bankers to the negotiations, which took definite form in May, 1909, in a draft agreement with the Chinese Government. On June 2, 1909, the British Government, and on June 5 the Chinese Government, were reminded by the United States of the agreement of 1904, and notified that the United States had taken no action that could be construed as a relinquishment of the right of American capital to participate (id. 145 and 148).

The British-French-German agreement with China was initialed on June 6, 1909, at Peking, for a loan of £5,500,000, subject to approval by Imperial edict (id. 148–149; 152–153). In the ensuing correspondence the British Government concurred in the American view that in international law one of two joint concessionaires has no power to fix the time when the right of the other to its share in a concession shall lapse through nonuser (id. 167), and the discussion of bases for American participation went on until May 23–24, 1910, when a supplementary agreement including American capital was drafted. (For. Rel. 1910, pp. 280–282.) Ancillary propositions concerning engineering rights and division of mileage then occupied the correspondence, into which entered in October, 1910, certain objections of the Chinese Government to the terms of the agreement, whereupon the American Minister was instructed, October 7, 1910, not to participate in forcing the loan upon China, but to continue to use his good offices to bring about an amicable adjustment at an early date (id. 291).

On March 11, 1911, the American Minister reported that after many conferences of the bankers with the Chinese authorities, it had been agreed that the Hu Kuang loan agreement should be amended to omit the branch line from Ching-men-chou to Han-yang. On March 15 the Department of State approved the amendment. (File Nos. 893.51/332 and 345.)

Postponement of the negotiations was caused by political agitation in China against the loan, which was allayed by conceding to the Chinese the right to deposit half of the proceeds of the loan during construction of the railways with the Chiaotung and Ta Ching Government Banks, sufficient amounts for one month's estimate to be transferred to the European banks as required. (File Nos. 893.51/386 and 398.)

Further changes were agreed to in regard to the railway system: The section from Ichang to the Szechuan border was included, and the Kuangtung and Szechuan sections excluded for domestic political reasons; the bankers were given the preference on equal terms in case of further loans for those sections, and provision was made for an additional loan of £4,000,000 if necessary. (File No. 893.51/428.) Thus amended the contract was signed May 20, 1911. (File No. 893.51/438 and (text) 498), and on June 10, 1911, the foreign office authorized the Chinese minister to certify the prospectus. (File No. 893.51/477.)

CURRENCY REFORM AND INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT LOANS.

NOTE.—On October 8, 1903, a treaty was concluded between the United States and China,[1] Article XIII of which provides as follows: " China agrees to take the necessary steps to provide for a uniform national coinage which shall be legal tender in payment of all duties, taxes and other obligations throughout the Empire by the citizens of the United States as well as Chinese subjects. It is understood, however, that all customs duties shall continue to be calculated and paid on the basis of the Haikuan Tael."

On August 11, 1908, his excellency Tang Shao Yi, special ambassador to the United States, proposed to the Secretary of State the flotation of a loan for public works in Manchuria. On November 8, 1908, while this was under consideration, the viceroy of Manchuria concluded a loan with the Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corporation and its French and German colleagues for $1,100,000.

In December, 1908, Tang Shao Yi proposed to the Secretary of State that China, through American capitalists, float a large loan for meeting the expenses incident to currency reform and the abolition of likin. The proposal was laid before Messrs. Kuhn, Loeb & Co., who accepted it. The Chinese Government did not, however, find itself ready immediately to begin negotiations.

On July 6, 1909, the British, French and German bankers signed certain agreements in London providing that if one of the parties thereto undertook negotiations with China under conditions that rendered impossible the admission of the other parties either to joint negotiation or joint signature, the party undertaking the business could negotiate and sign alone, making provision in the loan agreement for enabling the other parties to join in issuing the bonds although not signatories of the agreement itself.

On May 24, 1910, the British, French and German banking groups, in conference at Paris, invited the American group to enter into a quadruple understanding regarding loans to China.

On May 24, 1910, the Chinese Government issued an edict establishing a uniform monetary standard on the basis of the Mexican silver dollar. A supplementary edict centralized the banking privilege of issuing notes, and closed the provincial mints. (File No. 2112/117.)

After interviews on this subject between the Chinese Minister and the Secretary of State the following correspondence began. The Manchurian or "Industrial Development" loan enters with the American Minister's telegram of October 2, 1910. The combined currency-reform and industrial-development loan agreement appears on April 27, 1911. The beginning of the correspondence relating to inclusion of Japanese and Russian groups begins May 11, 1911. The revolution complicates the situation beginning with the Minister's telegram of November 17, 1911, and introducing the question of advances for current administrative expenses. Early references to the reorganization loan begin March 12, 1912..

The American Government is glad to learn that China has under consideration the adoption of a new currency system, uniform for the whole Empire, in fulfillment of the engagement made in Article XIII of the Commercial Treaty of 1903 between the United States and China, and that the Chinese Minister to the United States is preparing a memorial to his Government recommending the establishment of the new system upon a gold exchange basis, and is about to telegraph the Wai-wu Pu urging immediate attention to the matter as likely to pave the way for a revision of the import tariff.

Since some of the powers have manifested a disposition to make their consent to a discussion of tariff revision contingent upon the inauguration of certain reforms provided for in recent commercial treaties, it is believed that the introduction of a satisfactory currency system will place China in a very advantageous position in respect to the proposal to increase the import duties. It is hoped, therefore, that the Minister will carry out his reported intention to send such a telegram. The telegram ought also to state clearly that such action to be effective should be taken without delay and that in order to reassure the powers interested it will be necessary to employ a foreign monetary expert and that such expert ought to be engaged before China proceeds so far with its plans as to make revision difficult in case the expert should recommend a revision of the plans.

By order of the Board of Finance and with the approval of the Prince Regent, the Vice President of the Board of Communications, Sheng, has just called upon me to ask if American bankers would be willing to undertake a loan of about fifty million taels in order to elaborate the currency reform. Such a loan would be secured on unpledged customs and likin, amounting to between five and six million taels annually. Sheng asked if our banking interests could not send some one here, as he intended to give Americans the preference. He further said that he expected to negotiate with us, at some future time, a conversion of all outstanding small loans. Sheng requests a prompt answer as to the attitude of our financiers, and due weight should be attached to his words as he has been called to Peking for the express purpose of directing the currency reform.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, October 2, 1910.

Duke Tsai-tse and Sheng Kung Pao suggest that if our bankers are willing to undertake a currency loan of 50,000,000 gold dollars, the Manchurian loan[1] of 20,000,000 taels should be included therein, as they do not want an Imperial loan for Manchuria to be treated differently from one for the rest of China. The guaranties will be one half in Manchuria and one half in China, embracing unpledged customs and likin. This, it was declared, was ample security, and China was, further, free to dispose of the recent increase in customs receipts resulting from the increased volume of trade; but I doubt that the treaty powers will share this view.

The Chinese Government desires to negotiate this loan entirely with us, and I was told that it had not yet been offered to anyone else. We shall however be at liberty to offer the bonds in other markets.

The request for a financial expert was repeated, and it was urged that he come with all possible speed, for fear that other powers hear of these negotiations and impede them. It was further stated that if we make this loan an American would be appointed as financial adviser, in a purely consultative capacity, to assist the currency reform, having nothing to do with the loan negotiations.

This Government believes the proposed reform to be of fundamental importance to all the powers who have extensive commercial relations with China as well as to China herself and the countries that have treaty provisions relating thereto. [Inclosure —Extract.]

Notes on the course of the loan negotiations now pending at Peking.

The Department of State learned last spring from the Chinese Minister in Washington and from the American Legation at Peking that China had decided to adopt a uniform currency for the whole Empire in fulfillment of pledges given to the United States in the treaty of 1903. The Chinese Minister informed the Department that he was preparing a memorial upon the subject, and on June 14, 1910, he called at the Department to talk the matter over. The Assistant Secretary of State handed the Minister an aide-mémoire expressing the pleasure of the Department in learning that China was about to undertake this important reform and suggested that to reassure the powers interested it would be well to employ a foreign monetary expert to assist in formulating the plans, but distinctly disclaimed any desire to force an American adviser upon China. This was two months before the American Government learned that a loan was in contemplation by China for purposes of currency reform. The loan was solicited by China, whose request that American bankers be asked to make it in the amount of 50,000,000 taels was communicated to the Department of State on August 17, 1910, by the American Minister at Peking, who at the same time reported that his excellency Na-t'ung, by direction of the Prince Regent, had informed him that China proposed to take immediate steps for currency reform, make a large national loan, and engage a financial adviser who should be an American selected by the Chinese Ministry of Finance. On September 3 the Minister again called upon his excellency Na-t'ung with regard to the proposed loan of 20,000,000 taels for Manchuria, and was told by Na-t'ung that a loan for that amount for a bank and colonization purposes had been proposed and was likely to be sanctioned, and would be negotiated with the American group, who, however, would be asked to admit to participation the capital of other nations, notably British and German. On October 2, 1910, the Chinese Government, through the American Minister, requested that if American bankers were willing to make the loan they increase the amount from 50,000,000 taels to $50,000,000, in order to include the above proposed loan of 20,000,000 taels for Manchuria. The Chinese Government again voluntarily promised that if the loan were made in the United States an American would be appointed as financial adviser to assist in the currency reform. The American bankers agreed to undertake the business of floating the loan for 50,000,000 taels, and subsequently agreed to increase it to $50,000,000, so as to include the desired 20,000,000 taels for Manchurian development.

Before the preliminary agreement for the loan was signed the American bankers, through the Department of State, informed the Chinese Government that their representative was authorized to sign "with the full understanding that the group must have an absolutely free hand in marketing the bonds and in associating with it such European interests in the final agreement as it might desire." To this Duke Tse replied that "the group might have as many associates as they pleased, but that he would sign the final agreement with Americans only and expect them to hold the majority of the bonds." The Chinese Government could hardly have been surprised, therefore, had it found bankers of other nations participating in the loan as reported in the memorandum,[1] but as a matter of fact no capitalists of other nationality than American are participating; the agreement to which the memorandum evidently refers[2] expressly provides for China's consent to such participation, and the American Government is not without hope that this consent will be given. In the negotiations to secure for American financiers participation in the Hukuang loan, and in the proposals for the neutralization of the Manchurian railways, the aim of American policy has been to secure a sympathetic and practical cooperation of the great powers in maintaining the political integrity of China by making it to the interest of each to support such a policy. Where the nations invest their capital, there they are intent on preserving peace and promoting the development of natural resources and the prosperity of the people.

For this reason the American Government has looked with favor upon the desire of the American bankers to obtain China's consent to a participation by the capitalists of other nations in the proposed loan for currency reform. Moreover, the success of this reform will depend in a large measure upon the sympathetic cooperation of the great powers. With any number of these powers hostile or indifferent to the proposed reform it is doubtful that China can accomplish it.

What the American Government has to suggest, therefore, is that China shall cooperate with it in its efforts to interest the other powers in the success of this needed reform. The importance of this reform, however, in the view of the American Government, is secondary to that of fiscal reform.

To carry out the numerous reforms that China has undertaken it is necessary to secure a great increase of revenue, and with this end in view the American Government has steadily supported China in its desire to secure a revision of the tariff; but in its earnest endeavors, especially in the past two years, to secure the consent of other interested powers to a revision of the Chinese tariff this Government found that such other powers were inclined to make their consent to the discussion of such a revision contingent upon the prior inauguration by China of certain other reforms pledged by treaty, of which the currency reform was the chief.

The active interest of the United States, therefore, in the recent request of the Chinese Government for its assistance in securing funds for currency reform was inspired not so much by the importance, though great, of the proposed reform in itself as by the fact that such reform was a step to the greater end. It is obvious that China cannot reach the ultimate goal of tariff revision without the concurrence of the treaty powers, and it is with regret that the American Government notes that China seems disposed to oppose the only practicable measures which have been proposed to secure that sympathetic cooperation of the powers which will give security to China and promote the ends which it has in view.

NOTE.—On February 11, 1911, the American Minister notified the Department of State of the willingness of the Chinese Government to have quadruple signatories, and a financial adviser; the adviser to be an American if unanimous consent was given, otherwise to be of neutral nationality, Dutch preferred. The Department of State to the British Embassy.[1]

[Note verbale.]

On the general principle that China should not disregard its international undertakings, this Government has insisted upon the carrying out by the Chinese Government of its promise to ask the United States to nominate a financial adviser.

In urging the Chinese Government to consent to the joint signature of the pending currency loan by the four financial groups, the United States attaches importance most of all to the firm establishment thereby of the principle of present and future cooperation between the four interested Governments.

It regards as also of great importance such provision for the adequate control of expenditures under the pending or any future loans to China.

In regard to China's promise to ask the United States to nominate a financial adviser, who should be an American, this Government wishes it to be understood that when the Chinese Government shall have carried out its undertaking as to the adviser, and when the four Governments shall be agreed as to cooperation and control as above indicated, then should objection be expressed by the tripartite Governments to the selection of an American for that post, and should that objection not be met by some understanding as to similar appointments in connection with future loans, the American Government would be disposed to consult with the three other interested Governments and appoint an adviser of some nationality which is not interested in loans to China.

An early agreement in principle between the quadripartite Governments with respect to these questions of the adviser and of control of loans to China is believed by the American Government to be highly desirable for the speedy closing of the pending loan negotiations.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy in duplicate of the loan agreement for national currency reform and industrial development in Manchuria, which was signed on the 15th instant by the local representatives of the quadruple banks, on the one part, and Duke Tsai-tse, President of the Board of Finance, on the other. * * *

[Inclosure.—Summary.]

Currency Reform and Industrial Development Loan Agreement of April 15, 1911, between the Chinese Government and the quadruple group of bankers.

In pursuance of the tripartite group's preliminary agreement of October 27, 1910, and the supplementary agreement admitting the American bankers, the Chinese Government agreed on April 15, 1911, with the resultant quadruple group:

To authorize the banks to issue what should be called the "Imperial Chinese Government Five-per-cent Currency-reform and Industrial-development Sinking-fund Gold Loan of 1911," the proceeds to be used for Chinese currency reform and industrial development in Manchuria.

The loan to be a direct charge or liability of the Chinese Government; all advances, interest, and repayments of principal to be a first charge on the following revenues to the annual amount mentioned in Kuping taels (a) Tobacco and spirits in Manchuria, 1,000,000; (b) production tax in Manchuria, 700,000; (c) consumption tax in Manchuria, 800,000; (d) newly added surtax on salt in all China, 2,500,000; total revenues pledged, 5,000,000 taels per annum, all free from other incumbrances; if these prove insufficient China to supply the deficit from other sources.

The revenues not to be interfered with as long as payments are regularly made, but upon default sufficient revenues to satisfy it to be transferred to and administered by the Maritime Customs for the account of the bondholders.

On the date of signing the agreement the Chinese Board of Finance to hand to the banks: (a) "The Regulations for the Unification of the Currency on a Silver Basis" authorized by Imperial edict and otherwise known as "the program of currency reform"; (b) a statement showing in what amounts the proceeds of the loan are to be applied to the various expenditures incident to the operation of said program; (c) a statement specifying the nature of the proposed enterprises in Manchuria and showing in what amounts the allotted portion of the proceeds of the loan is to be applied thereto.

The banks to have six months to study the regulations and statements and to plan all matters pertaining to them; upon acceptance thereof as the bases for the bonds, said acceptance to be conveyed to the Board of Finance and the bonds to be issued as soon as possible.

The price to the Chinese Government to be 95% of the face of the bonds, that Government to be the preferred applicant; subscriptions to be next invited on equal terms in China, the United States, and Europe.

An advance of £1,000.000 for industrial developments in Manchuria to be made, if desired, upon execution of the agreement and satisfaction given the bankers as to the nature of such industrial developments. A further sum of £1,000,000 for the preliminary expenses of currency reform to be held by the banks in America and Europe at the disposal of China.

The rate of interest for the loan to be five per cent, payable semiannually.

The term of the loan to be 45 years; repayment to begin with the eleventh year by yearly amortization in half-yearly payments.

Article 16 provides that if China should desire to borrow in foreign parts, in addition to this loan, funds for continuing or completing the operations contemplated in the agreement, the banks are to be the first to be invited to furnish such funds; but if China and the banks fail to agree on the terms, other financial groups may be invited.

Copy of the Note Verbale presented by the Japanese Government to the French Government on June 26, 1911.

[Handed to the Secretary of State by the Japanese Ambassador July 11, 1911.]

The Imperial Government have carefully examined the so-called four powers £10,000,000 loan agreement which China recently concluded with the international financial group banks. They have also at the same time had under attentive consideration the statement formulated regarding Manchurian enterprises to be set apart for exploitation and development under the loan agreement. The statement is unfortunately too general in terms to admit the final conclusion as to whether the enterprises which it signalizes are entirely consistent with the reserved rights and interests of Japan in Manchuria. But as far as it is possible to discover, those enterprises seem to be legitimate. Accordingly the Imperial Government are gratified to be able to declare that to the full extent such enterprises are reconcilable with the reserved rights and interests above mentioned. Due working of the enterprises in question will give rise to no objection or protest on the part of Japan, but a serious cause for objection is found in those provisions of the loan agreement by which are established in favor of the financial group which negotiated the loan preferential rights of the most comprehensive nature—financial, industrial and commercial.

Article 16 of the agreement not only provides in effect that the banks—i. e. the financial group mentioned above—shall have preference over all other foreign financial groups in the matter of supplying any additional funds required to continue or complete operations contemplated under the agreement, but it stipulates that "should the Imperial Chinese Government decide to invite foreign capitalists to participate with Chinese interests in Manchurian business contemplated under this loan or to be undertaken in connection therewith, the banks shall first be invited to so participate"; that is to say, in the whole of the three Manchurian provinces the four powers' financial group is accorded priority over all other foreigners and foreign institutions not only as regards enterprises contemplated by the agreement but in the matter of any other activities which may hereafter be associated with such enterprises. Preferential rights are frequently asserted in China as measures necessary to the full and complete enjoyment of duly acquired specific industrial concessions, but never before has an attempt been made to secure precedence as regards general, unenumerated enterprises and activities which have no relation to any such concession. Japan possesses in the region of southern Manchuria special rights and interests, and while she is fully prepared in the future as in the past to respect the rights of others, she is unable to view with indifference measures which tend not only to menace those special rights and interests but to place her subjects and institutions at a disadvantage as compared with the subjects and institutions of any other country. In the actual circumstances of the case the difficulties of the situation can be satisfactorily met only, it seems to the Imperial Government, either by entire suppression of Article 16 of the loan agreement or by a revision of that article in such a way as to deprive bank concessionaires of the objectionable preference which the article accorded them.

No. 373.] IMPERIAL RUSSIAN EMBASSY,
Washington, July 11, 1911.

The information which has come to the Russian Government indicates that clause 16 of the contract agreed to by the Chinese Government and the Berlin syndicate of American, English, French, and German bankers for a loan of $50,000,000 includes an obligation on the part of the Chinese Government to address itself in the first instance to this syndicate for all subsequent loans destined for the development of Manchuria, and to ask its participation financially in the Chinese industrial enterprises in that region. Such a stipulation creates in favor of the syndicate mentioned a preferential position in Manchuria. It seems that the syndicate pretends to a monopoly of financial and industrial enterprises in the region in which Russia possesses important special interests. The Imperial Government has always respected the right belonging to the other nations in Manchuria, and for its part holds that there should be no disregard of its legitimate rights acquired in that country. Now, the project in question having a tendency to hinder the development of Russian interests in Manchuria by creating in favor of the syndicate an altogether exceptional position, the Imperial Government earnestly hopes that consideration will be given to the objections formulated above, and addresses itself to the Government of the United States with the request that it will not refuse to use its influence with a view to having clause 16 of the contract revoked.

Except in pursuance of some general plan of the powers interested to help China meet its international obligations and perform ordinary administrative and police functions, the Department does not consider it wise to make any loan at present. Any such assistance should be confined to short-term loans, designated to be for the immediate necessities of government, including the suppression of nonpolitical disorders, the service of the indemnity fund and other foreign engagements, but not for war purposes. The loans should be strictly neutral as between internal factions in China and should therefore receive the indorsement of the representatives of the various factions, and some form of supervision, such as a foreign trustee, should be devised to insure the proper use of the funds. Moreover, since such loans would primarily be for the protection of the common interests, they should be open to the nationals of all the powers having important relations with China, and the power or powers having the largest interests at stake might well take the initiative.

American Legation,
Peking, December 6, 1911.

The Prince Regent has been induced by Yuan Shih Kai to resign. It is now believed that some agreement will be concluded with the revolutionists. But without financial assistance at this critical moment Yuan will not be able to hold his troops together and negotiations will fail.

The British, in behalf of the groups, some time ago opened negotiations with Yuan for a loan, but dropped them because the British Minister opposed. This evening however the Minister advised the manager of the Hongkong Bank to resume negotiations, promising the British Legation's support. The French Chargé d'Affaires has urged upon me the necessity for the loan. I have not seen the German Minister this evening, but his banking representative is in accord with other bankers. Groups' representatives are to-night telegraphing their principals for authority to advance Yuan 3,000,000 taels to tide him over the period of negotiation.

This, I believe, is the crisis of Yuan's attempt to restore order and he will fail unless supported, with nothing in sight but anarchy. I earnestly advise Department's support of this loan.

With respect to Yuan Shih Kai, if it is so important, might not the 3,000,000 taels be obtained from native sources? In view of the fact that we have from the first, together with the other interested powers, consistently adhered to a policy of strict neutrality and nonintervention in the present internal disturbances in China, and in view of the probable danger to the persons, property and trade of our nationals throughout China, as well as of the possible international complications involved in a departure from that policy at this time, do you still adhere to your recommendation in your telegram of December 6? The Department has not yet received sufficient evidence to lead it to question the wisdom of the decision reached at the conference of the financial groups held at Paris on November 8 last, nor to alter the general position stated in the telegram to you of November 18.

The Department of State has received no information which would lead it to question the wisdom of the decision reached at the Paris conference of the financial groups on November 8, 1911, to the effect that "in view of the present uncertainty of the situation the groups are not disposed at present to entertain applications for financial assistance"; and further, that "it is to be distinctly understood that we are not in any sense opposed to making loans to a responsible Chinese government and will be prepared to enter upon negotiations as soon as our representatives in Peking are able to assure us that they are satisfied as to this point."

Should extraordinary necessities make it advisable to assist China with funds to meet its international obligations and to perform the ordinary administrative and police functions of government, the Department of State believes that such assistance should be in connection with some general plan by all the interested powers for the protection of the common interests in China.

While entertaining the above views the Department of State would welcome any further expression of opinion from the Imperial German Government, based upon the information it may have received.

His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs has reported by telegraph to the British Ambassador that he understands that negotiations are about to be undertaken at Hankow with the object of arriving at a solution of the present situation in China, but that the Chinese treasury being now completely exhausted, Sir Edward Grey fears that unless temporary financial assistance can be afforded to the Chinese Government there would be small prospect of a settlement following the present armistice. It is felt by His Majesty's Minister at Peking that he can no longer oppose an advance to the Chinese Government on condition that Yuan Shih Kai be informed before receiving any money that it must be made clear to the revolutionaries at Hankow and Shanghai that an advance is necessary in the interests of the negotiations and their acquiescence secured. Sir Edward Grey therefore hardly thinks that in these circumstances the powers concerned can maintain an opposition to the advance of a small sum by the four groups on the conditions laid down by the British Minister at Peking, and he would be prepared to notify the British group to that effect should the other Governments concerned concur. The Hongkong and Shanghai Bank, who have been approached through their Peking agent, are informing the other three groups that he is consulting the other three Governments as to the line of action to be adopted.

His Majesty's Ambassador has been instructed to inform the United States Government of the above facts and to report their views as soon as possible by telegraph.

My Dear Mr. Ambassador: Certain general views of the Government of the United States upon the subject of loans to China in the present juncture were set forth in an aide-mémoire handed the German Ambassador on the 7th instant, and I have the honor now to inclose herewith a copy of that aide-mémoire.[1]

The Department of State would not, however, in the light of later reports from Peking, be inclined to oppose its nationals joining with others in the small loan referred to in your excellency's aide-mémoire of the 8th instant, upon the conditions laid down by the British Minister at Peking, more especially so if the views of the United States as to the broadly international character of such loans should meet with the approval of the other Governments concerned.

[Telegram.—Extract.—Paraphrase.]

American Legation,
Peking, December 11, 1911.

I appreciate the desirability of neutrality, but neutrality cannot continue long if a settlement is not made in the near future. If a loan is made to Yuan the effect on the rebels might endanger foreigners in their territory, but the safety of foreigners cannot be assured long anyhow as the country is rapidly drifting into anarchy. If peace is not soon negotiated, the rebel soldiers will break up into bands of brigands and foreigners can then scarcely hope to escape attack. The only recognized government is in the single control of Yuan; he is apparently growing constantly stronger, but he is out of money and his Government may collapse at any moment. To secure money from private sources is impossible. This continued neutrality means to wait until conditions after Yuan's collapse have become so bad that armed intervention shall have become necessary; this in its turn might involve serious international complications and the peace of the world.

[1] See p. 103.

The proposed loan to Yuan is to be used, not for active military operations, but for preserving the status quo during peace negotiations, under foreign supervision if required. If the loan is broadly international it may induce the rebels to submit to reasonable terms. I therefore adhere to my recommendation of December 6, 1911, with the following qualifications: America should not take the initiative; this should be taken by England, who has the largest interests here and whose relations with the interested powers justify her leadership. The British Minister, who at first directed his nationals to resume loan negotiations, has since seemed to vacillate and I am uncertain as to his policy. The German and the Belgian Ministers and French Chargé d'Affaires have advised their Governments that support of Yuan is necessary, but if England will not act the proposition must be abandoned.

This Government has informed the British and German Governments, in response to their inquiries, that it is not disposed to oppose a small loan at this time to China to pay current expenses until conclusion of peace negotiations, provided the loan be upon clearly understood conditions of neutrality such as proposed by the British authorities; it would be still more of this attitude if the loan were made broadly international. Furthermore such financial assistance should be in connection with some general plan by all interested powers for the protection of the common interests in China. At the present juncture the Department attaches special importance to the two above-stated principles.

The Chargé d'Affaires was further instructed to ask the assistance of the Secretary of State, and was told this morning that the Department could have nothing whatever to do with the proposition, with explanations of the controlling reasons for the present attitude of the United States regarding loans, and the request of the Chinese Government which he had just transmitted was cited to him with emphasis as evidence of the desirability of an early settlement of the situation at the coming conference.[1]

In view of the possible effect upon the lives, property, and trade of its nationals in the disaffected districts of any departure from the policy hitherto consistently pursued by common consent among the powers, the American Government believes that any loans to China at the present juncture would be inopportune, except upon the conditions already laid down, namely strict neutrality as between Chinese factions and broad participation by the interested foreign powers.

While the American Government would be inclined to favor financial assistance to China on the above conditions, it is felt to be a corollary of this policy to discourage loans by its nationals unless assured that such loans are in harmony with the above views.

These considerations gain additional force from the fact that a conference is already in session at Shanghai for the purpose of arriving at an amicable settlement of the situation, and it is felt that the outcome of the conference should be awaited before taking any further steps in the matter of a loan. Financial assistance such as is now requested by the authorities in Peking might serve to hinder rather than hasten the desired settlement.

The following received to-day from the Embassy at Tokyo:

> Okura firm informs me that one of its directors left on the 20th for Shanghai to negotiate loan by the firm to Shanghai Hang-Chow Railway Co., for 3,000,000 yen, secured on the part of the line between Shanghai and Feng-Chau; 8%; reception price, 104; redemption period, 10 years. Firm states that money will eventually pass to Revolutionary Government, but the loan is a purely private contract between Okura and Chinese Railway Co., and that Japan refuses to extend support; refusal privately confirmed by Ministry of Finance.

By common accord this Government has hitherto pursued the policy of strict neutrality with respect to loans to China. It has felt it to be a corollary of that policy to look with disfavor upon loans by its nationals unless assured that such loans should be of neutral effect as between the factions. It has also felt that it is particularly appropriate at present to invoke the principle that a lending Government should deter its nationals from making loans not of a sufficiently broad purpose to secure the approval of said Government in consultation with the other interested powers. The Department fears that the loan now contemplated by the Japanese may have an unfortunate effect upon the group that has adhered to the above-expressed views.

The Department considers that, in general, any loan to China would be inopportune until a composite provisional government for the whole of China has been firmly established or unless such loans are indorsed by the de facto authorities of both North and South China. This applies to all loans, whether national, provincial, or private, and whether made by the quadripartite group or by individual Americans. With respect to future national and provincial loans the Department favors the broadest possible internationalization and believes that full participation should be offered to Russia and Japan.

With special reference to proposed loan to the Nanking Provisional Government the American group has been informed that if the loan is made to the joint Provisional Government or indorsed by the Nanking and Peking authorities this Government would approve provided the other Governments and groups agreed and on condition that full participation be given also to Japan and Russia.

BRITISH EMBASSY,
Washington, February 24, 1912.

SIR: With reference to previous correspondence regarding the affairs of China I have the honor, under instructions from His Majesty's Government, to bring the following facts to your notice:

The Provisional Government at Nanking, being in immediate need of an advance of 2,000,000 taels, are prepared to accept a loan of £600,000 on the security of the China Merchants Co.'s ships.

His Majesty's Government had already, after consulting the British minister at Peking, come to the conclusion that conditions in China have now become sufficiently settled to allow of advances being made to the Provisional Government. They have consequently given their conditional consent to the loan now proposed, but, in view of the understanding hitherto existing between the powers to discourage loans during the revolution, they have made this approval dependent upon the consent and joint action of the other three Governments. They have also stipulated that the Peking Government should give its sanction to the loan and that Japan and Russia should be invited to participate.

In proposing that this offer should be made to Japan and Russia His Majesty's Government are animated by the desire to prevent a return to the previous policy of unprofitable competition in China. Their views on this point are, I think, already known to you, and I understand that they have the approval of your Government. I am therefore instructed by His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to express the hope that your Government will agree to the proposed loan and to the participation in it of Japan and Russia. Should your Government approve this course His Majesty's Government hope that you will see your way to send the necessary instructions to the United States representative in Peking.

It is understood that the French proposal does not exclude the participation of Russian and Japanese groups, a principle to which France has already agreed.

His Majesty's Government is in favor of asking for an assurance from Yuan Shih-kai such as that suggested by the French Government, but Sir Edward Grey would prefer to alter the words "any important loan" to "any loan that might conflict with the interests or weaken the security of the large loan which is at present being negotiated by the four groups with the approval of their Governments."

a preliminary understanding between the powers. The Russian Government expressed this idea to the Governments of England and of the United States of America at the time of the exchange of opinions following the note of the American Secretary of State recommending united action of the powers in China. It has, therefore, discouraged the attempts of Russian bankers to conclude Chinese loans before the establishment of such an understanding, and it has consequently learned with regret that the combination of English, French, German, and American bankers had advanced to the provisional government of Nanking the sum of 2,000,000 taels and another million to Yuan Shih-kai and was prepared to advance to him other sums in addition without any consultation with Russia on this subject. The purely political character of these advances causes the Russian Government to believe that it should take part in them in order to maintain the principle of the solidarity of the powers in regard to the new Chinese Government. The Russian Government finds itself obliged, however, to formulate from this moment the following conditions in regard to the said Russian participation: First, the advances of money to the provisional government of China, having a political character, should be considered as entirely independent of future Chinese loans; second, the Russian participation in these advances in no way shadows forth the Russian attitude in regard to future Chinese loans which may be negotiated by the combination. In consenting to take part in these advances the Russian Government believes itself right in waiting till the Governments whose subjects and citizens make part of the combination consent on their side to enter into pourparlers with Russia in regard to the conditions of carrying out future financial operations in China. It is well understood that the bankers of the countries taking part should meanwhile abstain from lending money to China without having obtained in advance the approval of the interested Governments. In case the conditions above indicated meet no objection on the part of the Governments represented in the combination, the Russian Government declares itself ready to furnish the representative of the Russo-Asiatic Bank at Peking with instructions to negotiate with the representatives of the financial group forming the combination on condition of Russian participation in the advances which have been made or which shall be made.

MY DEAR MR. The object, of course, should be to secure to the groups fair treatment without giving them a monopoly to the exclusion of other legitimate lenders with whom they might be unwilling to combine. The proposed formula might be somewhat as follows:

An undertaking not to negotiate "any subsequent loan that might conflict with the legitimate interests or weaken the security of the large loan, if consummated, which is at present being negotiated by the combined groups with the approval of their Governments, or of loans hitherto negotiated."

Some such formula would seem to me to be much preferable to that proposed by the French Government.

After consultation with and subject to analogous action by your British, French and German colleagues you may point out emphatically the bad effect of rushing separate negotiations like the reported Belgian loan pending the very important present negotiations of the four groups, so valuable to the future of China, which may be jeopardized by such short-sighted action, and also pending the pourparlers with Japan and Russia.

As to the suggestion of the groups that the Belgian advances without conditions and therefore inharmonious with the larger plans might well be suppressed by China's making the four groups (presumably with Russian and Japanese participation) fiscal agents for all foreign loans, you may say to your three colleagues that such fiscal agency might be an excellent solution if the feature of potential monopoly were safeguarded with an undertaking by each group to its own Government to assure fair treatment to other future investors of its own nationality.

Provision might be made to secure to the groups fair treatment without giving them a monopoly to the exclusion of other legitimate lenders with whom they might be unwilling to combine, by an undertaking from China to the groups not to negotiate any subsequent loan that might conflict with the legitimate interests or weaken the security of the large loan, if consummated, which is at present being negotiated by the combined groups with the approval of their Governments, or of loans hitherto negotiated.

It may be worth considering whether the Chinese Government should not at the same time be requested also to engage with the respective Governments not to negotiate any large loan except with the combined banking groups and their associates, or with corresponding groups of the same nationalities and upon the same broad principles of internationalization. You may discuss this question as your own idea with your colleagues and with Yuan Shih-kai and Tong Shao-yi, pointing out to the latter the advantages to China's future welfare of some such arrangement, which would tend to obliterate preferential political rights and thus forestall any purely political loan being forced upon China by any individual power.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
No. 484.] Peking, March 21, 1912.

SIR: Referring to my telegram of March 16, I have the honor to report that the representatives of the four groups, having been informed by Mr. Tong Shao-yi that the Nanking Government was in urgent need of funds, held a meeting to consider the possibility of making an advance of 7,000,000 taels. It was decided to supply the Nanking Government with 5,000,000 taels in March and the balance of 2,000,000 taels in April. On February 28, therefore, with the consent of Yuan Shih-kai, the President-elect of the Provisional Government, the interested banks at Shanghai paid 2,000,000 taels to the Nanking Minister of Finance, as part of the advance promised for March.

Tong Shao-yi asked the groups to advance a further sum during the month of March of 3,000,000 taels for the relief of the Peking Government, and 6,400,000 taels monthly for April, May, and June, and possibly for July and August, to be equally divided between Peking and Nanking.

For the repayment of these advances Mr. Tong stated that by July next the Government expected to be in a position to conclude a comprehensive reorganization loan which would probably be for £60,000,000, to be spread over five years—i. e., £12,000,000 each year—the security for which would be the salt gabelle, which it was proposed to reorganize on modern lines. The present income from the salt gabelle was stated to be about 47,000,000 taels per annum, which sum it was believed could easily be doubled under proper management.

It was agreed that the monthly advances requested be made against sterling treasury bills to be redeemed from the proposed loan, and that they should be secured upon the salt revenues. Mr. Tong requested the groups to prepare a draft agreement as soon as possible to cover all the requirements mentioned.

With respect to the proposed reorganization loan, the groups' representatives pointed out that it would first be necessary to reassure the markets by a declaration of the Government's financial policy, but agreed to refer the matter to their principals.

On March 2 President Yuan, through the Peking Acting Minister of Finance, represented to the groups' representatives that the Peking Government was in immediate need of 1,185,000 taels, to meet which there were in the treasury but 170,000 taels.

On March 5 the four groups informed their representatives here that they would advance the required sum, 1,015,000 taels, and would concede Russian and Japanese participation in the same, but stipulated that they must have an option on further monthly requirements and on the proposed reorganization loan.

The telegram communicating these terms stated further that the Eastern Bank of London was trying to secure participation in the temporary advance at 8 per cent with an option on a large loan and that this was making it difficult for the groups to do the business. The groups therefore insisted that President Yuan should negotiate with them alone.

On the 9th of March the groups' representatives addressed a letter to President Yuan, stating the terms upon which they would advance his Government 1,015,000 taels, for which he had asked to meet immediate requirements. I have the honor to inclose a copy of this letter and of President Yuan's reply to it, dated March 9, in which he accepted the terms offered. It will be noted that the third condition provides for a firm option on the further monthly requirements of the Chinese Government, and that the fourth stipulates that the Chinese Government shall assure to the groups, provided that their terms are equally advantageous with those otherwise obtainable, the firm option of undertaking the comprehensive loan for general reorganization purposes.

On the 11th of March the groups' representatives informed their principals that Yuan had requested a further loan of 5,000,000 taels to meet the urgent needs of Wuchang. Of this sum it was intended to employ 2,000,000 taels to pay troops and 3,000,000 taels to protect the Hupei notes issued by the former provincial government.

On March 12 the groups' representatives were informed by a telegram from London that the four groups would advance the 2,000,000 taels required for the pay of the troops at Wuchang, but that the provincial note issue ought not to be protected by any such temporary advance.

The same day the four groups informed their representatives here of the terms on which they would agree to finance China's monthly requirements—i. e., nine months' treasury bills at 95½, less 1 per cent for charges other than those for printing and engraving; the groups to have preference on the £60,000,000 loan, control of the expenditures thereunder, and a stipulation that while preliminary advances were being made and until the redemption of the treasury bills and issue of the reorganization loan China should not negotiate nor contract except through the four groups.

On March 13 the group's representatives in a telegram to their principals called attention to this last-mentioned stipulation as being capable of an interpretation that would conflict with the wording of the option—that is to say, that since the proposed loan was to be spread over five years, China by the stipulation proposed would be bound until all five series of bonds were issued not to negotiate with others than the four groups. This, it was stated, would constitute a monopoly and could be secured only by the support of the four Governments concerned.

On March 15 Mr. W. D. Straight addressed a note to the legation stating that Mr. Tong had confirmed the report that on the 14th of March an Anglo-Belgian syndicate had signed an agreement with President Yuan providing for an advance of £1,000,000 for one year at 97, with interest at 5 per cent per annum, subject to the approval of the National Assembly and to be repaid out of a larger loan to be floated later by the syndicate. The amount of this loan Mr. Tong refused to disclose. Mr. Straight requested me to protest formally to the President against this action as a clear breach of the engagement contained in articles 3 and 4 of the letters exchanged between the groups' representatives and President Yuan on March 9. * * *

In compliance with your instructions, as contained in your telegram of March 16, 6 p. m., I attended a meeting yesterday of the ministers of the interested powers to consider the request of the groups that a formal protest be made. It was decided to arrange an early audience with President Yuan and to formally protest against the action taken by the President in signing the agreement with the Anglo-Belgian syndicate. Such protest seems to be imperatively demanded by the situation.

Politically, China is in a frightful condition of disorder, and financially is in danger of bankruptcy. * * * In such a condition the only hope of a restoration of order is in the possibility of borrowing money abroad. On the other hand, if the Provisional Government is permitted to borrow money here and there and everywhere without check or control, there can be but one result and that an early one—national bankruptcy. There may be those who would not be sorry to see such a condition brought about, because it would compel foreign intervention, but the policy consistently advocated by our own Government rather demands the adoption of measures which will tend to save the Chinese Government from itself, prevent foolish borrowing and reckless expenditure, and assist it to maintain its credit and build up prosperity upon a solid foundation.

I have, etc., W. J. CALHOUN.

PEKING, March 9, 1912.

SIR: In reply to Your Excellency's request communicated to us by Acting Minister of Finance, Mr. Chou Tzu-chi, in his letter of the 2d of March, that we should obtain the sanction of our ministers to advance to the Chinese Provisional Government the sum of 1,015,000 taels to meet urgent requirements, we now have the honor to inform Your Excellency that the advance requested has received the sanction of our respective Governments and that we are prepared to hold at the disposal of the Chinese Provisional Government, against the receipts of the Ministry of Finance, the sum of 1,100,000 Shanghai taels.

Of this amount the sum of 500,000 Shanghai taels can be made available immediately—namely, about 320,000 Shanghai taels payable in Peking at the rate of 107.25 Shanghai taels per 100 Kungfa taels and about 180,000 Shanghai taels for remittance abroad. The balance—namely, 600,000 Shanghai taels—will be made available in Peking in Shanghai sycee so soon as the necessary arrangements can be made, the expense of shipment and delivery to be borne by the Chinese Government.

It is understood and agreed—

(1) That the said advance of 1,100,000 Shanghai taels will be treated in conjunction with the advance of 2,000,000 Shanghai taels made in Shanghai to the Chinese Provisional Government on the 28th day of February last, and that sterling exchange for the same will be settled by the banks in Shanghai to-day.

(2) That this advance of 1,100,000 Shanghai taels, as in the case of the previous advance of 2,000,000 Shanghai taels above referred to, will be covered by delivery to the banks, so soon as arrangements permit, of sterling treasury bills bearing date the 9th day of March, 1912, and for such amounts as, after being discounted at a rate to be arranged, shall yield the sterling equivalent of the said advance, the said treasury bills to be secured, subject to the existing charges, upon the revenue of the salt gabelle.

(3) That the banks hold a firm option for the provision of further monthly requirements of the Chinese Government for the months of March, April, May, June, and possibly July and August, which the undersigned four groups have already been requested to finance, against the delivery of additional sterling treasury bills on terms to be arranged.

(4) That, in consideration of the assistance rendered by the groups to China in the present emergency and of their services in supporting her credit on the foreign markets, the Chinese Government assures to the groups, provided that their terms are equally advantageous with those otherwise obtainable, the firm option of undertaking the comprehensive loan for general reorganization purposes already proposed to them, to be floated as soon as possible, and to be applied in the first instance to the redemption of the sterling treasury bills aforesaid.

We have the honor to request that Your Excellency will favor us with your reply confirming the conditions above stated.

We have, etc.

President Yuan Shih-kai to the Representatives of the Four-Power Banking Groups.

Republic of China,
Office of the President,
Peking, 9th of March, 1912.

Gentlemen: I am in receipt of your letter of to-day's date informing me that, having obtained the sanction of your Governments to advance to the Chinese Provisional Government funds for their urgent requirements, as stated in the letter of the 2d of March addressed to you by the Acting Minister of Finance, your banks are now prepared to hold at the disposal of the Chinese Provisional Government, against the receipts of the Ministry of Finance, the sum of 1,100,00 Shanghai taels, and I note the arrangements proposed for making this sum available.

It is understood and agreed—

1. That the said advance of 1,100,000 Shanghai taels will be treated in conjunction with the advance of 2,000,000 Shanghai taels made in Shanghai to the Chinese Provisional Government on the 28th day of February last, and that sterling exchange for the same will be settled by the banks in Shanghai to-day.

2. That this advance of 1,100,000 Shanghai taels above, as in the case of the previous advance of 2,000,000 Shanghai taels above referred to, will be covered by delivery to the banks, so soon as arrangements permit, of sterling treasury bills bearing date the 9th day of March, 1912, and for such amounts as, after being discounted at a rate to be arranged, shall yield the sterling equivalent of the said advance, the said treasury bills to be secured, subject to the existing charges, upon the revenue of the salt gabelle.

3. That the banks hold a firm option for the provision of the further monthly requirements of the Chinese Government for the months of March, April, May, June, and probably July and August, which the four groups have already been requested to finance against the delivery of additional sterling treasury bills on terms to be arranged.

4. That in consideration of the assistance rendered by the groups to China in the present emergency, and of their services in supporting her credit on the foreign markets, the Chinese Government assures to the groups (provided that their terms are equally advantageous with those otherwise obtainable) the firm option of undertaking the comprehensive loan for general reorganization purposes already proposed to them, to be floated as soon as possible, and to be applied in the first instance to the redemption of the sterling treasury bills aforesaid.

I hereby confirm the arrangements and conditions above stated, and request you to proceed immediately in accordance therewith.

DEAR MR. WILSON: His Majesty's Government agrees with your Government as to the measure of support which should be given by our Government to the groups concerned, and accepts the amended wording of the undertaking, which was proposed by you in your semiofficial note of the 16th. His Majesty's Minister in Peking has been instructed in this sense, and the French and German Governments have been informed. His Majesty's Government will give no support for the moment to any negotiations which would interfere with the temporary advances or weaken the security of the large loan.

As regards Belgian participation in the loans, His Majesty's Government has no objection to this in principle, and agree that the terms of such participation should be settled by the groups in consultation with their Governments.

As regards the proposed loan, the contract for which was signed by the Chinese Prime Minister, and in which British, Russians and

Belgians are interested, His Majesty's Minister in Peking has been instructed to join with his colleagues in protesting against it on the ground that it is a breach of the engagement under which the four groups undertook to make advances to the Chinese Government, and the British financiers have been informed that His Majesty's Government can give them no support.

DEAR MR. WILSON: I have now received a further communication from the Foreign Office on the subject of the Chinese loan negotiations.

The reply of the Japanese Government to the invitation to enter the combination of banks of other countries did not appear to Sir Edward Grey to require an immediate answer, but he is inclined to agree that the term special rights and interests should be interpreted as meaning those rights and interests which arise out of treaties.

As regards the reply of the Russian Government, Sir Edward Grey understands that their acceptance of the invitation applies only to the temporary advances. It has been explained to the Russian Government why, in order to strengthen the hands of the de facto government in China against the forces of disorder, it was impossible to await the designation of the Russian group before sanctioning the advances, and it was added that for the same reasons it might be impolitic to await the settlement of the conditions of Russian participation before agreeing to any further advances.

It was further stated that His Majesty's Government considered that the best way to settle all conditions was by discussion between the different groups in consultation with their respective Governments, but that the Foreign Office was prepared to discuss the conditions of the loan with the Russian Government, and that His Majesty's Government approved the conditions agreed on at the meeting of the banking groups, and further that the proposed loan of £60,000,000 was regarded as being the sequel and complement of the advances and that it was also acknowledged that the attitude which Russia might adopt toward other future loans was not prejudiced by her participation in present advances.

SIR: I have the honor to report that on March 25, the British, French, and German ministers and myself called upon Yuan Shih-kai and entered a protest against the breach of the contract or arrangement made between him and the representatives of the groups, evidenced by the exchange of letters between him and them, dated March 9, and in support of such protest we left with him an aide-mémoire, a copy of which is herewith inclosed[1] and in which the facts on which the protest was based are fully recited.

Yuan Shih-kai read the aide-mémoire and made a somewhat extended verbal reply. He said China's need for money was very great, the amount required was very large, and, no doubt, Tang Shao-yi feared the bankers would not be willing to give him all that was required, and, an opportunity to secure more money from other sources having presented itself, he took advantage of it and made the Belgian loan. The ministers entered into no discussion of the subject.

I have not seen the Belgian loan contract, but I understand it is for a loan of $5,000,000, which is to be an advancement on an ultimate loan of $50,000,000, and without any provision for control or supervision of expenditures. * * * The Belgians are not the chief element in this loan; the Russians are behind it—at least the Russo-Asiatic Bank is the leading factor, although not a party to the contract.

New-born enthusiasm tends to extravagant expenditures. If China is saved she must be protected from financial improvidence. Indiscriminate borrowing and reckless competition between bankers should be prevented. The plan suggested in your March 19, 7 p. m., tends to that end and justifies monopolistic feature, which may be regulated by friendly nations. It affords bankers fixed compensation, secures their experienced service, and gives China benefit of the markets. The agency term, ten years, will carry China over reorganization period. I am disposed therefore to approve the plan in principle but am not committed to all its details.

> In consenting to participate in the reorganization loan the Russian Government believes itself obliged clearly to indicate from now on that the conditions of the loan should contain nothing that may be injurious in its nature to the rights and special interests of Russia in North Manchuria, in Mongolia and in West China. With this reservation the Russian Government is ready to designate the Russian-Asiatic Bank as being the representative of the Russian financial group in the consortium that will take upon itself the issue of the Chinese reorganization loan.

The Department understands that this reservation refers only to such special interests and rights as arise out of treaties and agreements with China, in which understanding the British Government concurs.

> The Department believes that it would be a mistake for the groups to be too strict in the matter of control in connection with the preliminary advances, and that it is most important that funds required for immediate needs be advanced promptly in order that the Provisional Government may get started as soon as possible on a more stable basis. The groups of course should have proper security for these advances, the aggregate of which is comparatively small. But the full discussion of conditions of control for the large reorganization loan, while proceeding simultaneously, should not unduly delay the preliminary advances, with the understanding that the concessions with respect to these urgent advances shall in no wise prejudice the discussion of measures of control in connection with the large loan.

You will ascertain by consulting your colleagues whether a common understanding can not be reached promptly in the above sense.

The Ministers of the four Powers to the Foreign Office.

PEKING, April 18, 1912.

The ministers for Great Britain, France, the United States, and Germany have received the memorandum of the 15th instant[1] in which the Ministry for Foreign Affairs communicate the reply of the Premier to the memorandum handed by the ministers to the President of the Republic on the 25th ultimo,[2] embodying their protest against the loan contract signed with a Belgian syndicate in violation of the written pledges given by the Chinese Government on March 9 last to the group of banks of the four nations.

The ministers note with regret that this memorandum makes no allusion to the circumstances which gave rise to the protest in question and is confined to the statement that regrettable misunderstandings occurred in the negotiations with the groups.

No misunderstandings occurred; what occurred was, on the contrary, a signal failure on the part of the Chinese Government to meet its engagements.

The Premier adds that China is in absolute need of the groups' financial assistance, and that if she fails to obtain it there is every risk of an outbreak of disorder.

The ministers can only remind the Wai Chiao Pu of the great readiness displayed by the group of banks to inaugurate advances to China as soon as the new Government was formed, and of their willingness, even during the recent disturbances in Peking and North China, to continue to advance her monthly considerable sums sufficient, in fact, to enable her to take all necessary steps to prevent the recurrence of these outbreaks.

Under the circumstances the ministers do not feel justified in advising the representatives of the group banks to resume negotiations with the representatives of the Chinese Government until effective steps have been taken by that Government to secure respect for the pledges given to the groups.

Still less are the ministers disposed to give their consent to the resumption of negotiations in view of the fact that, subsequent to their protest, the Chinese Government has thought fit by signing a fresh contract with the Belgian syndicate, to act once again in contravention of the pledges given to the groups on March 9.

The Premier, the Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs, and the Acting Minister for Finance to the Ministers of the four Powers.

APRIL 27, 1912.

SIR: Whereas the loan contract between the former Minister for Finance and the Belgian syndicate, entered into on the 18th of February of the present year and approved by the President on the 14th of March, is in conflict with the letter relating to advances and a loan given by the President to the four-power syndicate on the 9th of March, the Chinese Government now regards the President's letter of the 9th of March to the four-power syndicate to be of force and undertakes to cancel the clauses of the contract formerly made with the Belgian syndicate which refer to a loan of £10,000,000. After they shall have carefully consulted and agreed they will in turn inform the representatives in Peking of the four powers that they may take note of the fact.

Furthermore, the money received by the Chinese Government from the Belgian syndicate will not be repaid to the Belgian syndicate from any funds hereafter borrowed from the four-power syndicate.

We have the further honor to request that your excellency will take note hereof and direct the four-power syndicate at once to resume negotiations with the Acting Minister of Finance with regard to advances of money so as to relieve the very dangerous situation. This will be just and expedient.

No. 539.]
AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, May 7, 1912.

SIR: I have the honor to report details as to the pending loan negotiations.

The breaking off of negotiations between the bankers and Tang Shao-yi, caused by the Belgian loan contract, occurred on March 15. The latter thereupon left Peking for Nanking. He did not return to Peking until on or about April 19. Immediately on his return he addressed a note to Sir John Jordan, the British minister, asking for an interview with him and with the French, German, and American ministers. This request was granted and an interview was had at the British legation on the afternoon of April 23.

At this meeting Tang attempted to explain his side of the controversy between the bankers and himself. He finally asked what he could do to clear up the situation so as to permit the renewal of negotiations. Both the French and British ministers told him they each had specific instructions not to permit further negotiations unless the Chinese would undertake to cancel the Belgian contract, because it was in violation of or inconsistent with the contract of March 9; when that was done they would instruct their bankers to resume negotiations. The meeting ended without any definite statement as to what Mr. Tang would do.

Late on the evening of the 27th an identic communication[1] was received by each of the four ministers, which conformed in its terms to the suggestions of the ministers.

On the 29th of April the four ministers agreed to accept it as sufficient and to notify the bankers to resume negotiations.

On April 30 the bankers met with Tang and the latter then stated that the requirements of the Government were much more than first specified. He would now require something like 35.000,000 taels, to be paid over in varying weekly installments for the succeeding five weeks, with 2,000,000 taels for famine relief, and also £1,000,000 for payments due on war ships purchased, in addition. He further said that after June 15, and until October 15, 10,000,000 taels per month would be required. The bankers asked for time to confer with their principals. Upon their own initiation the bankers drafted a plan whereby the payment and disbandment of the troops might be carried on under foreign supervision.

On May 2 the bankers again met Mr. Tang and Shih Chao-chi (Alfred Sze), the Acting Minister of Finance, and the plan aforesaid was submitted to them. It was rejected in the most pronounced way. The bankers asked the Chinese officials to suggest some other plan which might secure the end desired without offending Chinese susceptibilities. But to this suggestion no reply, so far, has been made.

On May 6 the four ministers, together with the Russian and Japanese ministers, met together for the first time to consider the loan situation. I expressed the opinion that the peace of the country was endangered unless money is furnished wherewith to pay troops and thereby prevent further outbreaks and riots. It was agreed that the situation was critical, and all the ministers expressed the desire to help the Chinese, but they thought we were face to face with the question whether or not large sums of money were to be handed over to the Chinese without any supervision over or check upon the expenditure or application of the same.

We were then informed that Tang Shao-yi had notified Mr. Hillier that Hsiung Hsi-ling, the Minister of Finance, had arrived at Peking and would like to see the bankers at once, and that Mr. Hillier had replied they were ready to meet him at any time he named. I am informed, at this writing, that such conference is now going on between the Minister of Finance and the bankers.

I have, etc.,

NOTE.—On May 15, 1912, the bankers in conference at London telegraphed to their representatives a proposal of an agreement which is referred to occasionally in the subsequent correspondence. It was not perfected and adopted until June 20, under which date a summary of its provisions will be found.

Department of State,

As to the proposition to be sent to Peking by the London conference setting forth the terms and conditions relating to the preliminary advances and reorganization loan, the Department has made the following statement to the American group:

> The Department adheres to its previously stated general views as to control, protection of loans, and financial agency.
> The conditions laid down in the proposed telegram to Peking may be very difficult for China to accept at present in their entirety, and the Department believes that if they are to be presented a separate arrangement should be made on the basis of the understanding already reached at Peking for the prompt payment of the essential provisional advances.
> The present negotiations with China are of such great importance that the Department feels they should not be broken off without opportunity for full and deliberate consideration and consultation between the groups and the respective governments.

In a letter of April 1 to the American group[1] the Department suggested that any uniform measures of control adopted with respect to future Chinese Government loans might perhaps include substantially the following features:

[1] Not printed.

Specific statement of purposes of loan; public statements of accounts; foreign auditors and accountants; foreign advisers and experts when necessary; administration by maritime customs when necessary of revenues pledged as security.

For the further protection of the lenders, to secure from China an undertaking not to negotiate any subsequent loan that might conflict with the legitimate interests or weaken the security of any prior loan negotiated with the approval of the governments concerned.

As to the fiscal agency, the Department stated that it would see no objection in principle provided such agency was acceptable to China and the feature of potential monopoly could be safeguarded, but considered this primarily a question for the groups and the Chinese Government to determine.

You may discuss the matter informally with the Minister for Foreign Affairs, stating our action and inquiring what views have been expressed to the bankers on the subject.

Washington, May 18, 1912.

You will communicate the following memorandum textually to the Foreign Office, and repeat to London and Berlin:

In view of what it is hoped is only a temporary withdrawal of the Japanese and Russian bankers the following is communicated to the Governments of Great Britain, France and Germany:

From the first the Government of the United States has favored the principle of broad internationalization of loans to China, and would consequently favor the admission of Austria and Italy, thus enlarging the group to eight (assuming the continued participation of Russia and Japan) presumably on a basis of a smaller share of investment, to be determined by the bankers now negotiating. This would enlarge the six-power group (as including Russia and Japan) to include all the first-class powers signatory to the Boxer protocols.

As for the other powers commercially or financially interested in China, the Government of the United States also inclines to the belief that it might strengthen the situation to favor participation by the bankers of such powers if they were granted subsidiary participation in the shares allotted to the principal groups.

The Government of the United States would, if the issue became hopeless, deprecate insistance upon exclusive fiscal agency; and if something more were desired by the bankers in addition to the other broad conditions for control, protection of loans and security, the United States would desire to raise the question whether it might not be feasible to avoid the monopolistic feature and the possible semblance of too great foreign authority involved, by the substitution of a provision to the effect that the Chinese Government would engage with the respective Governments not to negotiate any large loan except with the combined banking groups and their associates, or with corresponding groups of the same nationalities, and upon the same broad principles of internationalization.

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
London, May 20, 1912.

The chief causes which led to the suspension of the London conference appear to be:

1. Both Russians and Japanese claim that their respective groups should have right to issue abroad through any agencies they themselves select and not necessarily through the other groups, which is contrary to principle adopted in interbank agreement 10th of November, 1910.

2. Japanese desired declaration that proceeds of reorganization loan would not be expended in Manchuria and Mongolia.

3. Japanese endeavored to confine future business in this six-loan agreement to Government and provincial loans and that companies bearing Government or provincial guaranties should not be included.

No. 551.] AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, May 21, 1912.

SIR: Continuing my No. 539 of May 7, and referring to my telegram of 11 p. m. of the same date[1] and that of May 16, 9 p. m., I have the honor to report satisfactory progress in the negotiations with respect to certain advances of funds to meet the immediate requirements of the Provisional Government.

The Minister of Finance met the groups' representatives on May 7, and, after a friendly conference, a memorandum was drawn up noting that 6.000.000 taels were needed immediately, one-half of this amount for Peking and the remainder for Nanking, and recording the promise of the Minister to submit to the Cabinet the next day a plan alternative to that of May 1 submitted by the group on the 2d of May to the Premier, which was reported in my No. 539, mentioned above. This alternative plan provided satisfactory conditions for the supervision of expenditures and specified the security to be offered and the method of its administration. The memorandum noted, further, that a statement would be submitted at once of the purposes for which the 6,000,000 taels asked were to be expended.

On the 8th of May the promised statement was sent and showed in detail the amounts needed between April 17 and May 16. It thus appeared that 3,154,000 taels were needed in Peking for the payment of troops, the payment of pensions of the bannermen, allowances to the imperial family, and sundry other items, and that some 4,500,000 taels would be needed for the redemption of the military notes issued by the Nanking government.

[1] Not printed.

On May 9, after conference with the Cabinet, the Minister of Finance replied formally in writing to the groups' memorandum of May 1, repeating the objections already made orally to the groups' proposals for the employment of a foreign expert auditor and for the supervision by foreign military officers of the disbandment and payment of Chinese troops. He inclosed a plan for the reform of the army which had that day been agreed upon by the Cabinet and the high military authorities which he believed would result in a satisfactory disbandment of the superfluous troops.

To this note the groups' representatives sent a reply on May 10, a copy [1] of which is inclosed, expressing regret that the proposals made did not meet with the approval of the Chinese Government and voicing the hope that the Government would reconsider the questions of principle involved and the belief that a frank interchange of views would lead to a mutual understanding.

This opened the way to another conference between the Minister of Finance and the groups' representatives on May 11, at which, after long discussion, the Minister himself proposed a very practicable plan for the pay of the troops in the Provinces and the disbandment of a portion of them under the supervision of an officer representing the Central Government in association with the local commissioner of customs, the funds needed being taken from the customs receipts as far as possible, the amounts thus expended being replaced from the advances to be made by the groups.

It was also agreed that an audit department should be created to consist of a foreign auditor paid by the groups and a Chinese auditor paid by the Chinese Government, with the necessary staff of foreigners and Chinese to be paid by the Chinese Government, the auditors to inspect all pay sheets, etc., and to sign all orders upon the banks for the withdrawal of funds.

These conditions were embodied in a set of seven regulations, a draft of which was submitted by the groups' representatives to the Minister of Finance in a note dated May 12, a copy of which is inclosed.

These proposals were submitted to the Advisory Council on May 13. The council was persuaded to agree to the conditions, provided better could not be obtained.

When Mr. Hsiung, the Minister of Finance, subsequently met the groups' representatives in conference he suggested certain amendments of the seven regulations mentioned above. The only important change made was in the text of article 3, which was amplified and so altered as to provide that the auditors, after satisfying themselves that the pay sheets, etc., were in order, should sign the orders for withdrawal of funds "without further question."

On the night of May 16 other points upon which agreement was reached were that on the conclusion of the provisional advances the audit department should be abolished; that in any comprehensive loan that might be made for productive undertakings a foreign chief accountant approved by the groups should be engaged for each such productive enterprise, who would, conjointly with the Chinese director, sign all orders for the withdrawal of funds, and that accounts of all such undertakings should be audited by an auditor to be employed by the groups.

The proposed loan, the Minister stated, would be devoted to three objects—50,000,000 taels to the building of the Kaifeng-Haichow Railway, 50,000,000 taels to the reorganization of the salt gabelle, and a similar amount to the organization of a Government bank.

On May 17 the groups' representatives addressed a note to the Minister of Finance informing him that 1,500,000 taels were placed at the disposal of his Government in Shanghai and a similar amount in Peking, subject to certain conditions set forth in the note. The first of these provides that this sum of 3,000,000 taels is to be treated in conjunction with the advances, amounting to 3,000,000 taels, referred to in the letter addressed to the President on March 9, thus making a total of 6,000,000 taels advances to be governed by gold treasury bills.

Another condition specified that the Chinese Government engages to "grant no applications of the provincial authorities for permission to borrow funds from other parties without first applying to the groups".

Yesterday the revised regulations and other conditions under which the present advance is made formed the subject of discussion at a secret session of the council and the council decided that since the agreement had been concluded it would have to be accepted.

I have, etc.,

W. J. Calhoun.

[Inclosure.]

Draft regulations for the supervision of expenditure of provisional advances.

1. An audit department to be created adjacent to the Ministry of Finance, composed of an auditor employed and paid by the groups and auditor employed and paid by the Chinese Government and the necessary foreign and Chinese staff, who will be selected by the auditors and paid by the Chinese Government.

2. All orders on the banks for the withdrawal or transfer of funds must be signed by said auditors.

3. The Ministry of Finance will publish periodically in the Official Gazette estimates of expenditure required for the various Government departments, and will furnish to the audit department all such detailed pay sheets, statements, etc., as may be necessary to support requisitions for funds.

4. Each disbursement made will be covered by a detailed voucher in accordance with the practice of modern account keeping. These vouchers will be filed by the Ministry of Finance and will be inspected by the auditors.

5. With regard to the payment and/or disbandment of troops in the Provinces, a high military officer deputed by the Central Government and the local commissioner of customs will jointly examine and sign the pay sheets in triplicate, which will be furnished to them by the local military authorities. The aforesaid high military officer and the commissioner of customs will be accorded all necessary facilities for investigation. Of the aforesaid signed pay sheets one copy will be handed to the governor of the Province and the remaining two copies, together with the vouchers relating thereto, will be transmitted to the Ministry of Finance in Peking, who will hand one signed copy to the audit department.

6. The funds for disbursement will be in the hands of the commissioner of customs, who, in order to save the expenses of the unnecessary transfer of funds, will be entitled to employ the customs revenue collection for disbursement, after the same has been duly released by a corresponding transfer by order of the auditors from the funds of the provisional advances to the inspector general of customs account in Shanghai. If there should be any deficit in the sum required by the commissioner of customs for disbursement it will be made up by a remittance from the funds of the provisional advances under order from the auditors.

7. In case of disbursements for the payment and/or the disbandment of troops in Peking and its neighborhood, a high military officer deputed by the Central Government will cooperate with the auditors in examining and jointly signing the pay sheets in triplicate, and the said high military officer and auditors will be accorded all necessary facilities for investigation. Of the said signed pay sheets in triplicate one copy will be handed to the Ministry of Finance with the vouchers relating thereto and one copy will be retained by the audit department.

Referring to the Department's May 17, 3 p. m., the Department on the 22d instant telegraphed as follows to the American group:

> In response to the American group's request for still further expression of this Government's views regarding the proposed telegram to Peking, the Department can only refer to its communication May 17 to the group, calling particular attention to the reference therein to previous communications, all of which, taken together, appear to give a very complete expression of the views of this Government.
> However, to make partial recapitulation, the Department reiterates the view that the proposed measures involve primarily questions for the groups and the Chinese Government, and, moreover, feels that it would not be justified in making any objection provided the proposed arrangements proved acceptable to China and assuming that they were agreeable also to the majority of the other governments.
> The Department again calls especial attention to its attitude, repeatedly expressed, as to preliminary advances.

CHINESE LEGATION,
Washington, May 25, 1912.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I am in receipt of a cablegram from my Government stating that the loan negotiation between the four-power group and the Chinese Government has now reached a critical stage. While the result of the conference of the representatives of the four-power group has not yet been made known, it is feared that if the group persists in its intention to exact unreasonable terms the Chinese Government will be greatly hampered in the discharge of administrative functions and the task of maintaining order throughout the country will be made doubly difficult. The traditional policy of the Government of the United States toward China has invariably been one of justice and impartiality, having for its basis the maintenance of the open door and the integrity of China. Moreover the people of the United States have always taken a sympathetic interest in the efforts of the Chinese people to secure a greater degree of prosperity and peace, as evidenced by the concurrent resolution of Congress congratulating the people of China upon the establishment of the Republic. Relying therefore upon the sincere friendship between the United States and China, I have been instructed to appeal to your excellency to use your good offices so that the negotiation between my Government and the four-power group may reach a satisfactory conclusion.

File No. 893.51/908.

The Chinese Minister to the Secretary of State.

[Memorandum.]

CHINESE LEGATION,
Washington, May 27, 1912.

Throughout the loan negotiation with the four-power group the Chinese Government has invariably maintained a conciliating attitude. When on the 29th of February disorder broke out among some mutinous soldiers at Peking the Government, being in urgent need of funds, requested the group to make an immediate advance, and failing to secure such an advance after having awaited as long as possible the Government was finally obliged to obtain a loan through the Belgian bankers. Yet when negotiation was resumed with the four-power group rescission of this Belgian contract was readily agreed to by the Chinese Government.

Taking advantage of the financial condition of the Government the group pressed for further concessions, insisting upon the supervision over expenditures and disbandment of troops. When these proposals became known the whole country was unanimous in opposition to them.

Finally an understanding was reached through the finance minister whereby the disbandment of troops was to be arranged for through certain Chinese maritime customs officials specially designated by the Chinese Government, [and] provision was made for the creation of a bureau to which two representatives were to be appointed, one by the Board of Finance, the other by the four-power group, to take charge of the accounts pertaining to the advance.

The arrangement made for the disbandment of troops was to cease to operate and the bureau to be abolished as soon as the entire advance is paid over in October of the present year.

As regards the large industrial loan now pending, the Government is disposed to conform to the terms of similar industrial loans previously contracted by China.

While it is not yet fully known what attitude the four-power group will assume as the result of the conference at London, information has already reached the Government that the group intends shortly to bring pressure to bear upon certain American bankers who have made a loan to the Chili provincial government, and other foreign creditors who have made local loans, to ally themselves with the group. If the group decides to carry out its intention in this respect a most dangerous situation will be created, particularly at this stage when the underfed soldiers are clamoring for pay and the local bandits have not yet been entirely suppressed.

There seems to be no question as to China's ability to pay the interest and principal of any large loan she might contract. The salt monopoly alone is expected to yield an increase in revenue amounting to about 30,000,000 taels a year. Therefore it seems unreasonable that the four-power group should insist upon terms which have no direct bearing upon the question of security or mode of repayment.

The Department of State was reluctantly compelled to conclude from the information it received that the contract for the so-called Belgian loan signed on March 14 last was a material contravention of the terms of the agreement signed on March 9 with the group composed of American and other bankers, and accordingly instructed the American Minister at Peking to join the other representatives concerned in protesting against the said contract.

Since the cancellation of the Belgian contract by the Chinese Government the Department of State has however, out of regard for its traditional friendship and the critical conditions existing in China, consistently exerted its good offices to induce the interested bankers to advance, on terms mutually acceptable, the sums required to meet the immediate administrative necessities of the Chinese Government pending the negotiation by that Government and the bankers of a comprehensive loan for reorganization purposes.

American Embassy,
Paris, June 3, 1912—10 a. m.

The following is translation of French memorandum replying to the one contained in your May 27, 2 p. m. [May 18]:

On May 21 the Embassy of the United States was so kind as to make known the sentiment of the American Government regarding the request, such as that of Austria and Italy, for participation in the group of powers, and to express the idea that it should be practical to avoid the semblance of monopoly as well as of excessive foreign interference. On the first point the question is no longer complete. Although the Governments have testified their sympathy with the Austrian request, from a political point of view, the bankers rejected it at the London conference from the financial point of view, which is their province. Moreover, it may be observed in general that Austria is not the only one to formulate a request for participation and, no less than she, would the other demanding powers be disposed to be satisfied with a minor participation.

The guaranties of the bulk loan, the control of the employment of funds, the financial and administrative reorganization of China by the assistance of foreign experts—all these, in the actual condition of China, are obligations imposed upon the markets destined ultimately to support the burden of the loans. Moreover, the French Government has, like that of the United States, the desire to treat with the greatest consideration the Chinese people's feelings and will exert herself to find the formula most acceptable to their self-respect. The question in all its aspects will be examined in concord by the interested powers, since the program of the loan of reorganization will not be left to the dispositions of the bankers, but will form the subject of an agreement between the governments.

He knows that the bankers cannot answer definitely within the time he has fixed, as they are dependent on the result of the Paris meeting. The President told Williams that since the negotiations began three months have passed, during which the groups would neither loan nor permit others to loan; that the present need is too pressing to admit delay, the situation dangerous with revolt of troops in many Provinces and all Government operations blocked by lack of funds; he must have 6,000,000 taels before Wednesday festival which is the general settlement day. He appeared unyielding. There is persistent report here that Russia has arranged a loan of £10,000,000.

Paraphrase of telegram received by the Chinese Legation and handed to the Secretary of State June 16.

The President handed down a letter from the American Minister in which the Minister, under instructions from his Government, advised this Government to postpone action on the matter of the advance of the 21,140,000 taels which this Government had requested the financial group to pay over this month, until June 18, when the representatives of the group, at a meeting to be held in Paris, would decide whether or not to make the advance.

It is the custom of our people, adhered to with great strictness, to settle all accounts before our national festival days. The 19th of June is our national festival day and a large sum will be required to pay the troops and meet other expenses in arrears. The disorder in Shantung was due solely to arrears in payment to troops, and the condition here is perilous. But the group still persists in refusing to make any payment before the 19th—the festival day—thus rendering it well-nigh impossible for this Government to maintain order throughout the country.

In view of these facts the American Secretary of State is earnestly requested to use his good offices and cable the representatives of the financial group at Peking urging them to make an advance of 6,000,000 taels in accordance with the previous cablegram, thereby avoiding the necessity for this Government to turn to other sources for relief. As to the balance of 15,000,000 taels a slight delay would cause no serious inconvenience. The situation is most critical.

(2) provide that the revenues pledged as security should be administered by the Maritime Customs or a similar service;

(3) stipulate that the expenditure of the funds should be subject to supervision;

(4) provide that the advances should be considered a part of the large Reorganization Loan for which the groups held the option;

Department's June 26, 1 p. m. In view of the arrangement of their internal questions now reached by our respective groups of bankers, Sir Edward believes it important for their Government to come to an early understanding as to when and how far they could assume responsibility for large loans to China to be advanced under present circumstances. He thinks it essential that such loans should only be for purposes distinctly tending to secure order rather than for other schemes, however desirable—internal improvements, currency reforms, etc.—and hopes the Governments concerned will soon agree to this among themselves. Chinese talk about immediate loan for sixty millions seems to him merely an academical proposition, and Government had no right, by encouraging bankers to make such loan, to incur any responsibility for helping to collect it.

British minister in Peking has been instructed, if similar instructions are received by his colleagues, to inform the Chinese Government that powers would not approve of any loan by their nationals except on the general lines laid down in conditions stipulated in the telegram sent by the groups on May 15, to which the British Government had provisionally assented. The British Government does not attach particular importance to the financial-agency scheme, as its only object is to insure wise and effective control of expenditure, whether through an agency or otherwise.

SIR: * * * The opinion is entertained by my colleagues interested in the proposition and by the bankers as well, and I agree with them, that the Chinese will not submit to or accept the terms imposed by the bankers. It is evident that in the present temper of the people violent and widespread opposition to the large measure of control and supervision required will be manifested, even though the authorities here were disposed to accede thereto. And it is undoubtedly true that the Central Government does not have the power to enforce obedience to the terms of the contract, or the courage to attempt it if they had the power. The inevitable result is that a break must soon occur between the Chinese and the banking groups. It may be that the former will be able to negotiate some small loans here and there, but as long as the French market remains closed it is safe to say that no large loan can be floated. Some of the provinces, notably Hupeh and Kwangtung, are apparently taking care of themselves. They have disbanded and paid off a good many troops. They are said to be collecting some taxes. They have reestablished likin stations and are collecting some revenue therefrom. These are the richer, the more prosperous provinces, and no such result can be expected from the country generally. It is to be remarked that the more self-dependent the provinces are, the more independent they become, and the tie that binds them to the central government is thereby proportionately weakened.

The British Minister also called my attention to the fact that the salt gabelle was relied on as the principal security for the proposed loan. He doubted the sufficiency of that security. From the best information he could obtain, the net revenue which the central government had heretofore received was only about 13,000,000 taels per annum; and with no assurance that the Government will receive any larger proportion of it in the future than it has in the past, no increased security can reasonably be expected therefrom. Hence, he said, the important query is, What security have the Chinese to give for the additional loans? * * *

Hsiung Hsi-ling, the Minister of Finance, in his talk with me said there were now about 1,000,000 men under arms, and to disband all but about 400,000 was the purpose of the Government, and the proceeds of the desired loan were to be applied to that end. * * * I told the Minister that we only desired that the proceeds of the loans should be carefully guarded, wisely used and honestly accounted for, so that the money might help China rather than impose a heavy debt upon her without any corresponding benefits. * * *

The Foreign Office feels that although the position of the American group in insisting on preserving the principle of the reorganization scheme in all future loans is absolutely necessary in theory, there are many practical difficulties in the way. Sir Edward Grey does not wish to insist on a plan too onerous for China at this juncture, which might lead to renewed trouble between the Central Government and the Provinces. He thinks that by imposing proper conditions and safeguards on independent loans, China may be helped to preserve order; after which the general reorganization scheme could be taken up.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Under instructions from my Government I have the honor to transmit for your information the following statement relative to the loan negotiations between my Government and the international syndicate:

[The statement begins with a reference to the delays caused by the international syndicate, and concludes as follows.]

Since the establishment of the present Government its financial needs have been so pressing that its stability was endangered by the delay on the part of the syndicate. Now that the syndicate has failed to conform to the arrangement agreed upon on March 9 covering certain advances for June and July, this Government is unable to wait any longer. There has been vigorous opposition by the people to the terms of the syndicate, whose chief object is to place itself in the position of financial agent for the Government, thus securing complete control of the nation's finances. In view of the earnest desire of this Government to invite foreign capital for the development of natural resources, it would be mutually advantageous for the foreign Governments to withhold their support from this syndicate in its attempt to establish a financial monopoly.

Peking, July 15, 1912.

SIR: Referring to the instruction expressed in your telegram of July 2, 12 noon, I have the honor to report that when the British minister was informed that all the six ministers interested in the pending loan negotiations had received instructions from their respective Governments upon the subject, he called a meeting of such ministers for the afternoon of July 8, at the British legation. * * *

It was then agreed by the ministers that the instructions received were directory in their terms, and, therefore, required that the ministers formally notify the Chinese in accordance therewith.

On July 9 the six ministers went together to the Waichiao Pu, where they were received by Mr. Lou Cheng Hsiang, the Premier, and Minister for Foreign Affairs, and by Mr. Hsiung Hsi-ling, the Minister of Finance. Sir John Jordan, the British minister, addressing his remarks to the Premier, spoke substantially as follows:

> Our respective Governments have instructed us to inform your excellency that they can not approve of any loan being made to the Chinese Government by their nationals except upon the general lines of the conditions which are understood to have already been communicated by the representatives of the six groups to his excellency the Minister of Finance.

The Minister of Finance said it was impossible to accept the terms proposed. He had hoped that the ministers would induce or advise the bankers to relax the conditions specified in favor of a lesser loan of £10,000,000. He referred to Prince Ch'ing, who made a railroad contract contrary to the wishes of the people, and the result was a revolution. The same fate, he said, will attend the present Government if it disregards the will of the people.

The British minister then asked the Minister of Finance if the ministers present were authorized to inform their respective Governments that the Chinese Government refused to accept the terms of the proposed loan. Without directly replying to the question, the Minister of Finance turned to the British minister and asked him personally to use his influence to induce the bankers to relax their terms. He said the British minister had been influential in bringing about peace between the north and the south, and it was hoped that his like good offices would be used to induce the bankers to relax their terms. Sir John Jordan said he had no authority to do so. After a few general remarks the meeting adjourned and the foreign ministers left the conference.

The French Chargé d'Affaires to the Secretary of State.

According to information received from the Legation of the French Republic at Peking, the German firm Diedrichsen has just obtained a concession for the Peking tramways providing an advance of 8,000,000 marks to the Chinese Government. This business, first offered to the Russo-Chinese Bank, was refused by it owing to its financial character, as being contrary if not to the text at least to the spirit of the agreements between the financial groups of the consortium, sanctioned by the Governments.

On the other hand the German Government, undoubtedly foreseeing business of this kind, thought it proper in instructions given to its Minister in China to distinguish between financial loans and those bearing an industrial character, German subjects being free, at his discretion, to contract loans of the character last mentioned.

The matter being thus, the French Government instructed its Ambassador in Berlin to make it clear to the Imperial Government that the said instructions are not, in the opinion of the French Government, in accordance with the financial agreements which France made it a point for its nationals to respect in the most rigorous way, as has been proved in the Cottu loan, which is similar in every respect to the Diedrichsen loan.

The French Government has instructed the French Embassy to ask the United States Government whether, should the American Government share its views in this matter, they did not think it fit to give their Ambassador in Berlin the same instructions as those given to M. J. Cambon.

The French Chargé d'Affaires states that the French Ambassador at Berlin has been instructed to point out to the German Government that the concession sought by a German firm for the Peking tramways, providing also for an advance to the Chinese Government, is not in accordance with the financial agreements sanctioned by the six Governments.

If your interested colleagues are instructed in the same sense you may cooperate with them by informing the Minister for Foreign Affairs that this Government has on several occasions expressed concurrence with the other interested Governments in the view that no loans should be made to China without adequate provisions for the supervision of expenditures substantially on the bases of the bankers' telegrams of May 15–June 20. This position was confirmed by the proposal recently initiated by the six ministers at Peking, that each before approving of any loan should be assured that its provisions as to control are satisfactory. In this connection the last paragraph of the Department's note to the German Ambassador of February 3, 1912, is appropriate.

American firms desirous of engaging in business of this character have uniformly been deterred because the Department, mindful of the international understanding regarding loans to China, deemed that in addition to insistence upon proper control it would be unwise to encourage any provincial or municipal loans until more stable financial conditions have been established in China.

Regarding the proposal of the British group that negotiations with China for the reorganization loan be resumed, and also their suggestion in connection therewith that a modification of the loan terms agreed upon at the Paris conference be considered, the Department on the 12th instant informed the American group that it had no objection to interpose to the proposal as a present expedient and without prejudice to what may prove the wisest course in later eventualities; also that the Department attaches the greatest importance, first, to the preservation of the financial understanding among the powers; second, to leading China to the acceptance of reasonable and adequate supervision of expenditures. In advancing these two aims the Department would welcome any transaction good in itself and tending toward ultimate broad financial reform in China, but would not think it wise to discourage a plan otherwise acceptable simply because it did not go the full length of broad financial reorganization. Moreover the Department assumes that any alternative suggestion that the Chinese Government may see fit to make, and which should include adequate and reasonable terms of supervision, would be carefully and sympathetically considered by the group.

The British Foreign Office is much embarrassed by attacks upon it for its support of the Hongkong Bank to the exclusion of all other British financial interests, and the Minister feared its effect. The proposed loan, if floated, will more than absorb all possible revenue securities, it is believed here, and the sextuple group would then have no excuse for its continuance. The bankers suggest that the six ministers jointly warn the Chinese that if they go on with the London loan the bankers will demand repayment of advances already made out of its proceeds.

Your September 25. The Department attaches the highest importance to the broad principle of international cooperation and concerted action; in pursuance of a policy harmonious with that principle and looking to the best interests equally of China and the other powers, the Department believes China must adopt adequate measures of supervision and control; in the Department's opinion the work of the six-power groups is a most valuable factor in the application of that policy and in connection with those measures; and the Department would be greatly disappointed if the present confusion should seriously interfere with the success of that policy.

The Legation will regard the foregoing as fundamental and will use every effort to combat anything tending to jeopardize a policy of long standing and so clearly set forth in previous instructions.

The initiative in any joint protest may well be left to Great Britain. Among possible bases of protest it may be opportune to consider the moral obligations of China and the effect of the recently negotiated loan upon the Hukuang Railway bonds, upon the currency-reform loan, and upon China's credit in the future and its ability to meet its international obligations, which may be pressed at any moment.

BRITISH EMBASSY,
Kineo, Me., September 28, 1912.

SIR: With reference to previous correspondence on the subject of the Chinese loan I have the honor to inform you that my Government learns from His Majesty's Minister at Peking that the Chinese Government have broken off negotiations with the six-power consortium. The issue of the prospectus of a loan of ten millions by a London financial house has immediately followed this action, subscriptions for half the loan having been invited in London on the 27th instant. * * *

In justification of their action the Chinese Government declare that the unbending attitude of the groups has made it impossible to arrive at any settlement; that they regard as unacceptable the original conditions demanded by the groups, and the latter categorically refuse to consider any modifications of their conditions. * * *

His Majesty's Government are of opinion that a relaxation of conditions would be justified by (1) the indications of improvement in the general situation in China; (2) the evident determination of the Chinese Government at all costs to resist any proposal that the pledged security be subject to foreign administration; (3) the fact that it is already agreed to substitute a reduced loan for the £60,000,000 loan already contemplated, a circumstance which would justify a less stringent system of control.

His Majesty's Government pledged themselves to give to the groups their exclusive support in and during the negotiations, the definite failure of which has completely changed the situation. In view of the altered circumstances the powers will no doubt continue to withhold their support from any loan floated by their respective subjects unless adequate security and suitable guaranties for the proper expenditure of the proceeds are given. As a condition of approving any such loan they will also insist upon the repayment to the groups of the advances already made. But if the possibility of an agreement with the groups be precluded there could be no question of forbidding China to obtain financial assistance on any terms from outside. His Majesty's Government would find it difficult to defend such a prohibition even in theory, while it would, as is clearly demonstrated by the present regrettable experience, be ineffective in practice.

It is therefore for consideration whether the groups should not make a last effort to come to terms with the Chinese Government. The British group in London do not consider the latest Chinese proposals unreasonable and they are surprised and deeply regret that these proposals were summarily rejected at Peking without any reference home. The British group in London are now urging the other groups to reopen immediate negotiations at Peking on the basis of the proposals of the Chinese Government, and it is the hope of His Majesty's Government that the Governments concerned will speedily approve this course, since unless an agreement is concluded without delay there will be no alternative but the final abandonment of the negotiations, with the consequences already indicated.

Excellency: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your excellency's note No. 192 of the 28th ultimo, which concludes with an intimation that His Britannic Majesty's Government hopes that the other Governments concerned in the international understanding with regard to the Chinese loans may early approve the reopening of negotiations by the representatives of the groups at Peking on the basis of the most recent proposals of the Chinese Government.

[1] Copies mailed to Paris, Berlin, St. Petersburg, and, for their information, to Tokyo and Peking.

I receive your excellency's communication as inviting a statement of the position of the Federal Government upon this particular point, but the extreme gravity of the questions involved, like the extensive context of this one phase thereof, makes me feel it my duty first to attempt some broader elucidation of the views of this Government upon the general subject and upon some of the other points set forth in your excellency's note under acknowledgment.

The Government of the United States would be sorry to discover in the real position of the British Government any material divergence from the accordant fundamental views hitherto shared by both Governments with so happy effect, I believe, upon the common interest and the general course of events. The exchanges of views between first the four and later the six Governments, the painstaking negotiations with successive Chinese Governments, and the tireless efforts of the bankers of the six groups, have extended in one form or another over a period of three or four years. The result has been an agreement between the powers upon the broad principle of international cooperation and concerted action in favor of international loans to China upon thoroughly sound and helpful bases as best alike for China and the powers, the six Governments being in accord upon the principle of insistence upon adequate provisions for audit and control of expenditures which shall have the effect of protecting China from improvident extravagances, of maintaining China's credit, and of assuring the value of bonds to be issued.

Attaching the most serious importance to what has thus been accomplished, and recognizing not only the good results already obtained but looking also to the great potentialities of future benefit from a continuance of this policy, the Government of the United States could hardly conceive for a moment of considering the question of abandoning so momentous and far reaching a policy merely because confronted from time to time with some temporary embarrassment or untoward incident.

China's rejection of the proposals of the groups, so far from being regarded as definitive, was unhesitatingly assumed by this Government to be nothing more than a not unnatural occurrence in the give and take of a negotiation whose very importance and intricacy would suggest most thorough deliberation and long duration. The rejection by the groups of China's counterproposal was quite similarly regarded by the Government of the United States.

As for the recent London loan, the Government of the United States appreciates fully the difficulties met by the British Government in seeking to deter its nationals from making loans to China inconsistent with the international understanding thereon and is very sensible of the great efforts made to that end. The information that has reached the Department has seemed to indicate that, doubtless due to the attitude of your excellency's Government, the success of that loan has been so slight as to make it at least as likely to operate in the future as a deterrent to future efforts to break down the principles which the powers have deemed it wise to favor in regard to Chinese loans as it would be to operate as an opening wedge for the breaking up of the international agreement. Moreover, while regretting, as does your excellency's Government, the inconvenience caused by that incident, the Government of the United States has felt every confidence in the ability of your excellency's Government ultimately to minimize any bad effect upon the fixity of the principles laid down, and this Government still hopes that, through bringing about a broader participation of divers British interests or by some other expedient which may suggest itself, your excellency's Government may still find itself as fully able to deal with this situation as have the other Governments of the six-power group been able able to deal with corresponding situations which have arisen in this country and elsewhere.

Indeed, the Government of the United States sees in the present situation no reason whatever why the international understanding should not continue quite as strong and effective as hitherto. Holding these views, this Government would be surprised to interpret as reflecting more than the temporary anxiety of the British group any suggestion that instant action is necessary to save the situation, that only one more effort could be made, or that there is any valid reason for an abandonment of the principles to which the six Governments and the six groups have agreed to adhere.

To return to the suggestion that the bankers should resume negotiations upon the basis of the latest counterproposal of the Chinese Government, the Government of the United States has no reason to doubt that the American group have been and still are quite ready to take any opportune occasion to resume discussions upon any reasonable basis. Inasmuch as the Chinese counterproposal appears to go rather far in the direction of admitting in principle the ideas of supervision and control of expenditures, it may be possible that something like that counterproposal could be taken as the point of departure in a resumption of discussions between the Chinese Government and the representatives of the bankers, especially if the Chinese Government would offer some satisfactory provision, corresponding to the option previously asked, which would assure absolute protection of the security previously given, or by other means give sufficient guaranty of the stability of the bonds which the six-power group might be asked to take from China.

I am unable to perceive that the size of a loan which might be proposed should affect the principles for which the powers contend and I am impressed with the desirability for the sake of the credit of China of establishing a precedent for conservative and safe provisions. The Department's advices indicate no change in the general situation in China of a character to affect its view of the importance of principles which are a part of the international understanding: nor is the Department prepared to believe that the ability of China just now to borrow a small amount on its own terms can, in view of the large financial needs of the future, place it in a position long to resist proposals involving principles upon which the six powers deem it their duty to insist.

Believing that your excellency's Government would be the first to deplore any rash or unnecessary abandonment of a great and useful policy, I hope that your excellency will be good enough to impress upon His Britannic Majesty's Government the great importance attached by the Government of the United States to the existing common accord.

In regard to the specific question raised by your excellency's note, I am happy to assure you that the Government of the United States will be glad to intimate to the American group the desirability of their holding themselves in readiness to resume at any opportune time discussions upon any basis generally consistent with the principles of the international accord and tending toward ultimate broad financial reform in China.

In making this response I trust it is unnecessary to say that the Government of the United States must rely upon your excellency's Government to make sure that no temporary exigency of the British group shall be allowed to jeopardize negotiations in which so many powers are so greatly interested and for the success of which surely the most patient efforts and much time would be well spent, while the lack of these could so easily make comparatively futile the work of so many years.

Peking, October 5, 1912—3 p. m.

On September 30 the Belgian company that constructed railway Kaifeng to Honan signed a new contract to build line from Haichou via Kaifeng to Lanchou, in Kansuh, for 215,000,000 francs, the railway to be security. When contract ratified, 5,000,000 taels will be paid China, nominally to purchase line already constructed.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
No. 645.] Peking, October 22, 1912.

SIR: I have the honor to report that the concession granted by the Chinese to the Belgians for the railroad from Lanchow in Kansu to Haichow on the sea continues to be a matter of interest and has had a disturbing effect upon the minds of the local representatives of the sextuple groups. They fear that a general campaign for concessions is about to be inaugurated by outsiders, which will prove detrimental to the interests of the groups in more ways than one.

The groups are in an embarrassing position. The conditions they imposed for the reorganization loan, so called, were approved by their respective Governments. They do not believe it safe or expedient to modify these conditions in any material degree and will not do so unless their Governments consent. Both the bankers and the powers supporting them, although actuated by different motives, are really working to the same ends. Those ends are: the control of the amount of the indebtedness that China is to contract, so as to avoid financial improvidence and national bankruptcy; the reform of the administration of the revenue pledged as security for the proposed loan, so as to make it efficient for that purpose; and the supervision of the expenditure of the loan proceeds, in order that they may not be wasted or applied to private use. These ends are in the interest of the Chinese people and serve to promote and preserve their national integrity.

The Chinese object to the proposed terms and conditions. They want no control, no supervision, no auditing or accounting. They admit the present inadequacy of the security offered—the salt revenue—and the necessity for its reform; but they want to reform it in their own way and at their own convenience. They are now hostile to the groups and have broken off all negotiations therewith, and there is now no prospect of the renewal of the same in the near future. In the meantime other parties have come into the field and made loans and obtained important concessions. The largest of these loans—that of the London syndicate—is made upon the same security previously offered the groups. In this London loan contract there is no provision for supervision of expenditures or for the audit of accounts or for improvement of security pledged. If this and other loans made were sufficient to supply China's needs perhaps the powers supporting the groups, and the groups themselves, would have no right to object. But unfortunately they are not large enough; they are, so to speak, "a mere drop in the bucket" or only a modicum of what China needs and must have. Therefore, instead of helping the Chinese out of their difficulties or clearing up the situation, these loans only make it worse. This London loan in particular adds to the burden imposed upon the salt revenue, increases the volume of securities to be thrown upon the market, and makes it that much harder to float any subsequent issue. And, what is worse, it demoralizes the Chinese and intensifies their opposition to the groups, to whom they must probably come in the end for the full measure of relief they require.

The Belgian concession evidences a return on the part of the Chinese to a policy which it was supposed they had irrevocably abandoned, that is, giving concessions instead of making straight loans. * * *

Under these conditions it is not strange that the local group representatives should feel a little nervous; * * * they are blocked on the reorganization loan and are thereby prevented from competing for industrial contracts on the joint account, and the combination agreement prevents them from acting on their individual account. In the meantime they are exposed to flank attacks by loan promoters and concession hunters.

It is doubtless true that if the groups remain firm, if the powers continue their exclusive support, and if the French market remains closed to these outside or sporadic loan issues, these loan promoters can not go very far in their efforts; their operations will be necessarily confined to rather narrow limits. But whatever they do, whether much or little, only serves to demoralize the Chinese and make them that much harder to deal with. * * *

I think the reasonable probabilities are that if the pending deadlock continues much longer, if other concessions like the one given the Belgians are granted, and if other loans like the one made by the London syndicate are effected, the tie that holds the groups together will break and a dissolution of the groups will result.

INTERNATIONAL PLAN FOR DEFENSE OF FOREIGN SETTLEMENTS UNDER THE FINAL PROTOCOL OF 1901.

File No. 893.00/544.

The American Chargé d'Affaires to the Secretary of State.

[Extract.]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
No. 298] Peking, July 25, 1911.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith copy of a memorandum of the 21st instant from the British Legation regarding an international plan of defense for the foreign settlements at certain Yangtze river ports in the event of disturbances involving danger to the lives of foreigners [etc.]

As conditions on the Yangtze river have been unsettled for some time and are likely to remain so indefinitely during the period of transition from an autocratic to a democratic representative form of government, and as the American communities in the riverine ports are small and totally unable to take steps adequately to protect themselves in the event of uprisings endangering foreign life and property, I believe it would be prudent to instruct our consuls in those ports to collaborate with their British colleagues with a view to effecting an arrangement for concerted action in defending these settlements. As the American residents in any of these foreign settlements would undoubtedly benefit from any international plan of defense that might be devised, it is obvious that they should bear their full share of responsibility for its maintenance.

In consideration of this question it occurred to me that the views of the admiral commanding the American Asiatic fleet would be valuable to the Department in deciding as to what course of action to pursue, and I have accordingly transmitted to Admiral Murdock a copy of the enclosed memorandum, asking him to transmit to the Navy Department an expression of his views thereon. The distribution of foreign men-of-war on the Yangtze cannot but be a most important factor in any international concerted plan of defense of these settlements.

In referring this question to the Department, I have the honor therefore to recommend favorable action on the inclosed memorandum, and would be pleased if you would inform the Legation of your views and instruct it concerning any course of action deemed necessary or advisable to take.

I have [etc.]

PERCIVAL HEINTZLEMAN.

[Inclosure.—Memorandum.]

The British Legation to the American Legation.

A revised scheme has been under consideration for the defense of the international settlements at the Yangtze ports of Chinkiang, Hankow, Nanking, Wuhu, Kiukiang, and at Amoy, in the event of disturbances involving danger to the lives of foreigners. The suggestion emanated from the British naval authorities, who considered that a concerted plan was necessary in order to enable them to render effective assistance if called upon in an emergency. His Majesty's Government however consider that any such plans would be greatly enhanced if the American authorities were disposed to lend their cooperation in carrying them out. The reports received from His Majesty's consular officers indicate that to a large extent their colleagues at the ports named are already cognizant of the proposed schemes and have signified in principle their approval of them. His Britannic Majesty's Legation has the honour, under instructions from His Majesty's Government, to inquire whether the American Legation would be disposed to instruct its consular officers to discuss further the details of the schemes at the several ports with their British colleagues with a view to completing arrangements for an international plan of action.

Replying to your telegram, October 14, the Japanese Government can not form an opinion as to the advisability of a concentration of American citizens. Regarding protective measures they are considering sending three more light-draft gunboats to the Yangtze equipped with wireless to establish rapid communication between Hankow and Shanghai. For this purpose there must be a vessel at least every 100 miles. It is suggested that several light-draft American gunboats equipped with wireless be sent to the Yangtze to cooperate with the Japanese vessels to keep communication open.

No further action determined upon for the present, and foreign office informs me none will be taken without previously advising me.

Japanese expect severe battle at Hankow within two days; therefore gunboats now there can not be detached for the service elsewhere. Chinese Government have informed the dean of the diplomatic corps that foreign concessions will not be harmed.

The British Minister observes that great difficulties attended a similar step at Chungking when the Szechwan troubles broke out, and that the movement now in progress has no anti-foreign character. The risk to foreigners in remaining where they are is, he thinks, scarcely such as to justify the expense and inconvenience of moving them in large numbers to Shanghai. Moreover, the Chinese Government would probably be averse from accepting the responsibility of protecting mission property unless the owners were forced to abandon it by stress of circumstances.

In view of Sir J. Jordan's opinion Sir Edward Grey deems it unnecessary at the present stage to resort to the step contemplated in your October 14.

The Department's telegram of October 14, announcing that the American Government was contemplating advising its nationals in the disturbed districts to remove to such open ports as could be protected by vessels of war excited some comment here. On the whole the diplomatic representatives here who were consulted by their Governments were not disposed to approve of the suggestion. The Legation expressed its views in its telegram of October 17. * * * Americans are scattered all over the Empire. Many of them can reach the coast only after journeys of a month or more at considerable expense, and where the whole country is in a state of excitement and unrest it seems to the Legation to be best for those in distant places to remain where they are well known rather than to undertake to reach the coast. In view of the fact that both parties to the conflict are anxious to protect foreigners and their interests there is less likelihood of attacks on Americans than in previous troubles. A general movement of foreigners to the seaports would, furthermore, occasion general alarm and not unlikely induce attacks upon their property. The Legation will of course when danger threatens spare no effort to warn those who can be reached and endeavor to remove to Peking, Tsiensin, Shanghai or other ports those who can reach such ports without encountering greater danger than that which menaces them at their homes. * * *

File No. 893.00/703.

The Japanese Minister for Foreign Affairs to the Japanese Chargé d'Affaires at Washington.

[Translation, undated, handed to the Secretary of State on November 27, 1911.]

The diplomatic corps at Peking, taking due notice of the latest development of the situation there, has decided, at its meeting of the 23d instant [November], to increase the legation guards there, the extent of such increase to be determined respectively by the various legations on the basis and within the limit of the number of international troops as reduced immediately after the Boxer trouble of 1900–1901. The above decision is only in reference to the guards in Peking. In view however of the fact that in Tientsin Great Britain and France have already some sufficient force, while Russia has lately added 200 men to her force there, Japan has decided to increase on this occasion her force in Tientsin at the same time as in Peking. This is because of Japan's present force in North China being small on account of the withdrawal she made in 1908 of four troops of infantry and one section of cavalry. It is estimated that with the proposed increase the total number of Japanese force in North China will be, including the commander and officers, 1243. Its distribution between Peking and other points is to be determined by conference of Japanese minister in Peking and commander of the guard.

The proposed reenforcing force is expected to arrive at its destination about the 2d or 3d of next month.

You are hereby instructed to communicate the above to the Government to which you are accredited.

CLAIMS OF AMERICAN CITIZENS AGAINST CHINA. JOINT PROCEDURE OF THE POWERS FOR PRESENTATION OF CLAIMS.

File No. 893.00/1217.

The Acting Secretary of State to the American Minister.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 4, 1912.

SIR: I have to enclose herewith for the information and guidance of the Legation copy of an instruction this day addressed to the Consul General at Hankow regarding the manner of treating claims of American citizens and firms growing out of the recent disturbances in China.

In replying to any requests on the part of the American consular officers in China for instructions as to what action, if any, they may properly take with reference to such claims, you should follow the instructions embodied in the inclosure to this communication.

I am [etc.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
No. 23.] Washington, April 4, 1912.

SIR: The Department is in receipt of your dispatch No. 23 of February 16, 1912,[1] reporting in regard to the massacre of American missionaries in Shensi Province and inclosing copy of a letter from Mr. E. E. Beckman in which he suggests that a proper indemnity be demanded for these outrages.

In reply you are instructed that until the establishment of a stable, responsible government it is not probable that any claim for indemnification of lives lost and for reimbursement of property destroyed during the recent disturbances will be presented to China. All such claims as may be filed with the Consulate General should in the meantime be carefully substantiated and the record in each case preserved in order that, when the Department deems the proper time to have arrived, all claims may be forwarded promptly to the Legation and to the Department for such formal action as the facts and circumstances of the particular claims may warrant.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
No. 513.] Peking, April 11, 1912.

SIR: I have the honor to report that at a meeting of the diplomatic representatives held on April 9, 1912, the French Minister referred to the fact that the legations are receiving from their nationals many claims against the Chinese Government for indemnification for losses sustained by them during the recent revolution. In order to avoid diverse or conflicting action on the part of the several legations in the presentation and adjustment of claims M. de Margerie suggested that some common procedure should be adopted and followed in regard to them. After some discussion it was agreed to appoint a commission, of which the American Minister was requested to act as chairman, the remaining members to be selected from the secretaries of legation, which commission should examine the claims sent in and formulate certain general principles in accordance with which the legations concerned should take action.

It is not intended that this commission shall pass upon claims nor that it shall determine the amount to be asked. After the principles formulated for the guidance of the legations shall have been accepted by the diplomatic body each legation will proceed to dispose of the claims of its own nationals in accordance with the principles agreed upon.

[1] Not printed.

In explanation of this action I have the honor to recall to the attention of the Department the fact that in past instances of the presentation of claims against the Chinese Government for losses sustained on account of riots some firms have included in their claim indemnities to Chinese employees. Some have included in the firm's claims those for losses of personal property sustained by members of the firm, while others have separated personal claims from those of the company. In many cases there has been difficulty in determining the amount of compensation for bodily injuries or loss of life, some legations demanding much greater compensation than others.

It is very desirable that there be uniformity of action by the several legations with respect to these and similar questions that may arise in considering the claims presented, and this result can perhaps be secured through the recommendations of such a commission as has been agreed upon.

I have replied to the Consul General that, as the rebels are not recognized by the United States as belligerents, I can not allow the seizure of American ships under any pretext; and that, while American vessel will clear line of fire in case of actual fighting, the request to do so while there are not any hostile men-of-war in China involves unnecessary inconvenience to trade guaranteed by treaty with titular Government.

ARRANGEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND FRANCE FOR RECIPROCAL PROTECTION IN CHINA OF LITERARY AND ARTISTIC PROPERTY.

File No. 893.54/296.

The American Minister to the Secretary of State.

No. 249.]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, May 31, 1911.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose herewith copy of a letter dated May 26, 1911,[1] addressed to me by the French Minister here requesting to be informed as to the willingness of the American Government to conclude an arrangement with the French Government by an exchange of notes between our two Legations here for the reciprocal protection of literary and artistic property in China. Mr. de Margerie refers in this letter to the arrangement effected several years since by an exchange of notes between certain of the treaty powers represented at Peking, providing for the protection of their trademarks in China,[1] and encloses copy of the convention of September 14, 1909, between Japan and France, which includes copyright as well as trademark protection in China. The French Minister states moreover that his Government, believing it might be to the common interests of our respective nationals to adopt, as regards the reciprocal protection of intellectual property in China, an arrangement similar to that contained in the Tokio convention, has instructed him to inquire whether the American Government would be favorable to the conclusion of such an arrangement, effected by an exchange of notes between our two Legations.

[1] Not printed.

While I have thus far received no complaint as to the infringement of American copyrights by foreigners in China, yet it is not at all unlikely that cases may arise at any time, particularly as large numbers of American textbooks are already in use and are gradually growing in favor in the new schools throughout the Empire, and the facilities for their re-publication are afforded by the numerous foreign publishing houses in the treaty ports of China. * * *

In this connection I beg to report that the attention of the Legation has recently been called to a number of infringements of American copyrights by Chinese publishing houses in China. Protection against these infringements is most urgent, and I feel constrained therefore to call the Department's serious attention to the importance of concluding a copyright convention with China. As to the utter inadequacy of Article XI of our present treaty[2] to afford any real protection in China to American literary property the Department is well aware. In my opinion it is only by a new convention that any effectual protection for American copyrights in China can be obtained. Even with the American-Japanese convention of May 19, 1908,[3] and the proposed arrangements with the other foreign treaty powers secured, and even if Chinese subjects were not given to infringing American copyrights, there would still be, in the absence of formal protection against Chinese infringement, the likelihood that foreigners in China would carry out their piracies under Chinese names or through Chinese agents. * * *

Legation of the French Republic in China,
Peking, December 26, 1911.

Mr. Minister: Our Governments being desirous of assuring to French and American citizens and subjects reciprocal protection in China of the rights of authors over their literary and artistic productions to the same extent that they are protected in French and American territories and possessions, I have been instructed by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of France to communicate to you the following:

1st. By virtue of the civil and criminal jurisdiction with which they are vested and which they exercise in China, the consuls and consular courts of France are competent to take cognizance of all complaints that may be laid before them relative to the violation of the rights of authorship by persons under French jurisdiction.

2d. Consequently whenever persons under American jurisdiction shall have occasion to address them in order to obtain respect from persons under French jurisdiction of their rights of authorship over their literary and artistic productions, including photographs, the complaints will henceforth be laid, in the first instance, before the consular court, and appeals will come before the appellate court at Saigon or Hanoi.

3d. The citizens of the possessions of the United States of America will enjoy in China the same treatment as the citizens of the United States of America.

4th. Unauthorized reproductions by persons under French jurisdiction, made previous to the first of January next, of literary, artistic or photographic works executed by persons under American jurisdiction, will be withdrawn from sale or circulation in China before December 31, 1912.

5th. Literary and artistic property in France is regulated by the law of March 28, 1897, which approves the convention signed at Berne on September 9, 1896, for the protection of literary and artistic productions, and also by the law of April 15, 1897, which approves the additional enactment and the declaration of May 4, 1896, modifying the convention of Berne.

I will be under great obligation to you if you will kindly take note of the present declaration and will inform me whether persons under French jurisdiction may count on the same legal protection from the consular authorities in China of the United States of America in all that concerns the ownership of literary and artistic productions.

Mr. Chargé d'Affaires and Dear Colleague: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of December 26, 1911, informing me that you have been authorized by your Government to effect with me by an exchange of notes an agreement for the reciprocal protection in China of French and American copyrights for literary and artistic productions.

I have the honor to inform you in reply that I have been authorized to state that henceforth protection will be afforded in China, in accordance with the laws of the United States and on condition of reciprocity, for the copyrights of French literary, artistic, musical or dramatic works, including photographs, duly registered in the United States, against infringement by persons under American jurisdiction. To that end the American courts in China will be competent to hear all such cases presented by citizens or subjects of France.

I have the honor further to inform you that the protection of literary and artistic property in the United States of America is provided for by the act of Congress of March 4, 1909, amending and consolidating previous acts respecting copyright (U. Although I have answered no despatches except those relating to the actual protection of the life of Americans, and then only by a personal letter, the new Government is constantly sending me despatches. These I am filing and leaving unanswered and have referred all of any importance or interest to the Legation.

Until this Provisional Government is recognized, their statement that "Property not shown in the lists, * * * will not be regarded as foreign property and on no account can foreigners request that the Chinese Government do anything for them in connection with the same", seems a little premature.

All property bought under the old regime was registered at the Yamens or at this Consulate, and was always considered foreign property if foreigners held the deeds thereto. Any change in this procedure seems to me to be a matter for arrangement between the Chinese Government and our Legation. Unless instructed to the contrary I shall continue to maintain this position in regard to American property.

FIRST INTERNATIONAL OPIUM CONFERENCE.—INTERNATIONAL OPIUM CONVENTION AND PROTOCOL DE CLOTURE.[1]

Senate Doc. 736, 61st Cong., 3d sess. Read January 11, 1911, referred to Committee on Foreign Relations.

Message of the President.

To the Senate and House of Representatives: In my annual message transmitted to the Congress on December 7, 1909, I referred to the International Opium Commission as follows:

> The results of the opium commission, held at Shanghai last spring at the invitation of the United States, have been laid before the Government. The report shows that China is making remarkable progress and admirable efforts toward the eradication of the opium evil, and that the Governments concerned have not allowed their commercial interests to interfere with a helpful cooperation in this reform. Collateral investigations of the opium question in this country lead me to recommend that the manufacture, sale, and use of opium and its derivatives in the United States should be, so far as possible, more rigorously controlled by legislation.

Since making that recommendation, I transmitted to the Congress on February 21, 1910, a report[2] on the International Opium Commission and on the opium problem as seen within the United States and its possessions, prepared on behalf of the American delegates to the commission, and I gave my approval to the recommendations made in a covering letter from the Secretary of State regarding an appropriation and the necessity for Federal legislation for the control of foreign and interstate traffic in certain menacing drugs, and requested that action should be taken accordingly.

The Congress has so far acted on the recommendations as to appropriate $25,000 to enable the Government to continue its efforts to mitigate, if not entirely stamp out, the opium evil through the proposed international opium conference and otherwise to further investigation and procedure.

I now transmit a further report from the Secretary of State giving cogent reasons why the opium-exclusion act of February 9, 1909, should be made more effective by amendments that will prohibit any vessel engaged in trade from any foreign port or place to any place within the jurisdiction of the United States, including the territorial waters thereof, or between places within the jurisdiction of the United States, from carrying opium prepared for smoking, and that would make it unlawful to export, or cause to be exported from the United States and from Territories under its control or jurisdiction or from countries in which the United States exercise extraterritorial rights where such exportation from such countries is made by persons owing permanent allegiance to the United States, any opium or cocaine, or any derivatives or preparations of opium or cocaine, to any country which prohibits or regulates their entry, unless the exporter conforms to the regulations of the regulating country.

The Secretary of State further points out a defect in the opium-exclusion act of February 9, 1909, in that smoking opium may be manufactured in the United States from domestically produced opium, and the pressing necessity for remedying that defect by an amendment to the internal-revenue act of October 1, 1890, that would place a prohibitive revenue tax on all such opium manufactured within the jurisdiction of the United States from the domestically produced material; and he further urges the enactment of legislation which will control the importation, manufacture, and distribution in interstate commerce of opium, morphine, cocaine, and other habit-forming drugs.

I concur in the recommendations made by the Secretary of State and commend them to the favorable consideration of the Congress with a view to early legislation on the subject.

Wm. H. Taft.

The White House,
Washington, January 11, 1911.

The Secretary of State to the President.

The President: On February 10, 1910, I had the honor to lay before the President, with certain recommendations, the report of the American delegates to the International Opium Commission, held at Shanghai in February, 1909. These recommendations were approved by the President and the report was transmitted to the Congress on February 21, 1910, and is, with my covering letter and the message of the President, contained in Senate Document No. 377, Sixty-first Congress, second session.

The report contained a full and comprehensive review of the historic attitude of the United States in regard to the opium evil as seen in the Far East and a review of the recent international movement, since its inception by the United States, to solve the problem. Primarily, it seems clear that the United States was compelled by its duty to the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands to secure international cooperation for the control of the production and illicit traffic in opium, which in the Orient had grown to enormous proportions, threatening, during the first few years of the American occupation of the islands, to debauch not only Chinese subjects resident there but the natives themselves. Shortly after the American occupation it was found that the vice of opium smoking was rapidly spreading from the resident Chinese to the Filipinos, so that whole communities of the latter were becoming impoverished and rendered unfit for any economic or political life in the islands.

To better this condition a committee was appointed by the Philippine Government to make a comparative study of the opium problem as seen in China, Japan, Burmah, the Straits Settlements, and Netherlands Indies. This committee, after an exhaustive study, presented its report in June, 1904, making therein certain recommendations which were aimed gradually to reduce and finally prohibit the use of opium in the Philippines except for medicinal purposes. The Congress, however, took a more advanced step, and by the act approved March 3, 1905, provided inter alia for the prohibition of the importation of opium in any form except for medical purposes on and after the 1st of March, 1908. This act, with the supplementary legislation of the Philippines Commission, and later of the Philippines Assembly, has been at least 60 per cent effective in preventing the abuse of opium in the islands, and it is hoped that if favorable action is taken in the prospective international opium conference that the exclusion of opium from the Philippine Islands except for medicinal purposes will be accomplished.

The action of the United States and Philippine Government in regard to the opium traffic in the islands appears to have had a profound influence on those Chinese statesmen who felt that the Chinese Government could and ought to destroy the vice of opium smoking in China. It was regarded as a friendly act that a neighboring Government in continuation of its historic attitude against the opium traffic in the Far East should pronounce so firmly against the misuse of opium in its Pacific possessions. At any rate, there was shortly initiated a new antiopium movement in China, out of which grew a direct appeal to the President of the United States from representative missionary societies and from commercial and reform institutions in the United States to the effect that this Government, considering its previous attitude in regard to the opium traffic in the Far East, should take the initiative in assisting China to secure the gradual prohibition of that traffic by the concurrent action of the powers concerned. Thereupon, in the autumn of 1906, the Department of State addressed a circular note to those powers having territorial possessions in the Far East, the object being the investigation of the opium problem by an international commission. The result was a happy one, for 12 of the most interested powers joined with the United States in an International Opium Commission, which met at Shanghai on the 1st of February, 1909. The commission made a thorough study of the opium question, not only as seen in the Far East, but in the home territories of the powers concerned. It developed that, in addition to a serious opium problem in the Far East, the United States had become contaminated by the vice, and that the habit of opium smoking had spread from Chinese subjects resident therein to a large number of Americans. Before adjourning on the 26th of February, 1909, the International Opium Commission unanimously adopted nine fundamental conclusions, which condemned the opium evil on both economic and moral grounds, at the same time making certain recommendations to the interested Governments for the control of the production and traffic in opium, which it was hoped would sooner or later become a part of international law. [For. Rel. 1909, p. 109.]

This community of opinion on the part of thirteen powers opened the way for the United States to propose that an international conference with full powers should meet to conventionalize the declarations of the International Opium Commission and the essential corollaries derived therefrom. Therefore, on September 1, 1909, the United States in a circular letter to the interested Governments, proposed that there should be such a conference, to assemble at The Hague, to devise measures for mutual protection against the illegal opium traffic. Since the United States proposed the conference the scope of the latter has steadily broadened and, on the suggestion of several of the cooperating Governments, it has been proposed that the conference include in its discussions the manufacture and traffic in other so-called habit-forming drugs, especially morphine and cocaine, the illicit use of which is widespread in the United States and is rapidly spreading throughout Indo-China and other parts of the Far East, threatening to become more baneful than the habit of opium smoking. [For. Rel. 1909, p. 107; 1910, pp. 298, 304, 325; 1911, p. 54.]

Thus, to the great credit of the several powers, a world-wide movement is on foot to control the production and traffic in opium and other habit-forming drugs, and the United States, with small financial interests at stake, having invited the cooperation of the several countries with great financial interests at hazard, has resting upon it a heavy responsibility to see that its own house is in order before the International Opium Conference meets at The Hague in 1911.

Although it may be claimed that the position of the United States in regard to the traffic in opium in far eastern countries and amongst unprotected peoples in the Pacific Islands has from the first been manifestly high; and that under international pacts and Federal statutes citizens of the United States have been effectively restricted from enforcing or encouraging the opium traffic in those countries which desire to restrain it; it is clearly demonstrated that the National Government has failed to realize to the full extent the growth of a serious opium problem in the continental United States. As stated in the report of the American Opium Commission:

> It seems that, as concerns the continental United States, neither treaties, tariff, excise, nor other Federal laws bore so heavily on the opium traffic or on those engaged in it as to regulate the importation and confine the use of crude or medicinal opium to legitimate medical channels. On the contrary, vast amounts of this form of the drug have poured in ever-increasing quantities into the United States, while the opium-smoking habit, outlawed by nearly every State and municipality in the Union, appears to have been encouraged by the tariff and excise laws permitting its importation and manufacture.

The enormous misuse of opium and other habit-forming drugs in the United States may be attributed to several causes—carelessness or ignorance on the part of the people; to ineffective State laws; as well as to the inability of States with good laws to protect themselves against the clandestine introduction of the drugs from neighboring or distant States, and therefore in a larger sense to the lack of control by the Federal Government of the importation, manufacture, and interstate traffic in them. And it is now certain that to these several causes may be attributed the steady growth of another deadly vice—that is, the cocaine vice—due to the unrestricted importation of coco leaves and the unregulated manufacture and distribution of its alkaloid, cocaine, a substance of no real use except in the hands of the surgeon.

It is a startling fact that since 1860, when the various forms of opium and its alkaloids were separately enumerated in the tariff schedules, there has been a 351 per cent increase in the importations and consumption of all forms of opium as against a 133 per cent increase in population. This immense importation and use of opium in the United States is cause for serious thought and places this country in an unenviable position compared with certain European countries. For instance, it may be pointed out that in Germany, with a population estimated at 60,000,000, there is an annual consumption of about 17,000 pounds of opium; in Italy, with a population of about 33,000,000, there is an annual consumption of about six thousand-odd pounds of the drug; and in Austria-Hungary, with a population of 46,000,000, there is a small annual consumption of from 3,000 to 4,000 pounds. It has been estimated by the highest medical authorities that 50,000 pounds of opium should suffice for the medicinal needs of the American people; yet during the last 10 years there has been an annual importation and consumption in the continental United States of over 400,000 pounds. Fully 75 per cent of this opium is manufactured into morphine, and it is reliably estimated that at least 80 per cent of such morphine is used by victims of the habit, to their personal detriment, and with appalling effects on general society.

Since the United States proposed the international movement for the control of the production and manufacture of and traffic in habit-forming drugs, every interested country has strengthened, or has intimated its intention to strengthen, such national laws as are aimed to restrict and ultimately confine to proper channels the use of these drugs. While an important international agreement has been made between the Governments of Great Britain and China which has for its object the gradual abolition of the India-China opium trade, the United States has taken but a single step forward, and that is in the passage and approval of the opium-exclusion act of February 9, 1909, by which the importation of opium except for medicinal purposes is prohibited. When this law was enacted, it was recognized on all sides that it was but the first step necessary to be taken by the Federal Government to regulate the introduction of opium into the United States, and its particular aim and object was to exclude from the United States opium that had been prepared for smoking purposes, over 150,000 pounds of which were being annually imported, with evil consequences not only to Chinese resident in the United States but to vast numbers of Americans. But the opium-exclusion act, so far as its prime object is concerned, has proved inadequate in that it is still possible under the act to import for immediate transshipment by sea opium prepared for smoking, with the result that large quantities of this form of the drug reach Pacific ports, are immediately transshipped to neighboring countries, and smuggled into the United States. It would seem therefore necessary so to amend the opium act as to prohibit any vessel engaged in trade from any foreign port or place to any place within the jurisdiction of the United States, including the territorial waters thereof, or between places within the jurisdiction of the United States, from carrying the substance or article known as opium prepared for smoking. Such an amendment to the opium-exclusion act would strike at the root of the matter by preventing ships in the Pacific trade from transporting this form of opium to the United States. Such an amendment would also be of great assistance to the Philippine Government in that it would prevent all vessels trading between Hongkong, Singapore, and Borneo from shipping opium at these ports and bringing it to the islands.

The opium-exclusion act needs still further amendment. One of the chief results attained in the International Opium Commission was a declaration to the effect that it is the duty of opium-producing countries to prevent at ports of departure the shipment of opium and its preparations to countries that prohibit their entry. Not waiting for the international opium conference to conventionalize this declaration, several governments have already made it a part of their law, and this Government has been requested by them to do likewise. It would seem, then, to be necessary to amend further the opium-exclusion act so as to make it unlawful to export or cause to be exported from the United States and from Territories under its control or jurisdiction or from countries in which the United States exercises extraterritorial rights, where such exportation from such countries is made by persons owing permanent allegiance to the United States, any opium or cocaine, or any derivative or preparation of opium or cocaine, to any country which prohibits or regulates their entry, unless the exporter conforms to the regulations of the regulating country.

There is still another defect in the opium exclusion act which should be corrected. The act provides that opium shall not be imported into the United States except for medicinal purposes, thereby preventing the manufacture within the United States of the substance known as smoking opium from opium that is imported, but it is still possible under the act for persons so disposed to produce within the United States domestic opium of a low grade and from it manufacture the substance known as smoking opium. There is at present on the statute books the internal revenue act of October 1, 1890, which regulates the manufacture of smoking opium within the United States, and imposes thereon an internal revenue tax of $10 per pound. This statue was enacted at a time when there was levied on smoking opium imported into the United States a tax of $10 per pound, and the object of the October act seems to have been to impose a countervailing tax of $10 per pound on all such opium manufactured in the United States. It would seem that the just-mentioned defect in the opium exclusion act, whereby smoking opium may be manufactured in the United States from domestically produced opium, could be met by so amending the internal-revenue act of October 1, 1890, as to place a prohibitive internal-revenue tax on all such opium manufactured in the United States from domestically produced opium, and that a bond might be required from an intending manufacturer that would be prohibitory.

But even with the opium-exclusion act of February 9, 1909, and the internal-revenue act of October 1, 1890, effectively amended, the larger side of the opium problem as it confronts the Nation to-day would remain unsolved. A wide inquiry has developed a consensus of opinion that it is impossible for the States and the municipalities thereof to effectively enforce their antidrug legislation and ordinances until there is some Federal act which will strictly control the importation, manufacture, and interstate traffic in the more menacing drugs. Since the problem of the control of habit-forming drugs first appeared in the United States, 45 States have prohibited the sale of cocaine except on order from a physician. Twenty-four States regulate the sale of opium and its derivatives, and 13 restrict the sale of chloral. Several States have recently enacted legislation making possession of these drugs evidence for conviction, unless the person possessing them can prove to the satisfaction of a jury that his possession is legal. But, in spite of such State legislation, it has been found impossible for the States themselves effectively to enforce their laws, because of the ease with which these menacing drugs can be secretly introduced from State to State.

After looking at the question broadly, the report of the American delegates to the International Opium Commission states:

> It may be said in regard to the traffic in habit-forming drugs within the United States that each State of the Union in its relation to other States is much in the position of China in her relations with opium producing and trafficking countries, for historically and otherwise, it has been demonstrated that China could not control her internal production and abuse of opium without a large measure of interstate or international assistance. In three years more has been accomplished in the suppression of the Chinese intraprovincial opium traffic than was accomplished in the preceding two centuries, this being entirely due to the interstate or international effort now being made on her behalf for the control of her opium traffic and her abuse of the drug. In ever increasing proportion the States of the Union have for 50 years from lack of interstate or Federal aid, been reproducing within themselves the opium problem as it appeared until quite recently in China. Studying by State and municipal laws to control the traffic in opium, morphine, and other habit-forming drugs, they have had to face the fact that the Federal Government, by tariff law, legalized the entry of a vicious form of opium, i. e., smoking opium, as well as an abnormal amount of medicinal opium for which a market was found by the importers and manufacturers. It is now a developed opinion in all of the States that no local law can control the abuse of opium and other habit-forming drugs, and that there must sooner or later be a superior Federal law to assist the States in defending themselves from the menace of these drugs.

In view of the well-ascertained facts, and having in mind the approaching international opium conference, it is a pressing necessity that the Congress enact legislation which will control the importation, manufacture, and distribution in interstate commerce of opium, morphine, cocaine, and other habit-forming drugs. After a wide consultation with all the legitimate interests likely to be affected by such legislation, there has been drafted a measure known as the Cullom or Foster bill, which is now before the appropriate committees of the Congress. The object of this measure is to place as light a burden as possible on the legitimate importer, manufacturer, and dealer in these drugs, and at the same time to bring the entire business aboveboard and compel every transaction in the drugs from the moment of importation or manufacture to be conducted in the light of day. It is felt that if this object is achieved the good sense of the American people will see to it that the illicit traffic, which is now widespread, shall come to an end.

Shortly, this measure proposes that all importers, exporters, producers or manufacturers of opium and other habit-forming drugs shall be required to register with the collector of internal revenue of his particular district his name, place of business, and place where such business is carried on, and in the case of wholesalers pay to the collector a special tax of $10 per annum, and in the case of retailers $1 per annum. That there shall be levied and collected upon all such drugs received, produced, or manufactured in the United States a small internal-revenue tax which has been calculated at a rate that will not deprive the American manufacturers of the protection afforded them by the present tariff law. That all persons importing, exporting, manufacturing, or engaged in the interstate traffic in these drugs shall keep such books, render such returns and give such bonds as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may from time to time prescribe, and that it shall be unlawful for any person to send or transport or carry in interstate commerce any of the named drugs to any person other than the person who has registered and paid a special tax as required by the act; and further it is provided that it shall be unlawful for any person to purchase, receive, sell, transfer, or give away any of the named drugs on which the internal-revenue tax has not been paid, or to which labels or marks imposed by the act have not been affixed; and that, whenever on trial for violation of the act the defendant is shown to have or to have had possession of the mentioned drugs in violation of the act, such possession shall be deemed sufficient evidence of such violation, unless the defendant shall explain the possession to the satisfaction of the jury.

Still further—and this is a most important provision—that all returns required by the act shall be properly filed and recorded in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and that, under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may make, these returns are to be open to the inspection of and certified copies furnished to the proper officials of any State or Territory, any or all of whom may be charged with the enforcement of State, District, municipal, or other laws or ordinances regulating, prescribing, dispensing the sale or use of the drugs named in the act. It should be stated that the revenue intended to be derived by the act has been calculated at the lowest possible rate—at a rate that will produce sufficient revenue to administer the act—for it would be a most unwise procedure for the Government to attempt to raise a revenue from the traffic in these drugs.

The amendments which I have suggested to the opium exclusion act of February 9, 1909, and to the internal-revenue act of October 1, 1890, have been introduced into the Senate and House of Representatives, and as in the case of the Cullom and Foster bill, are before the appropriate committees of Congress. The attempt has been made to treat the opium problem of the United States in a comprehensive and effective manner. There are several other bills before the Congress which attempt to deal with the problem. I do not undertake to pass upon the constitutionality or the legal advisability of any particular measure, but I respectfully submit whether the attention of the Congress should not be called especially to the subject, in order that appropriate measures may be enacted for the suppression and control of the opium and allied evils.

Finally, I recommend that the attention of the Congress be called to the fact that the United States is bound by the action of the International Opium Commission to apply an adequate pharmacy law to American citizens resident in China, inasmuch as one of the great evils growing out of the suppression of the opium evil in that country has been the flooding of the country with anti-opium nostrums or cures, the use of which threatens to become worse than the disease. A bill having this end in view has been favorably reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate and is now before the appropriate committee of the House of Representatives.

Respectfully submitted.

File No. 511.4A1/1226a.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Delegates of the United States to the International Opium Conference: Messrs. Charles H. Brent, Hamilton Wright, and H. J. Finger.

Department of State,
Washington, October 18, 1911.

Gentlemen: Your are informed that you have been appointed Delegates Plenipotentiary to represent the United States at the International Opium Conference which is to meet at The Hague on the 1st of December, 1911.

The need of such a conference was suggested by the American Delegation to the International Opium Commission at one of the final sittings of that body which met at Shanghai in February, 1909; and although no formal action was taken, the Department of State, having considered the unanimous conclusions arrived at by the Commission as a whole, and the report of the American Delegates thereto, deemed it advisable to issue a proposal to the interested Governments that a Conference should meet at The Hague, or elsewhere, composed of one or more delegates of each of the participating Powers, and that such delegates should have full powers to give to the main salutary propositions of the Commission and the essential corollaries derived therefrom the force of law and international agreement. Therefore, on the 1st day of September, 1909, this Government issued a circular proposal[1] to the Governments concerned in which it was stated that the United States had learned with satisfaction of the results achieved by the International Opium Commission; that in the opinion of the leaders of the antiopium movement much had been accomplished; and that both the Government and people of the United States recognized that this was largely due to the generous spirit in which the representatives of the Governments concerned approached the subjects submitted to them. It was pointed out that the Government of the United States appreciated the magnitude of the opium problem and the serious economic interests involved in the production of and trade in the drug; and that a deep impression had been made by the friendly cooperation of the Powers financially interested, and by the desire, as expressed by the resolutions of the Commission, that the opium evil should be eradicated not only from Far Eastern countries, but also from the home territories and possessions in other parts of the world of the Powers therein represented. It was stated that, as the result of the investigation of the opium problem in the United States, it had become apparent, quite apart from the question as it affected the Philippine Islands, that a serious opium evil obtained in the United States itself; that this was primarily due to the large Chinese population in the country, to the intimate commercial intercourse with the Orient, and to the unrestricted importation of opium and manufacture of morphia.

Thus, it was observed that the interest of the United States in the opium problem is material as well as humanitarian, and that. as the result of the investigations made before the meeting of the International Opium Commission, the Congress enacted legislation which aimed to prevent the importation of opium into the United States except for medical purposes. But it was noted that the United States is not an opium-producing country, and that in order to make its present and proposed laws fully effective and so stamp out the national opium and allied evils, there should be control of opium and other habit-forming drugs shipped to this country; and therefore that to attain this end it would be necessary to secure international cooperation and the sympathy of opium-producing countries.

[1] For. Rel. 1909, pp. 107–111.

Continuing, the proposal stated that this Government, impressed by the gravity of the opium and allied problems and the desirability of divesting them of local and unwise agitation, as well as by the necessity of maintaining the entire question upon the basis of fact as determined by the Shanghai Commission, suggested the following tentative program:

(a) The advisability of uniform national laws and regulations to control the production, manufacture, and distribution of opium, its derivatives and preparations;

(b) The advisability of restricting the number of ports through which opium may be shipped by opium-producing countries;

(c) The means to be taken to prevent at the port of departure the shipment of opium, its derivatives and preparations, to countries that prohibit or wish to prohibit or control their entry;

(d) The advisability of reciprocal notification of the amount of opium, its derivatives and preparations, shipped from one country to another;

(e) Regulation by the Universal Postal Union of the transmission of opium, its derivatives and preparations, through the mails;

(f) The restriction or control of the cultivation of the poppy so that the production of opium will not be undertaken by countries which at present do not produce it, to compensate for the reduction being made in British India and China;

(g) The application of the pharmacy laws of the Governments concerned to their subjects in the consular districts, concessions, and settlements in China;

(h) The propriety of restudying treaty obligations and international agreements under which the opium traffic is at present conducted;

(i) The advisability of uniform provisions of penal laws concerning offenses against any agreements that the Powers may make in regard to opium production and traffic;

(j) The advisability of uniform marks of identification of packages containing opium in international transit;

(k) The advisability of permits to be granted to exporters of opium, its derivatives and preparations;

(l) The advisability of reciprocal right of search of vessels suspected of carrying contraband opium;

(m) The advisability of measures to prevent the unlawful use of a flag by vessels engaged in the opium traffic;

(n) The advisability of an international commission to be intrusted with the carrying out of any international agreement concluded;

It was made plain, however, that the United States had no desire to prescribe the scope of the Conference or to present a program which might not be varied nor enlarged; but that the tentative program was submitted in the belief that it might serve as a basis at least for preliminary discussion, and a formal expression of opinion was invited on the topics outlined and an enumeration requested of the other aspects of the opium problem which might seem of peculiar importance to any participating nation.

This circular proposal was made to those Governments which were represented in the International Opium Commission, and to the Turkish Government, which, although invited to participate in the International Opium Commission, failed to do so because it had no diplomatic representative in the Far East.

The proposal for an International Opium Conference has been accepted by all the Governments to which it was made, except those of Austria-Hungary and the Ottoman Empire.

The Government of the Netherlands very courteously suggested that the Conference meet at The Hague. This has proved to be agreeable to all of the Powers, and the question of the date of the Conference having been left to the Netherlands Government that Government has finally found that December 1 next is acceptable, and invitations naming that date have been accordingly issued to the assenting Governments.

With regard to the tentative program laid down in this Government's circular proposal, the following reservations, additional proposals, and suggestions have been made by certain of the participating Powers:

The French Government, making no objection to items (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), (j), and (k), has remarked as to items (a), (g), (i), (l), (m), and (n) of the tentative program: that item (a) demands the adoption of uniform national laws and regulations to control the production, manufacture, and distribution of opium, its derivatives and preparations, and expresses the view that they do not believe that it is desirable that this question should be brought up (in regard to this item it has been explained to the French and British Governments that a mistake was made by this Government in using the words "uniform national laws," that they should have been "effective national laws"); that item (g) proposes the application of the pharmacy laws of the Governments concerned to their subjects in the consular districts, concessions, and settlements in China, and expresses the view that at present it would seem to be impossible to accomplish this purpose as it would tend to place in the hands of the Chinese or nationals of countries not signatories to a convention the exercise of the profession of pharmacy in the concessions; that item (i) as to the establishment of uniform provisions of penal laws concerning offenses against any agreement that the powers may make in regard to opium production would mean a modification of French penal laws, and that this is such a grave question that the Government of the Republic is not prepared to bring it up in the French Parliament. As to items (l) and (m), which raise the question of the right of search, and about which public opinion in France has always shown itself particularly susceptible, the French Government would not renounce its principles in this matter to prevent contraband opium. The French Government also reserves its opinion in regard to item (n), which involves the question of an international commission to supervise any international agreement concluded by the Conference. Within the limits thus indicated the French Government has declared its readiness to study proper measures to bring about the gradual suppression of the unnecessary production and misuse of opium.

The German Government, agreeing to the general principles of the tentative program, in particular consented that the morphine and cocaine questions be made the subject-matter of deliberations of the Conference.

The British Government, after pointing out that the illicit traffic in morphine and cocaine in India, China, and other Far Eastern countries is becoming more grievous and deadly than opium smoking, and that such an evil is certain to increase as the restrictions which are now being placed in India and China on the production and use of opium become more stringent, suggested that the Powers participating in the Conference should definitely consider beforehand the question whether they would be prepared to make a statistical study of the manufacture and trade in morphine and cocaine and agree to impose severe restrictions on such manufacture of and trade in the drugs in their respective territories. Further, the British Government has stated that they take exception to those items of the tentative program number (h), (l), (m), and (n), and that they will not be prepared to discuss in the Conference, first, the arrangement made between His Majesty's Government and China respecting the progressive restriction of opium imports and of opium production in China (i. e., the so-called ten-year agreement); second, other existing treaties between the two countries. It may be stated that all of the participating Governments have accepted the proposals of the British Government in regard to morphine and cocaine.

The Chinese Government has suggested in regard to item (a) of the tentative program that, in drawing up laws and regulations, there should be no interference with the sovereign rights of any nation; that in regard to item (i), that offenses against any agreement that the Powers might make should be punished by each country according to its own penal laws; that in regard to item (l), that the right of search of vessels should be restricted by the Governments concerned to vessels found within their own territorial waters; and in regard to item (n), that there would be no need of an international commission to supervise any agreement reached by the Conference and assented to by the interested Governments.

The Italian Government has pointed out the importance of the question of the traffic in Indian-hemp drugs to that Government, and has suggested that the Conference might advantageously deal with the question of this traffic.

The Netherlands Government, while agreeing to the general principles of the tentative program, at the same time observed that for the Netherlands Indies, where the culture of the poppy does not exist and where the opium régie is or will be introduced, the question of most importance to the Netherlands Government is for the Conference to arrive at an agreement as to measures to be taken to combat the smuggling of opium.

The Russian Government, while approving in principle of the general tenor of the tentative program, took exception to item (f), inasmuch as there is almost no production of opium in Russia, and for that reason the restriction and control of the cultivation of the poppy, as provided for by that item, would be superfluous as far as Russia is concerned, and would oppose a serious obstacle to the development of one of the branches of Russian agriculture.

The other Powers have accepted the tentative program as a basis for discussion, reserving their particular views upon it, which will be expressed at the Conference itself.

You will see, therefore, that although the tentative program proposed by the United States has been in some respects narrowed by the reservations made by several of the Powers, generally speaking the scope of the work of the Conference has been broadened by the suggestions that it include in its deliberations the question of the manufacture of and trade in morphine and cocaine and the Indian-hemp drugs. It therefore seems to this Government desirable that production of and traffic in all habit-forming drugs which have been proved to be a menace to the moral, physical, and economic welfare of the world should be considered by the Conference and adequately dealt with by it in the spirit of resolution 5 of the International Opium Commission, which places a ban on all drugs which appear on scientific inquiry to be liable to abuse and productive of the ill effects of opium, its derivatives or preparations.

It would be inexpedient to limit you by too rigid instructions upon the different questions which may be brought forward in the Conference for discussion; but you should closely bear in mind that, though it has been clearly demonstrated that the United States has large material interests in any action which the Conference may take, this Government has no revenue of moment at stake; and that primarily the international movement for the suppression of the opium evil was initiated by this Government with the object of assisting China in her recent and energetic effort to suppress her opium evil.

If in the course of the deliberations of the Conference the point be raised in any quarter that economic disturbances have resulted from the antiopium movement in China and Siam, with their bearing on treaties now in force between those countries and the treaty powers, you should not oppose its consideration, inasmuch as it is a matter in which any interested Power may legitimately express its views. Where the United States is not an interested party in this regard, it would not wish to participate in a discussion of the conventional rights and interests of other Powers. These economic disturbances have not as yet been clearly defined. However, as Dr. Hamilton Wright has made a close study of them, much dependence must necessarily be placed by you upon his good judgment and discretion in the event of the interested Governments bringing them forward for discussion; but any commitment of this Government in respect to the revision of its conventional tariff with China would not be considered germane to the scope of the Opium Conference.

All of your communications and reports to this Government will be made to the Department of State for due consideration and final preservation in the archives. The records of the delegation will be kept by its secretary, Mr. Frederic L. Huidekoper. Should you be in doubt at any time in regard to the meaning or effect of these instructions, or should you consider at any time that there is occasion for special instructions, you will communicate concisely with the Department of State by telegraph.

I may say to you that it is the President's earnest desire that the very old and troublesome opium problem growing out of the abuse of opium and the allied habit-forming drugs may be successfully dealt with by the Conference.

I am [etc.]

Protocol de clôture of the International Opium Conference.

[Unofficial translation.]

The International Opium Conference, proposed by the Government of the United States of America and convoked by the Government of The Netherlands, assembled at The Hague in the Palace of the Knights, December 1, 1911.

The Governments, the enumeration of which follows, have taken part in the conference, to which they had designated the delegates hereafter named.

GERMANY.

His excellency Mr. Felix de Müller, present privy counselor, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary at The Hague, first delegate plenipotentiary.

Mr. Delbrück, superior privy counselor of the regency, delegate plenipotentiary.

Dr. Grunenwald, present counselor of legation, delegate plenipotentiary.

Dr. Kerp, privy counselor of the regency, director of the imperial health office, delegate plenipotentiary.

Dr. Rössler, imperial consul at Canton, delegate plenipotentiary.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Bishop Charles H. Brent, delegate plenipotentiary.

Dr. Hamilton Wright, delegate plenipotentiary.

Mr. Henry J. Finger, delegate plenipotentiary.

CHINA.

His excellency Mr. Liang Ch'eng, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary at Berlin, delegate plenipotentiary.

Mr. T'ang Kwo-an, assistant secretary of the Wai-Wu-Pu, delegate.

Mr. Tchang Tsou-Soueng, chargé d'affaires ad interim at The Hague, delegate.

Mr. Wu Lien-Teh, M. D. (Cambridge), doctor with rank of major, director of the school of medicine, delegate.

Mr. F. A. Carl, former commissioner of the imperial maritime customs at Newchwang, delegate.

Mr. A. J. Commijs, assistant secretary in the bureau of the inspector general of the imperial maritime customs, delegate.

FRANCE.

Mr. Henri Brenier, consular inspector of the agricultural and commercial services of Indo-China, delegate plenipotentiary.

Mr. Pierre Guesde, administrator of the civil services of Indo-China, delegate plenipotentiary.

Dr. Gaide, physician with the rank of major of the colonial troops, technical counselor.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The Right Hon. Sir Cecil Clementi Smith, G. C. M. G., member of the privy council, delegate plenipotentiary.

Sir William Stevenson Meyer, K. C. I. E., chief secretary of the government of Madras, delegate plenipotentiary.

Mr. William Grenfell Max-Müller, C. B., M. V. O., counselor of embassy, delegate plenipotentiary.

Sir William Job Collins, M. D., deputy lieutenant of the county of London, delegate plenipotentiary.

ITALY.

His Excellency Count J. Sallier de la Tour, Duke of Calvello, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary at The Hague, delegate plenipotentiary.

Prof. Rocco Santoliquido, deputy of Parliament, director general of the public health, delegate.

JAPAN.

His Excellency Mr. Aimaro Sato, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary at The Hague, delegate plenipotentiary.

Dr. Tomoe Takagi, engineer of the General Government of Formosa, delegate plenipotentiary.

Dr. Kotaro Nishizaki, technical specialist, attached to the laboratory of hygienic service, delegate plenipotentiary.

In a series of meetings held from the 1st of December, 1911, to the 23d of January, 1912, the conference determined upon the text of convention hereto annexed.

The conference has further expressed the following wishes:

I. The conference is of the opinion that there is reason to draw the attention of the Universal Postal Union:

(1) To the urgency of regulating the transmission by post of raw opium.

(2) To the necessity of regulating, so far as possible, the transmission by post of morphine and cocaine and their respective salts, and of the other substances contemplated by article 14 of the convention.

(3) To the necessity of prohibiting the transmission of prepared opium by the post.

II. The conference is of the opinion that it is advisable to study the question of Indian hemp from the statistical and scientific standpoint, with a view to regulating its misuse, should the necessity therefor make itself felt, by domestic legislation or by an international agreement.

In testimony whereof the plenipotentiaries have affixed their signatures to the present protocol.

Done at The Hague the 23d day of January, 1912, in a single copy, which shall remain deposited in the archives of the Government of the Netherlands, and copies of which, certified and conforming thereto, shall be delivered through the diplomatic channel to all the powers represented at the conference.

Scheurer, member of the second chamber of the states general; Mr. W. G. van Wettum, inspector of the opium régie in the Dutch Indies.

His Imperial Majesty the Shah of Persia: Mirza Mahmoud Khan, secretary of the Persian legation at The Hague.

The President of the Portuguese Republic: His Excellency Mr. Antonio Maria Bartholomeu Ferreira, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary at The Hague.

His Majesty the Emperor of All the Russias: His Excellency Mr. Alexandre Savinsky, His master of ceremonies, His present counsellor of state, His envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary at Stockholm.

His Majesty the King of Siam: His Excellency Phya Akharaj Varadhara, His envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary at London, The Hague, and Brussels; Mr. Wm. J. Archer, C. M. G., His counsellor of legation;

Who, after having deposited their full powers, which have been found to be in good and due form, are agreed to that which follows:

Chapter I.

RAW OPIUM.

Definition: By raw opium shall be understood the spontaneously coagulated sap obtained from capsules of the soporific poppy (Papaver somniferum), and which shall not have been subjected to any but the processes necessary to the packing and the transportation thereof.

Article 1. The contracting powers shall enact efficacious laws or regulations for the control of the production and distribution of raw opium, unless existing laws or regulations have already regulated the matter.

Article 2. The contracting powers, taking into account the differences in their trade conditions, shall limit the number of towns, ports, or other places through which the importation or exportation of raw opium shall be permitted.

Article 3. The contracting powers shall take measures:

(a) to prevent the exportation of raw opium to countries which shall have prohibited the entry thereof; and

(b) to control the exportation of raw opium to countries which shall have limited the importation thereof,

Unless existing measures have already regulated the matter.

Article 4. The contracting powers shall issue regulations to provide that every package containing raw opium destined for exportation shall be marked in such a manner as to indicate its contents, providing the consignment shall exceed 5 kilograms.

Article 5. The contracting powers shall not permit the importation and exportation of raw opium except through duly authorized persons.

Chapter II.

PREPARED OPIUM.

Definition: By prepared opium shall be understood the product of raw opium obtained by a series of special processes, particularly by dissolution, boiling, heating, and fermentation, and which is meant to be made into the form of an extract suitable for consumption.

Prepared opium comprises dross and all other residues of smoked opium.

Article 6. The contracting powers shall take measures for the gradual and efficacious suppression of the manufacture, the internal traffic in, and the use of prepared opium in so far as the different conditions peculiar to each nation shall allow of this, unless existing measures have already regulated the matter.

ARTICLE 7. The contracting powers shall prohibit the importation and exportation of prepared opium; however, those nations which are not yet ready to prohibit the exportation of prepared opium at once shall prohibit such exportation as soon as possible.

ARTICLE 8. The contracting powers which are not yet prepared to prohibit at once the exportation of prepared opium:

(a) Shall limit the number of towns, ports, or other places through which it shall be possible for prepared opium to be exported;

(b) Shall prohibit the exportation of prepared opium to the countries which now prohibit or which shall later prohibit the importation thereof;

(c) Shall prohibit, in the meanwhile, that any prepared opium be sent to a country which desires to limit the entry thereof, unless the exporter shall conform to the regulations of the importing country;

(d) Shall take measures to the effect that each package exported containing prepared opium shall bear a special mark indicating the nature of its contents;

(e) Shall not permit the exportation of prepared opium except through the agency of persons especially authorized.

CHAPTER III.

MEDICINAL OPIUM, MORPHINE, COCAINE, ETC.

Definitions: By medicinal opium shall be understood raw opium which shall have been heated to 60° C., whether or not powdered or granulated, or whether or not mixed with neutral substances, and which shall not contain less than 10 per cent of morphine.

By morphine shall be understood the principal alkaloid of opium, expressed by the chemical formula $C_{17}H_{19}NO_3$.

By cocaine shall be understood the principal alkaloid of the leaves of erythroxylon coca, expressed by the formula $C_{17}H_{21}NO_4$.

By heroin shall be understood morphine-diacetylate, expressed by the formula $C_{21}H_{23}NO_5$.

ARTICLE 9. The contracting powers shall enact pharmacy laws and regulations in such a way as to limit the manufacture, the sale, and the use of morphine, cocaine, and their respective salts to medical and legitimate uses only, unless existing laws or regulations have already regulated the matter. They shall cooperate amongst themselves in order to prevent the use of these drugs for any other purpose.

ARTICLE 10. The contracting powers shall use their best efforts to control, or to cause to be controlled, all those who manufacture, import, sell, distribute, and export morphine, cocaine, and their respective salts, as well as the buildings where such persons exercise that industry or that commerce.

To this end the contracting powers shall use their best efforts to adopt or to cause to be adopted the following measures, unless existing measures have already regulated the matter:

(a) To limit the manufacture of morphine, cocaine, and their respective salts to the premises and localities alone which shall have been authorized to this effect or to keep themselves informed as to the establishments and places where such drugs are manufactured, and to keep a register thereof.

(b) To demand that all those who manufacture, import, sell, distribute, and export morphine, cocaine, and their respective salts shall be provided with an authorization or a license to carry on these operations, or shall make an official declaration thereof to the competent authorities.

(c) To demand of these persons to register on their books the quantities manufactured, the importations, the sales or any other transfer and exportations of morphine, cocaine, and their respective salts. This rule shall not apply necessarily to medical prescriptions and to sales made by duly authorized pharmacists.

ARTICLE 11. The contracting powers shall take measures to prohibit in their internal commerce all transfer of morphine, cocaine, and their respective salts to all nonauthorized persons, unless existing measures have already regulated the matter.

ARTICLE 12. The contracting powers, taking the differences in their conditions into account, shall use their best efforts to limit the importation of morphine, cocaine, and their respective salts to authorized persons.

ARTICLE 13. The contracting powers shall use their best efforts to adopt, or cause to be adopted, measures to the end that the exportation of cocaine, morphine, and their respective salts from their countries, possessions, colonies, and leased territories to the countries, possessions, colonies, and leased territories of the other contracting powers, except in case the persons for whom the drugs are intended shall have received authorizations or permits granted in conformity with the laws or regulations of the importing country.

To this end every government may from time to time communicate to the governments of the exporting countries lists of the persons to whom authorizations or permits to import morphine, cocaine, and their respective salts shall have been granted.

ARTICLE 14. The contracting powers shall apply the laws and regulations for the manufacture, importation, sale, or exportation of morphine, cocaine, and their respective salts:

(a) To medicinal opium;

(b) To all preparations (officinal and nonofficinal, including the so-called antiopium remedies) containing more than 0.2 per cent of morphine or more than 0.1 per cent of cocaine;

(c) To heroin, its salts and preparations containing more than 0.1 per cent of heroin;

(d) To every new derivative of morphine, cocaine or their respective salts or to any other alkaloid of opium which might after generally recognized scientific investigations give rise to similar abuse and to result in the same injurious effects.

CHAPTER IV.

ARTICLE 15. The contracting powers having treaties with China (treaty powers) shall take, in concert with the Chinese Government, the measures necessary for the prevention of the smuggling, as well with respect to Chinese territory as with respect to their colonies in the Far East and the leased territories which they occupy in China, of raw and prepared opium, morphine, cocaine, and their respective salts, as well as of the substances indicated in article 14 of the present convention. On its side the Chinese Government shall take analogous measures for the suppression of the smuggling of opium and the other substances hereinbefore indicated, from China to foreign colonies and leased territories.

Article 16. The Chinese Government shall promulgate pharmacy laws for its subjects, regulating the sale and distribution of morphine, cocaine, and their respective salts and of the substances indicated in article 14 of the present convention, and shall communicate these laws to the Governments having treaties with China, through the intermediary of their diplomatic representatives at Pekin. The contracting powers having treaties with China shall examine these laws, and, if they find them acceptable, shall take the necessary measures to the end that they be applied to their nationals residing in China.

Article 17. The contracting powers having treaties with China shall undertake to adopt the measures necessary for the restraint and control of the opium-smoking habit in their leased territories, "settlements," and concessions in China, for the suppression pari passu with the Chinese Government of the opium divans or similar establishments which may still exist there, and for the prohibition of the use of opium in houses of amusement and of prostitution.

Article 18. The contracting powers having treaties with China shall take effective measures for the gradual reduction, pari passu with the effective measures which the Chinese Government shall take to the same end, of the number of shops, intended for the sale of raw and prepared opium, which may still exist in their leased territories, settlements, and concessions in China. They shall adopt efficacious measures for the restraint and control of the retail trade in opium in the leased territories, settlements, and concessions, unless existing measures have already regulated the matter.

Article 19. The contracting powers who have post offices in China shall adopt efficacious measures to prohibit the illegal importation into China, in the guise of a postal package, as well as the illegal transmission from one locality to another in China through the intermediary of these post offices, of opium, whether raw or prepared, of morphine and of cocaine and their respective salts, and of other substances indicated in article 14 of the present convention.

Chapter V.

Article 20. The contracting powers shall examine into the possibility of enacting laws or regulations making the illegal possession of raw opium, prepared opium, morphine, cocaine, and their respective salts liable to penalties, unless existing laws or regulations have already regulated the matter.

Article 21. The contracting powers shall communicate to each other, through the Netherlands ministry for foreign affairs:

(a) The text of the laws and the administrative regulations in existence which concern matters aimed at by the present convention or enacted by virtue of its clauses;

(b) Statistical information with respect to that which concerns the traffic in raw opium, prepared opium, morphine, cocaine, and their respective salts, as well as all other drugs or their salts or preparations aimed at by the present convention.

These data shall be furnished with as much detail and in as short a time as shall be deemed possible.

CHAPTER VI.

FINAL PROVISIONS.

ARTICLE 22. The powers not represented at the conference shall be permitted to sign the present convention.

To this end, the Netherlands Government shall invite, immediately after the convention shall have been signed by the plenipotentiaries of the powers who have taken part in the conference, all the powers of Europe and of America not represented at the conference, to wit, the Argentine Republic; Austro-Hungary; Belgium; Bolivia; Brazil; Bulgaria; Chile; Colombia; Costa Rica; Republic of Cuba; Denmark; Dominican Republic; Republic of Ecuador; Spain; Greece; Guatemala; Republic of Haiti; Honduras; Luxemburg; Mexico; Montenegro; Nicaragua; Norway; Panama; Paraguay; Peru; Roumania; Salvador; Servia; Sweden; Switzerland; Turkey; Uruguay; United States of Venezuela, to designate a delegate armed with the full powers necessary for the signing of the convention at The Hague.

The convention shall be furnished with these signatures by means of a "Protocol of signature of powers not represented at the conference," to be added after the signatures of the powers represented and indicating the date of each signature.[1]

The Netherlands Government shall give notice every month, to all the signatory powers, of each supplementary signature.

ARTICLE 23. After all the powers, as much for themselves as for their possessions, colonies, protectorates, and leased territories, shall have signed the convention, or the supplementary protocol hereinbefore indicated, the Netherlands Government shall invite the powers to ratify the convention together with this protocol.

In case the signature of all the powers invited shall not have been secured by December 31, 1912, the Netherlands Government shall immediately invite all the powers who have signed by that date to designate delegates to proceed to The Hague to examine into the possibility of nevertheless depositing their ratifications.

Ratification shall be executed within as short a time as possible and shall be deposited at once at The Hague in the Ministry for Foreign Affairs.

The Netherlands Government shall give notice every month to the signatory powers of the ratifications which it shall have received in the interval.

As soon as the ratifications of all the signatory powers, as much for themselves as for their colonies, possessions, protectorates, and leased territories, shall have been received by the Netherlands Government, this government shall give notice to all the powers who shall have ratified the convention of the date on which the last of such acts of ratification shall have been received.

ARTICLE 24. The present convention shall go into effect three months after the date mentioned in the Netherlands Government's notification, as indicated in the last paragraph of the preceding article.

[1] See "Note" on p. 224.

With regard to the laws, regulations, and other measures provided for by the present convention, it is agreed that the drafts necessary to this end shall be drawn up not later than six months after the going into effect of the convention. With regard to the laws, these shall also be proposed by the governments to their parliaments or legislative bodies within this same period of six months, and in any case at the first session which shall follow the expiration of this period.

The date from which these laws, regulations, or measures shall go into effect shall be the subject of an agreement between the signatory powers, at the instance of the Netherlands Government.

In case questions shall arise relative to the ratification of the present convention, or relative to the going into effect of the convention, or of the laws, regulations, and measures which such convention involves, the Netherlands Government, if these questions can not be decided by other means, shall invite all the signatory powers to designate delegates who shall assemble at The Hague to come to an immediate agreement on these questions.

ARTICLE 25. If it should happen that one of the contracting powers should wish to denounce the present convention, such denunciation shall be notified in writing to the Netherlands Government, who shall immediately communicate a certified copy in conformity with such notification to all the other powers, informing them at the same time as to the date on which it received such notification.

The denunciation shall have no effect except with respect to the power who shall have given notice thereof and one year after such notice shall have reached the Netherlands Government

In witness whereof the plenipotentiaries have affixed their signatures to the present convention.

Done at The Hague, January 23, 1912, in one single copy, which shall remain deposited in the archives of the Government of the Netherlands and copies of which, certified in conformity, shall be delivered through diplomatic channels to all the powers represented at the conference.

Senate Document No. 733, Sixty-second Congress, second session.

Message from the President of the United States to Congress, transmitting communication of the Secretary of State covering the report of the American delegation to the International Opium Conference held at The Hague from December 1, 1911, to January 23, 1912.[1]

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication of the Secretary of State covering the report of the American delegation to the International Opium Conference held at The Hague from December 1, 1911, to January 23, 1912.

In submitting this report the Secretary of State makes certain recommendations regarding bills now before the Congress for the control of our foreign and domestic traffic in habit-forming drugs. I have several times called the attention of the Congress to the necessity for the passage of the proposed measures, and I now indorse the view of the Secretary of State that the Congress should promptly pass these measures, more especially because this Government took the initiative and has been generously supported by 12 other Governments in its efforts to mitigate, if not entirely suppress, the world's opium evil.

Inasmuch as the International Opium Convention and its protocole de clôture, signed at The Hague by representatives of the United States, China, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Persia, Portugal, Russia, and Siam, have been given publicity by the conference and by the signatory Governments, it is deemed not improper to accompany the report with authentic copies of them.

[1] Read May 31, 1912; referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed.

I am not able at the present moment, however, to ask the advice and consent of the Senate to the ratification of the convention, for it is provided by the final articles of the convention that ratification is to depend upon the Netherlands Government securing by the 31st of December next the supplementary signatures of 34 States named in article 22 of the convention, and that in case the signatures of all the powers invited to sign the convention shall not have been secured by December 31, 1912, the Netherlands Government shall immediately invite all the powers who have signed by that date to designate delegates to proceed to The Hague to examine into the possibility of nevertheless depositing their ratifications. It is my hope and belief that the Netherlands Government will secure the necessary signatures to the convention by the date fixed, and that I can then ask the advice and consent of the Senate to the ratification of the convention.

Therefore, at the present time the International Opium Convention and its protocole de clôture are submitted to the Congress merely for its information as to the great step in advance which has been taken by 12 States in cooperation with the United States to bring the opium evil to an end.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 31, 1912.

The Secretary of State to the President.

[Inclosure.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 28, 1912.

The PRESIDENT:

I have the honor to transmit herewith a report of the American Delegation to the International Opium Conference held at The Hague beginning December 1, 1909, and adjourning January 23, 1912, the American delegates being the Right Rev. Charles H. Brent, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of the Philippine Islands, Mr. Hamilton Wright, of Maine, and Mr. Henry J. Finger, of California.

This report briefly reviews the work of the International Opium Commission, which, due to the efforts of this Government, met in Shanghai in 1909, and traces the consistent and successful efforts on the part of the United States to secure the cooperation of all the Governments immediately concerned with the opium problem. It should therefore be considered as in continuation of the report on the International Opium Commission and on the opium problem as seen within the United States, which I had the honor to transmit to you on February 18, 1910, and which is contained in Senate Document No. 377, Sixty-first Congress, second session.

The accompanying report summarizes the steps leading to the conference at The Hague, shows the enlargement of its scope by the inclusion of the consideration of the morphine, cocaine, and Indian hemp drug evils, and exhaustively treats of and explains the convention and the acts signed on January 23, 1912, by the representatives at the conference of the 12 powers party thereto, to wit: The United States, China, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, The Netherlands, Portugal, Russia, Siam, and Persia.

Immediately upon the assembling of the conference it was pointed out, as had been the case at the Shanghai Commission, that the restriction of the manufacture and scale of habit-forming drugs presented commercial and economic, as well as moral, questions of great importance, and that "it would be useless for those States represented in the conference, and who were the largest producers of opium, morphine, cocaine, etc., to agree to radical measures for the international control of these drugs so long as it was open to the nationals of those States not represented at the conference to continue or take up the production of and traffic in these drugs." To this is due a radical departure with respect to ratification; for, instead of the usual conventional provision for ratification, the International Opium Convention provides for the adherence thereto, on the invitation of the Netherlands Government, of all the nonsignatory Governments in Europe and American (34 in all) before any steps may be taken toward the ratification of the convention. In case the entire 34 powers do not adhere before December 31, 1912, another conference is to take place at The Hague attended by the representatives of the signatory and adhering powers. Should this conference be necessary, then the plenipotentiaries thereto shall fix an early date for the ratification of the convention.

The convention defines raw opium, prepared opium, medicinal opium, morphine, cocaine, and heroin; provides for the enactment of efficacious laws and regulations for the control of the production and distribution of raw opium; for the limiting of the number of ports or other places through which raw opium shall be exported or imported; for the prohibiting of the exportation of raw and prepared opium to prohibiting countries and for the regulation of the exportation of raw and prepared opium to countries which limit their importation; for the importation of raw opium and for the exportation of prepared opium through authorized persons only; for the marking of packages of raw opium exceeding 5 kilograms in weight and for the marking of all packages of prepared opium; for the gradual suppression of the manufacture, internal traffic in, and use of prepared opium; and for the prohibiting of the importation and exportation of prepared opium as soon as possible. In general, its provisions regarding medicinal opium, morphine, cocaine, and their respective salts are similar. It further, in a separate chapter, deals specifically with the relations between China and the "treaty powers" with regard to the opium traffic and the traffic in newer habit-forming drugs, China pledging to take strict measures for the prevention of their illicit use and the "treaty powers" on their part pledging themselves to aid China in these her efforts. Provision is likewise made for an interchange of laws, regulations, statistical information, and other data regarding the opium and allied traffics and habits.

By an additional protocol, the conference expressed the opinion that the attention of the Universal Postal Union should be drawn to the urgency of regulating the transmission by post of raw opium, morphine, and cocaine, and their respective salts, and to the necessity of prohibiting the transmission of prepared opium by the post. The conference further expressed the opinion that it is advisable to study the question of Indian hemp from the statistical and scientific standpoint with a view to regulating its misuse, should the necessity therefor make itself felt, by domestic legislation or by an international agreement.

In sum, recognizing the principle that not by national action alone but only through concerted international action can the question be solved, the convention so limits and safeguards the manufacture of and national and international traffic in these drugs as to make possible to a great degree the stamping out of their illicit use.

It is a source of deep satisfaction that this Government has taken such a prominent part toward the accomplishment of these great international reforms.

While this Government has been so actively engaged internationally in attempting to solve the problem of successfully coping with the traffic in and illicit use of habit-forming drugs, nationally it has advanced not one step since the enactment, in February, 1909, at the moment of the meeting of the Shanghai Commission of the "Act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes." That this legislative inaction has not passed unnoticed abroad is made clear by the following from the accompanying report:

> There is no doubt that during the sittings of the International Opium Conference at The Hague the American delegation was placed in a somewhat embarrassing position owing to the neglect of the Congress to pass legislation which had been urged upon it by the Executive, aiming to perfect the opium-exclusion act of February, 1909, and to bring under efficient control the export and interstate commerce in opium and other habit-forming drugs. Both formally and informally, it was pointed out to the American delegates at that conference that the other nations could have little hope for a final suppression of opium and allied evils by international action so long as the United States, which had initiated the movement, failed to adopt the standard of national control in vogue in several European nations and in Japan.

In view of the foregoing reasons I have the honor to recommend that the accompanying report be transmitted to the Congress, for its information; and that, as the Department of State has made a thorough investigation of the conditions in regard to the abuse of opium and habit-forming drugs in the United States and its possessions, and as the bills drafted to correct these conditions have been carefully revised and perfected in the light of the International Opium Convention, you will again urge upon Congress their speedy consideration. If not so considered the American Government may be justly accused of being half-hearted in its effort to mitigate or suppress the opium and allied evils, an effort in which it has the earnest cooperation of the chief powers of Europe and Asia.

Respectfully submitted.

P .C. KNOX.

[Subinclosure.]

Report from the Delegates of the United States to the Secretary of State.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 15, 1912.

SIR: The following report, made on behalf of the American delegates to the International Opium Conference held at The Hague from December 1, 1911, to January 23, 1912, is in continuation of a report of January 1, 1910, made to you on behalf of the American delegates to the International Opium Commission, which met at Shanghai in February, 1909. (S. Doc. No. 377, 61st Cong., 2d sess.)

That report, in addition to dealing with the proceedings, reports and conclusions of the International Opium Commission, contained a wide range of data, embracing treaties affecting citizens of the United States in regard to the opium traffic, contracted between the United States and China, Siam, and the former independent State of Korea; statutes respecting Americans engaged in the foreign opium traffic; tariff, internal-revenue, and other statutes covering the trade in opium in the United States and its possessions; the opium problem as seen in the Philippines; the opium, morphine, and cocaine vices as they had developed and were then seen in the continental United States, and a review of the effect of treaties, tariff, internal-revenue, and other Federal laws upon the importation into the United States and the abuse therein of opium, morphine, and cocaine

After reviewing the work of the International Opium Commission and the results attained, it was pointed out that although no official action was taken by the commission for continued international action to solve the problems which it had studied and the vices which it had condemned, it was, nevertheless, generally expected by the commissioners that the United States Government would proceed to arrange for an international conference composed of delegates, with full powers, to conventionalize the conclusions of the commission and the corollaries derived therefrom, with the object of giving them the force of law and international agreement.

For the investigation of the international and national aspects of the opium evil an appropriation of $20,000 was made by the Congress by the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909. That part of the act pertinent to the subject is as follows:

[H. R. 21260.—Public, No. 141.]

AN ACT Making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby. appropriated, for the objects hereinunder expressed, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, namely:

International investigation of opium evil.—To enable the President to appoint not more than three commissioners to collate and complete on behalf of the United States information bearing on the opium question, and a secretary, who shall act as disbursing officer, and for traveling expenses, stationery, printing, and other incidental expenses connected with the investigation, and the meeting of the commissioners for the purpose of finding common ground for joint and several recommendations and reports to their repective Governments with a view to the suppression of the opium evil, $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Through the strict economy of the American commissioners to the International Opium Commission, some $5,000 of this appropriation remained in hand after the adjournment of the commission. By your direction it was applied to the continuation of the work arising out of the commission, and until such time as the Congress should make a further appropriation to enable the Government to carry to a logical conclusion the task which it had undertaken.

In transmitting this report to the President, you recommended that the Congress be asked to appropriate the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as might be necessary, so as to enable this Government to continue its efforts to mitigate if not entirely stamp out the opium evil through the proposed international conference and otherwise by further investigations and proceedings. Your recommendation for a new appropriation was supported by the President in transmitting the report to the Senate and House of Representives, and in the general deficiency act of 1910 the Congress provided as follows:

> To enable the Government to continue its efforts to mitigate if not entirely stamp out the opium evil, through a proposed international conference and otherwise, by further investigation and proceedings, $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

There was, therefore, no break in the continuity of the effort of this Government to secure an international opium conference to follow upon, broaden, and conclude the work of the international commission, and on September 1, 1909, the Department of State issued instruction to the diplomatic officers of the United States accredited to the Governments which were represented in the International Opium Commission, containing proposals for an International Opium Conference. That instruction is as follows: [Omitted here; printed in For. Rel. 1909, pp. 107–111.]

Favorable responses were almost immediately received from the interested Governments to the above circular proposal, the project for the assembling of an International Opium Conference composed of delegates with full powers having met with general favor. By September, 1910, all the powers but one[1] which had taken part in the International Opium Commission had signified to this Government their willingness to continue to cooperate with it in the international movement for the settlement of the opium and allied questions, while the tentative program contained in the department's circular proposal was broadened by suggestions made by the British Government to the effect that, those Governments sending delegates to the conference should agree beforehand to a thorough study of the production, manufacture, and traffic in morphine and cocaine, and should pledge themselves before the assembling of the conference to the principle of drastic legislation for the control of the manufacture and use of these drugs. The additional proposals of the British Government were accepted by all of the interested Governments. In addition, the Italian Government proposed that the conference deal with the production, manufacture, and traffic in the Indian hemp drugs in a manner similar to opium, morphine, and cocaine.

The date for the assembling of the conference was originally fixed by the Netherlands Government for May 31, 1912, but because several of the powers were not able to make the necessary study of the morphine and cocaine questions by that time, the date for the meeting of the conference was postponed to December 1, 1912.

The delegation of the United States to the conference was composed of the following members:

Delegates plenipotentiary: Charles H. Brent, of the Philippine Islands; Hamilton Wright, of Maine; Henry J. Finger, of California.

Secretary to the commission: Frederic L. Huidekoper, of Washington, D. C.

Assistant secretary and disbursing officer: Wallace J. Young, of Illinois.

The instructions to the American delegation were as follows: [Printed above, pp. 188, 193.]

The Dutch Government set aside for the use of the conference a part of the Hall of the Knights, the seat of the States General, and on the first day of December, 1912, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, the conference was opened by his excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Netherlands in the presence of the delegations representing the twelve nations, the diplomatic corps, the press, and the general public. His excellency the foreign minister made a felicitous address of welcome, saying amongst other things, that the Netherlands Government considered it a special privilege to greet at the royal residence a conference of eminent diplomats and experts arrived from the four quarters of the globe to discuss an international problem; that the problem before the conference pressingly claimed solution for the welfare of mankind; that the conference would have to deal with one of those complications of Providence where God had created a plant containing in itself the elements to make it a real benefactor to humanity, but where man had by an abuse of that benefit transferred it into a scourge spreading economic ruin and moral as well as intellectual degradation; that the Netherlands Government had been anxious for the honor of seeing the conference meet on Netherlands soil, the mother country of vast colonies where the opium problem was of great actual importance, and that the interested governments responding to that appeal with an enthusiasm as graceful as it was flattering, he extended the welcome of the royal government to the conference as a tribute of gratitude.

[1] The Austro-Hungarian Government did not see its way clear to send delegates to the conference, but, nevertheless, informed this Government that it would observe the conference and its results with sympathy.

At the conclusion of this address of welcome the first delegate of the Netherlands Government proposed for president of the conference Bishop Charles H. Brent, of the American delegation. This was seconded by the chiefs of the British and German delegations. With the unanimous consent of the assembly, Bishop Brent accepted the presidency and then delivered an address, partly personal, in which, besides thanking the conference for the honor of the presidency, he called attention to the work of the International Opium Commission, which convened in 1909, and then outlined the purpose for which the International Opium Conference had been assembled. On the termination of the presidential address, and with the consent of the conference, the president proposed the personnel of the secretary general's office. His Excellency R. de Marees van Swinderen, Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Dutch Government, was elected honorary president. In the name of the conference the president dispatched the following message to Her Majesty the Queen of the Netherlands:

> The representatives of the 12 nations assembled at The Hague for the International Opium Conference have the honor to lay at the feet of Your Royal Majesty the homage of their most respectful devotion and the expression of their gratitude for the gracious reception given to them in your residence.

At the second plenary session of the conference the president read the following telegram:

> I am glad to see at The Hague the representatives of twelve States assembled for an International Opium Conference. Thanking you, Mr. President, for the feelings which you have interpreted, I express to you my good wishes for the humanitarian goal of the conference.
> WILHELMINA.

Previous to the assembling of the conference, the Netherlands minister for foreign affairs had requested the American delegation to suggest a body of rules to govern the conference. At the second plenary session the conference proceeded to consider the tentative rules proposed by the American delegation, which were as follows:

> Rule I. The International Opium Conference is composed of all the plenipotentiaries and technical delegates of the powers which have accepted the proposal of the United States Government and the invitation of the Government of the Queen of the Netherlands.
> Rule II. After organizing its bureau, the conference shall appoint committees to study the questions submitted to it. The plenipotentiaries of the powers are free to register on the lists of these committees according to their own convenience, and to appoint technical delegates to take part therein.
> Rule III. The conference shall appoint the chairman of each committee. The committees shall appoint their secretaries and reporters.
> Rule IV. Each committee shall have the power to divide itself into subcommittees which shall organize their own bureau.
> Rule V. A drafting committee for the purpose of coordinating the acts adopted by the conference and preparing them in their final form shall also be appointed by the conference at the beginning of its labors.

Rule VI. The members of the delegations are all authorized to take part in the deliberations at the plenary sessions of the conference as well as in the committees of which they form part. The members of one and the same delegation may mutually replace one another.

Rule VII. Every resolution or motion proposed for discussion by the conference must, as a general rule, be delivered in writing to the president, and be printed and distributed before being taken up for discussion.

Rule VIII. The public may be admitted to the plenary sessions of the conference when the conference itself so decides. Tickets shall be distributed for this purpose by the secretary general with the authorization of the president.

Rule IX. French shall be the official language of the conference, and the minutes shall be recorded in this language. However, other languages may be used in the conference.

Rule X. Special questions which have been already dealt with in the sessions of the committees can not be discussed in pleno by a member of a delegation in a speech of more than 10 minutes, unless the conference decides otherwise.

The rules as finally adopted by the conference follow:

Rule I. The International Opium Conference is composed of all the delegates of the powers which have accepted the proposal of the United States Government and the invitation of the Government of the Queen of the Netherlands.

Rule II. After organizing its bureau, the conference shall discuss in pleno the best method of drafting a program. The conference may, if necessary, appoint committees to study the questions submitted to it. The delegates of the powers are free to register on the lists of these committees as may appear convenient to them.

Rule III. Each committee shall appoint a chairman, secretary, and reporter.

Rule IV. A drafting committee for the purpose of coordinating the resolutions adopted by the conference and preparing them in their final form shall also be appointed by the conference at the beginning of its labors.

Rule V. All the delegates are authorized to take part in the deliberations at the plenary sessions of the conference as well as in the committees of which they form part. The members of one and the same delegation may mutually replace one another

Rule VI. Members of the conference attending the meetings of committees of which they are not members, are not to be entitled to take part in the deliberations without special authorization of the chairman of the committees.

Rule VII. When a vote is taken, each delegation shall have only one vote. The vote shall be taken by roll call in the alphabetical order of the powers represented.

Rue VIII. Every resolution or motion proposed for discussion by the conference must, as a general rule, be delivered in writing to the president and be printed and distributed before being taken up for discussion.

Such proposals can not be voted on during the same session without the unanimous consent of all the delegations.

Rule IX. A committee of three delegates shall be appointed by the conference, to which shall be intrusted the duty of making any communications to the press.

Rule X. The minutes of the plenary sessions of the conference and of the committees shall give a succinct résumé of the deliberations. A proof copy of them shall be delivered with as little delay as possible to the members of the conference; they need not be read at the beginning of the sessions, except by the request of a delegate.

Each delegate shall have a right to request the insertion in full of his official declarations according to the text delivered by him to the secretary and to make observations regarding the minutes.

The reports of the committees shall be printed and distributed before they are taken up for discussion.

Rule XI. French shall be the official language of the conference, and the minutes shall be recorded in this language.

However, other languages may be used in the conference. This rule shall not exclude the delivery of a translation to those delegates who desire to receive these documents in any other language.

Rule XII. Special questions which have been already dealt with in the sessions of the committees can not be discussed in pleno by a member of a delegation in a speech of more than 10 minutes, unless the conference decides otherwise.

Some discussion having arisen as to the program of the conference, the following statement was made on behalf of the American delegation:

That the United States had endeavored to secure from the interested Governments a definitive program for the conference, based on the tentative program contained in its circular proposal of September 1, 1909, and the additional proposals of Great Britain, but had failed to do so because several of the Governments had expressed a desire to reserve their views until the conference had assembled; that it was now apparent that a committee to be termed the program committe should be selected, and that this committee, composed of members from each delegation, should formulate a definitive program for the conference.

This view was concurred in by all of the delegates, and the following resolution, proposed by the American delegation, was unanimously adopted:

That a committee to be called the program committee be appointed, consisting of one representative from each delegation, and that it be authorized to prepare and submit to the conference a draft program for consideration, such program to be based upon the suggestions made on behalf of the United States of America as modified by the several powers which have made reservations thereon and upon the additional suggestions made on behalf of Great Britain and Italy; and that any further matters which the conference may subsequently decide to take into consideration shall similarly be first referred to the same committee.

Under this resolution a partial program was designed for the conference. Some delay and confusion which afterwards occurred would have been avoided if the conference had sent all new proposals to this committee to be properly formulated, instead of discussing them in plenary session, as was insisted upon by several of the delegations present.

Rule 8, as adopted by the conference, proved to be a cause for delay, and it was finally changed, on suggestion of the Japanese delegation, to read as follows:

> Every resolution or motion proposed for discussion by the conference must, as a general rule, be delivered in writing to the president, and be printed and distributed before being taken up for discussion.
> The resolution referred to in the present rule is one of such character as is destined to form the subject of international agreement and consequently to require a careful study beforehand; and does not include a resolution offered in the course of the sitting of the conference for transaction of business.
> Such proposals can not be voted on during the same session, without the unanimous consent of all the delegations.

Under the rules, the deliberations of the conference were to be kept secret, or at least not communicated by members of the conference to the press except through the agency of the press committee of the conference. It may be observed that this rule was not fully respected, and at one of the plenary sessions the president called the attention of the conference to the fact. Some adverse comment has been made because the conference chose to deliberate in camera. It should be stated in this connection that the American delegation was one of those opposed to a day to day publication of the proceedings of the conference, for it recognized that the conference was dealing with the production and traffic in commodities the present and future value of which would be largely determined by the definitive conclusions of the conference. It was, therefore, the desire of the American as well as the other delegations that nothing should go forth during the sitting of the conference that would lead to a speculative activity in the production of and trade in opium, morphine, and cocaine. This proved to be a wise view, for the convention as signed at The Hague had no sooner been published than there was a large increase in the market price of the drugs, part of which was undoubtedly speculative.

A feature which did not lend itself to the expedition of the work of the conference was the adoption of French as the official language, as provided by Rule XI. At the International Opium Commission English was the official language because the most convenient to the majority of the commissions. A large majority of the delegates to the conference preferred to speak English in spite of Rule XI, and the French delegation expressed itself bilingually. The proceedings were taken down in English, then translated into French, and printed in English as well as French, for the convenience of those delegates who were not thoroughly acquainted with the latter language. This procedure often led to delay, and it was not until the last two or three sessions that the conference could approve of its transactions to that time. This incident alone illustrates the necessity of a conference proceeding by a language most convenient to the majority of the delegates, when it has to deal with questions like the opium and allied questions involving vast economic interests.

Rule IV provided for a comité de redaction, or editing committee—the original intention being that this committee should have referred to it the final action of the conference for edition. In practice, however, this committee took up the day-by-day work of the conference, and attempted to reduce it before the ultimate views of the conferees had been expressed. Before the conference had been long in session disputed questions were also referred to this committee rather than to the program committee, or to a conciliating committee, which, mooted by the American delegation, did not prove to be acceptable to the conference. Some confusion ensued, and it finally became necessary for the conference to add to the editing committee Mr. Asser, the eminent international jurisconsult. Mr. Asser's services proved to be preeminently valuable, and before adjournment the conference unanimously expressed its debt of gratitude to him.

The American delegation fruitlessly strove to have the actual work of the conference done in commission and committee—a practice that had been followed with great success by the first and second International Peace Conferences, and by the more recent London Naval Conference. But the majority of the members of the conference insisted on thrashing out intricate and difficult economic and diplomatic questions in the plenary sessions. It is to be hoped that at future Hague conferences the plan of working details be by commissions and committees which shall report to the conference in plenary session for approval, and after such approval submit the reports to a small editing committee for final revision.

In spite of the difficulties attending a defective organization, it is to the great credit of all the representatives that they were animated by a lofty spirit and a determination that the conference should achieve the practical results which had been hoped of it. This hope was fruitful, although the convention, as signed, presents unique features as to ratification and effectuation.[1]

The positive results of the conference may be stated as follows: Immediately after the adjournment of the International Opium Commission there were drafted in the Department of State two measures designed to control the foreign and interstate traffic in the United States of opium, morphine, and cocaine. When the conference assembled, it was soon seen that the principles contained in those measures were principles that could be readily applied by an international conference to the international traffic in the commodities under consideration. It may be said, therefore, that the International Opium Convention, as finally agreed upon, is based in part on well recognized principles, or proposed principles, of American interstate and navigation law. That part of the convention having to do with central governmental control of the drugs is based on the best European and Japanese practice, which on the whole is far in advance of the practice of our Federal Government.

A review of the convention will make this occult [sic]. Chapter I defines raw opium, and contains pledges on the part of the powers for the governance of the domestic and international traffic therein; Chapter II, of similar import, applies to opium prepared for smoking; and Chapter III to medicinal opium, morphine, and cocaine. Chapter IV, of five articles, is composed of pledges on the part of the treaty powers represented at the conference aimed to assist China in suppressing her great and vexatious opium problem. Chapter V is composed of article 20 as to possible laws on illegal possession of opium, and article 21 as to international exchange of documents and statistics. Chapter VI, of four articles, is composed of final provisions on supplementary signature, ratification, effectuation, and arbitration of the convention such as have never before been seen in an international document.

The first paragraph of Chapter I gives a practical commercial definition of raw opium, and fairly well conforms to the definitions of this substance as provided for many years in tariff legislation of the United States.

By Article I of the convention the contracting powers pledge themselves to enact effective laws or regulations to control the production and distribution of raw opium, unless their existing laws and regulations have already regulated the matter. That is, by this article the interested Governments must effectually bring under some sort of Government supervision, either by the monopoly system as practiced in India, or by authorization of persons, the production and distribution of raw opium.

By article 2 of the convention the contracting powers pledge themselves to restrict the number of cities, ports, and other places through which raw opium may be exported or imported. This article is in accord with American practice, for by virtue of the regulations issued by the Secretary of the Treasury under authority of the opium exclusion act approved February 9, 1909, the importation of opium into the United States is confined to 12 named ports. In practice, the effect of this article will be to secure a more strict governmental control of the importation and exportation of raw opium for medicinal purposes.

Article 3 is one of the most important articles of the convention in that it marks the formal adoption of a new principle of international commercial law, which, although in this case applies to opium, was recognized by all the delegates as applicable by future conferences to all commodities in international transit. By article 3 the contracting powers pledge themselves to take measures (a) to prevent the exportation of raw opium to countries which prohibit or may prohibit its entry, and (b) to control the exportation of raw opium to countries which regulate or may regulate its importation. This article conventionalizes resolution 4 of the International Opium Commission, which was pressed by the American delegation and finally adopted by that commission. China had for 50 years or more contended against the exportation of Indian opium to China, frankly avowing first by protest and then by legalization of the traffic that she was unable to wholly prevent the inroad of the drug. That contention had been scorned by some of the greatest statesmen and economists of their day, the generally accepted view being that it was the business of a country prohibiting the entry of any drug or commodity to prevent its importation, an exporting country not being greatly concerned with the destination of the exported article.

Upon the ratification by the various Governments of the present convention, by virtue of article 3, it will become an accepted principle of international commercial law that where a country has prohibited the importation of a drug or commodity, it is the business of a producing country to prevent the exportation of such products to the prohibiting country, or to prevent the exportation of such products unless the exporter conforms to the importation regulations of a regulating country. All the delegates recognized that this principle—though by this convention specifically applied to the opium traffic—could nevertheless be made applicable to any obnoxious or dangerous commodity in international trade. The adoption of this principle is of great credit to those opium-producing countries vitally affected by it. As concerns the United States and its possessions, in which no opium of any amount is produced, it is of great practical value, and when it becomes effective, will enable the preventive service of the customs to effectually exclude opium except for medicinal purposes, as provided for by the opium-exclusion act approved February 9, 1909, proposed legislation to strengthen that act, and Philippines legislation having the same object in view.

By article 4 of the convention the contracting powers pledge themselves to enact legislation or issue regulations providing that every package containing raw opium intended for export shall be marked so as to indicate its contents provided the shipment exceeds 5 kilograms. It was an object of the American delegation to secure that every package of opium for export should bear such marks. But as by Treasury regulation issued under the authority of the opium-exclusion act of February 9, 1909, delivery is made by the customs service of packages of opium containing not less than 100 pounds, it may be said that this article, as adopted by the conference, marks a decided advance on American practice.

By article 5 the contracting powers shall permit only duly authorized persons to import and export opium. In practice this will mean that all persons importing and exporting opium must eventually receive governmental authorization.

Chapter II of the convention is of striking importance, as it provides for the obliteration in a short time of the manufacture, exportation, imporation, and use of opium for smoking purposes, and, in the meantime, for the confining of such manufacture and use to territories where such manufacture and use now obtain by totally forbidding the export of this form of opium to countries which have prohibited its entry and use or to countries which propose in the future to prohibit its entry and use.

The first paragraph of Chapter II defines the substance known as opium prepared for smoking, and by article 6 the contracting powers pledge themselves to take measures for the control, and ultimately effective suppression of the manufacture, domestic traffic in, and use of this form of opium.

When it is recalled that not 10 years ago there was a large and influential body of public officials and others here and abroad who saw no harm, economic, moral, or otherwise, to oriental peoples, in opium smoking, the importance of article 6 will be recognized. It marks the right-about of such opinion, and a recognition by the Governments and peoples concerned that the opium-smoking vice is generally degrading beyond all benefits to revenue that may accrue from the manufacture, importation, exportation, and use of this form of opium, and a determination on the part of those Governments and peoples to bring the vice to a speedy conclusion.

By article 7 the contracting powers pledge themselves to prohibit not only the importation of the smokable form of opium, but also its exportation—thus conforming to one of the principles embraced by the opium exclusion act of February 9, 1909, and the proposed amendment thereto.

By article 8 of the convention the contracting powers which are not yet ready to prohibit the exportation of opium prepared for smoking are pledged to restrict the number of places through which such opium may be exported; to prohibit its exportation to countries which now or hereafter may prohibit its importation; in the meantime to forbid the shipment of any prepared opium to a country that wishes to restrict its admission, unless the exporter complies with the regulations of the importing country; to take measures to have each parcel exported bear a special mark indicative of the nature of its contents, and allow none but specially authorized persons to export this pernicious form of the drug.

It might seem from a hasty reading of article 8 that a general international traffic in prepared opium is sanctioned. But such is not the case, for it should be borne in mind that where it had become necessary every country represented at the conference had prohibited the importation, and in some cases the exportation and use of this form of opium, and the colonies and possessions of all of the countries except Portugal had passed strict laws forbidding the importation and in most cases the exportation of prepared opium. The notable instance of this not having been done is in the Portuguese Colony of Macau on the China coast, where large quantities of this form of opium have been and are still manufactured both for use in the colony and for exportation—the object being colonial revenue. The great mass of this opium is intended for Chinese and other consumers in the United States, the Philippine Islands, Canada, and Mexico. By the opium exclusion act of February 9, 1909, the importation of this form of the drug into the United States is prohibited. The importation, manufacture, and use of it is prohibited in the Philippines.

A recently enacted Canadian statute not only forbids the importation of this form of the drug, but its manufacture, transshipment, or exportation. The Attorney General has held that under our opium-exclusion act of February 9, 1909, prepared opium may be imported into the United States for immediate transshipment by sea. Mexico has no law on the subject. The result is that the great mass of Macanise opium is brought to San Francisco and immediately transshipped by sea to western Mexican ports, from whence it, added to the direct Mexican import, is mostly smuggled into the United States across the Mexican border. Therefore, Portugal, at her colony of Macau, is the only country to-day which permits the export of this vicious form of opium, while the ports of all those countries parties to the convention are closed to it. The measures necessary to counteract and suppress this traffic to the United States are embodied in a proposed amendment to the opium-exclusion act of February 9, 1909, and will be adverted to later. It will be shown that if the Congress will enact the proposed amendment the international traffic in smoking opium will be practically wiped out.

Chapter III of the convention is an important one and proved to be the most difficult to formulate of all the chapters of the convention except that one containing the final provisions. The traffic in raw opium and opium prepared for smoking had been thoroughly studied by the International Opium Commission at Shanghai and by the various national commissions appointed by the interested Governments before that commission met, or which sat in the interval between the adjournment of the International Opium Commission and the assembling of the International Opium Conference. After the British Government made it a sine qua non that their participation in the International Opium Conference would depend upon the willingness of the interested Governments to pledge themselves to the same drastic legislation for the control of the production, manufacture, and trade in morphine and cocaine as in regard to opium, all the interested Governments willingly assented to this proposal when it was presented to them by the United States and the Netherlands Government on behalf of Great Britain. But a new factor was, nevertheless, injected into the problem and had to be met.

The necessity for the British proposals had become obvious to all the Governments interested in the Far East; for, beginning with the suppression of the opium vice in China and other far eastern countries, a determined, and one almost might say a calculated, effort was made by the manufacturers of morphine and cocaine to introduce these drugs in replacement of opium. Such efforts had largely succeeded, and to the world was presented the spectacle of many great Governments willingly sacrificing or providing for the sacrifice of an aggregate annual opium revenue in the neighborhood of $100,000,000, only to see the subjects of some of them pressing two other deadly drugs into the hands of those far eastern people who had heroically determined and were bent upon the abandonment of the opium vice. The British proposals in regard to morphine and cocaine were eminently sound, practical, and essential, and it became the duty of the International Opium Conference to provide against the abuse of morphine and cocaine similarly as regarded opium.

Chapter III of the convention is not by any means ideal, but represents a fair compromise of conflicting interests, and will no doubt be perfected by future conferences on the question. The first paragraph of Chapter III defines medicinal opium as opium that must contain not less than 10 per cent of morphine. This is superior to the tariff practice of the United States, which provides for the admission of medicinal opium containing not less than 9 per cent of morphine, but it confirms the standard for medicinal opium set by the International Pharmaceutical Conference of 1906, to which the United States is a party. Morphine, cocaine, and heroin are also defined by this paragraph.

By article 9, Chapter III, the contracting powers pledge themselves to enact laws or regulations so as to restrict the manufacture, sale, and use of morphine and cocaine and their respective salts to medicinal and legitimate uses only, unless their existing laws and regulations already cover the matter. This article appertains to national legislation only, and it will be pointed out later that the United States is the most backward of all the western nations and almost strikingly behind Japan in this phase of legislation.

Article 10, Chapter III, is weak in that the powers only pledge themselves "to use their best efforts to control or cause to be controlled" those who manufacture, import, sell, distribute, or export morphine, cocaine, and their respective salts and the buildings in which such persons carry on that industry or trade. The article then goes on to lay down the specific manner in which this object shall be accomplished.

There was a willingness on the part of all the delegations to formulate this article as strictly as the articles dealing with raw opium and opium prepared for smoking. But there were certain constitutional difficulties in the way—notably in the case of Germany—and article 10 was a compromise based on the fact that Germany has extremely strict and effective National and State laws governing the question dealt with by article 10. This is also true of several of the other European countries represented in the conference, and certainly of Japan.

By article 11 the contracting powers are to take measures to prohibit in their home trade any delivery of morphine, cocaine, and their respective salts to any but authorized persons, and by article 12 the importation of morphine and cocaine is restricted to persons authorized by the Government.

What was said of article 10 may be said of article 13, where the contracting powers do not pledge themselves to adopt, but only to use their best efforts to adopt or cause to be adopted measures to prevent the exportation of the named drugs from their home territories, possessions, colonies, and leased territories to the countries, possessions, colonies, and leased territories of the other contracting powers, and provides that each Government may communicate from time to time to the Governments of exporting countries the lists of persons to whom authorization or permits to import the named drugs shall have been granted. It was the hope of the American delegation that a distinct pledge be made by the interested Governments to enact legislation to prevent the exportation of these drugs except by authorized persons in one country to authorized importers in another. But it was not found possible to secure this.

By article 14 the contracting powers pledge themselves to apply their laws and regulations governing the manufacture, importation, sale, and exportation of morphine, cocaine, and their respective salts to medicinal opium and to all preparations of opium containing not more than 0.2 per cent of morphine or more than 0.1 per cent of cocaine and heroin, and also to any new derivative of morphine and cocaine, or any other alkaloid of opium which might be shown by general scientific research to occasion similar abuses and result in like noxious effects. Article 14 again represents a compromise. The American and several other delegations pressed to have the exceptions in this article as to percentages of morphine, cocaine, and heroin deleted, but failed to accomplish their purpose.

Chapter IV is composed of articles governing the opium traffic as it has obtained in the past between China and the nationals of several Governments represented. The interest of the United States in this chapter may be said to be important, because it contains principles for which the Chinese Government and people long contended, principles which were supported by the United States in its first treaty (1844) with China, and by Article II of the treaty of 1880 with China, which directly prohibit American citizens from entering into the Chinese foreign or coastwise traffic in opium. Chapter IV bears somewhat on the great concession made to China by Great Britain by the so-called 10-year agreement of 1907 and the modification of that agreement, signed at Peking May 8, 1911.

To make this clear a digression may now be made, for one of the purposes of this Government in initiating the international movement for consideration of the opium traffic in the Far East was to have the interested powers determine if the Indo-Chinese opium traffic and the collateral opium traffic to the Philippines could not be mitigated or abolished. Coincident with this purpose, the great leaders of the British Government, more particularly Sir Edward Grey, Lord Morley, Earl Crewe, and Lord Minto as Governor General of India, determined upon an agreement with China by which the Indo-Chinese opium traffic should be abolished pari passu with the suppression of the production of opium in China. During 1907 an important agreement was arrived at by the British and Chinese Governments whereby the then annual exportation of Indian opium, 67,000 chests of about 140 pounds each, was to be reduced by 10 per cent per annum of the then Chinese import of the drug—51,000 chests—on condition that China suppressed her internal production of opium—about 300,000 chests per annum—at the same rate; that is, the total export of opium from India to all countries was to be reduced by 5,100 chests a year, and the Chinese production by about 30,000 chests, the object being the obliteration of the Indo-Chinese opium traffic and the internal production of opium in China in 10 years, beginning January 1, 1908. This agreement was entered into by both parties with sincerity and determination, and Lord Morley later intimated that should China outrun her part, the British Government would modify the agreement in her favor. There was a great and wide-spread doubt as to China's ability to live up to the agreement of 1907. But by April, 1911, the Chinese Government was able to demonstrate to a British official appointed for that purpose that they had more than carried out their part of the agreement by completely suppressing the production of opium in certain of the Chinese provinces, and reducing the production in other provinces from 30 to 75 per cent.

It is worthy of note that the British official just referred to, Sir Alexander Hosie, a representative of the British Government at the International Opium Commission, reported that in the great Province of Szechuan, which, before the Anglo-Chinese Agreement of 1907, was producing more than 200,000 piculs (picul=133⅓ pounds) of opium, had completely suppressed its production at the time he reported, and that in the great Province of Yunnan, where there has been a production of 60,000 piculs, such production has been reduced 75 per cent. This had been accomplished by a loosely organized empire as the result of imperial edicts which, running through the land, received the moral support of a great majority of the Chinese people, their viceroys and governors of provinces, magistrates, and other officials.

Thereupon on May 8, 1911, the British Government agreed with China that there should be a modification of the agreement of 1907. The chief points of the new agreement are as follows:

1. The British Government recognizing the sincerity of the Chinese Government and their pronounced success in diminishing the production of opium in China during the three years from January 1, 1908, expressed their willingness to continue the arrangement for the unexpired period of seven years on the following conditions:

2. From the 1st of January, 1911, China shall diminish annually for seven years the production of opium in China in the same proportion as the annual export from India is diminished until total extinction of the Chinese production in 1917.

3. The Chinese Government having adopted a most rigorous policy for prohibiting the production and the transport of native opium produced in China, the British Government expressed their agreement with this policy and their willingness to give every assistance. With a view to facilitating the continuance of this work, His Majesty's Government agree that the export of opium from India to China shall cease in less than seven years if clear proof is given of the complete suppression of the production of native opium in China.

4. His Majesty's Government also agreed that Indian opium shall not be conveyed into any Province in China which can establish by clear evidence that it has effectively suppressed the cultivation and import of native opium produced in China.

5. During the period of the new agreement China shall permit His Majesty's Government to obtain continuous evidence of the diminution of production of native opium by local inquiries and investigation conducted by one or more British officials, accompanied—if the Chinese Government so desire—by a Chinese official. The decision of these inspectors as to the extent of the production of native opium in China is to be accompanied [sic] by both parties to the agreement.

6. By the arrangement of 1907, the British Government agreed to permit China to dispatch an official to India to watch the opium sales, on condition that such official would have no power of interference. His Majesty's Government now agree that the official so dispatched may be present at the packing, as well as at the sale of opium on the same conditions.

7. The Chinese Government undertakes to levy a uniform tax on all opium produced in the Chinese Empire, while the British Government consent to the increase in the present import duty on Indian opium to 350 taels per chest of 100 catties—such increase to take effect as soon as the Chinese Government levy an equivalent excise tax on all native opium.

8. With a view to assisting China in the suppression of opium, the British Government undertakes that from 1911, the Government of India will issue an export permit, with a consecutive number for each chest of Indian opium declared for shipment to or for consumption in China. During the year 1911 the number of permits so issued is not to exceed 30,000, and shall be progressively reduced annually by 5,100 during the remaining six years ending 1917. His Majesty's Government undertakes that each chest of opium for which such permit has been granted shall be sealed by an official deputed by the Indian Government, in the presence of the Chinese official, if so requested.

9. Both parties agree that should it appear on subsequent experience desirable at any time during the unexpired portion of seven years to modify the agreement or any part thereof, it may be revised by mutual consent.

The agreement of 1911 has an annex providing for the release into China of some thousands of chests of opium held by traders. But the number of these chests is to be deducted from the gradually waning annual exportation from India, permitted by the agreement of 1907 and by the later agreement.

The agreement of 1907 between Great Britain and China, and the modification of that agreement of May 8, 1911, just outlined, is perhaps the finest example of the comity of nations recorded in modern times. After a controversy sustained for over 100 years both parties to the Indo-Chinese opium trade have now determined upon the gradual and effective suppression of that trade, and one of them—China—has agreed, and has so far most effectively carried out its agreement, to suppress an internal production of opium six times greater than the foreign traffic in the drug.

The acceptance of Chapter IV of the International Opium Convention by the treaty powers represented at the conference broadens this comity and will prevent any nation signatory to the convention taking unfair advantage of the special Anglo-Chinese agreement.

To continue an outline of the International Opium Convention, it may be stated that by Chapter V, composed of two articles, the contracting powers agree to examine the possibility of enacting laws or regulations making the illegal possession of the drugs named in the convention liable to penalties unless existing laws or regulations have already done so; and they are to communicate to each other through the Netherlands ministry for foreign affairs the text of the laws and the administrative regulations which concern matters aimed at by the convention; also statistical information with respect to that which concerns the traffics covered by the convention.

But especially attention should be directed to Chapter VI of the convention containing its final provisions. This chapter, composed of articles 22, 23, 24, and 25, marks a radical departure from final provisions as seen in any other international convention. It recognizes the futility of an attempt on the part of a minority of the powers of the world to bring under control the international traffic in anything which may be produced or trafficked in by the nationals of any State, and would seem to have irretrievably determined that future international conferences, such as the International Opium Conference, must be composed of and its convention to be effective signed by an overwhelming majority of the States directly or indirectly interested. Nearly all international conventions similar to the opium convention heretofore signed have been signed by delegates of a comparatively small number of the major and minor States, and generally speaking, their final provisions have permitted of the adhesion of States not represented at the conference, and have provided for ratification by the signatory powers in the shortest possible time—usually not to exceed two years.

The International Opium Conference had no sooner assembled than certain of the delegations pointed out that it would be useless for those States represented in the conference, and who were the largest producers and traders in opium, morphine, cocaine, etc., to agree to radical measures for the international control of these drugs, so long as it was open to the nationals of those States not represented at the conference to continue or take up the production of and traffic in them.

It was contended by the American delegation, and they were not alone in this contention, that the International Opium Conference was composed of nations representative of the civilized world; therefore that the delegates should pledge their Governments to the convention, and that the ordinary form of adhesion and ratification should be adopted as the final provisions of the convention. The American delegation was urged to this contention by the belief that those Governments interested and not represented at the conference would soon adhere to what had been signed, as they had many times adhered to other conventions to which they were not directly signatory. But this view was not favored by a majority of the delegations present, and the conference finally decided, as provided by article 22 of the convention, that the powers not represented at the conference shall be permitted to sign the present convention, and that to this end the Netherlands Government shall invite immediately after the convention shall have been signed all the powers of Europe and of America not represented at the conference (and then is enumerated the 34 other powers of Europe and America) to designate a delegate armed with the full powers necessary for signing of the convention at The Hague.

Article 22 proceeds to provide that the convention shall be furnished with the signatures of the other powers by means of a "Protocol of signature of powers not represented at the conference," to be added after the signatures of the powers represented, and indicating the date of each signature; and that the Netherlands shall give a monthly notice to all the signatory powers of each supplementary signature.

Article 23 provides that after all the powers, as much for themselves as for their possessions, colonies, protectorates, and leased territories shall have signed the supplementary protocol of signatures, the Netherlands Government shall invite the powers to ratify the convention, together with the protocol of signature.

In case the signature of all the powers invited shall not have been secured by December 31, 1912, the Netherlands Government shall immediately invite all the powers who have signed by that date to designate delegates to proceed to The Hague to examine into the possibility of nevertheless depositing their ratifications. Ratifications shall then be executed within as short a time as possible, and shall be deposited at once at The Hague in the ministry for foreign affairs. It is also provided that the Netherlands Government shall give notice to all the powers who shall have ratified the convention, and of the date on which the last of such acts of ratification shall have been received.

By article 24, it is provided that the convention shall go into effect three months after the date on which the Netherlands Government gives notice of ratification to the powers, and again that all laws, regulations, and other measures provided for by the convention shall be drawn up not later than six months after the effectuation of the convention; it is further provided that these measures shall become operative subject to an agreement between the signatory powers at the instance of the Netherlands Government.

It is important to notice that the last paragraph of article 24 provides that in case questions arise relative to the ratification of the convention, for effectuation of the convention, or the effectuation of the laws, regulations, and measures which the convention involves, the Netherlands Government, if these questions shall not be decided by other means, shall invite all the signatory powers to designate delegates who shall assemble at The Hague to come to an immediate agreement on these questions. This is a novel feature, and as it will be readily seen practically provides for an arbitration at The Hague of any disputes growing out of the terms of the convention.

Article 25 of the convention is common form, and contains the usual provision for denunciation, for the deposit of the convention, and for the transmission of certified copies of it to the powers represented at the conference.

It may be stated that the novel final provisions of the convention were designed because of the difficulties connected with its Chapter III concerning morphine and cocaine. Chapters I and II concerning the production and traffic in raw and prepared opium and Chapter IV concerning China are composed of distinct pledges by the signatory powers made on questions on which there was little or no disagreement, and to which it was thought the powers not represented at the conference would readily adhere. Chapter III, on the other hand, deals with the question of the traffic in morphine and cocaine, on which there was disagreement considerable enough to compel certain of the delegations to hold that the chapter could not be effectuated by the signatory powers until it was subscribed to by the States not represented in the conference. Therefore the novel final provisions were designed because of the difficulties connected with the contents of Chapter III, and the ratification of the entire convention must now wait upon the necessary supplementary signatures of 34 other States.

Toward the end of the conference, and with the object of escaping this dilemma, the American delegation proposed that the convention should be broken in two parts—one to be composed of Chapters I, II, IV, and V, on the contents and strict pledges of which all the delegations were agreed, and to have as final articles the ordinary form of such articles in other conventions which provide for adhesion and ratification; the other convention to be composed of Chapters III and VI, the latter to contain the novel final articles as eventually adopted for the convention as it now stands. The American view, however, was not acceptable to a majority of the delegations, and therefore was not pressed.

In addition to the convention the delegates to the International Opium Conference signed a protocole de clôture, which contains the following views: That the conference is of the opinion that there is reason to draw the attention of the Universal Postal Union to the urgency of regulating the transmission by post of raw opium; to the necessity of regulating as far as possible the transmission by post of morphine and cocaine and their respective salts, and of the other substances contemplated by article 14 of the convention; to the necessity of prohibiting the transmission of prepared opium by post and of the advisability of the study of the question of the Indian hemp drugs from the statistical and scientific standpoint with a view to regulating their misuse should the necessity thereof make itself felt.

Generally speaking, it may be said that the convention is satisfactory, and illustrates that the most powerful nations in the world are now agreed that an evil such as the opium evil is never wholly national in its incidence, can never be suppressed by two nations alone—as was supposed to be the case in regard to the Indo-Chinese opium traffic—but that such an evil as it appears in one State is a concomitant or reflex of a similar evil in other States and is therefore international in its moral, humanitarian, economic, and diplomatic effect; that this being so, few evils can be eradicated by national action alone; and therefore only by the cooperation of all the States directly or indirectly interested can such an evil be mitigated or suppressed.

The convention marks a decided step in advance in the international movement for the suppression of the opium evil initiated by the United States. This movement at first was thought to concern only those countries of the Far East, or those western nations having territorial possessions in the Far East—five or six in number. But it has proceeded by way of a sober international commission of inquiry, composed of commissioners representing 13 nations, and by a conference composed of delegates with full powers representing 12 of these nations. These delegates having formulated and signed on behalf of their Governments a convention containing strict pledges for national legislation and international cooperation, the convention has now been presented to the remaining States of Europe and America—34 in number—for their signature.

But, quite apart from the contents of the convention itself, the international movement initiated by the United States has had a directly beneficial effect on the interested nations, for pending the assembling and action of the International Opium Commission, and while the diplomatic correspondence, aimed to secure The Hague conference, was in progress, many of the Governments concerned perfected domestic legislation for the suppression of the evils connected with opium and other narcotics, and took measures concerning the export of these drugs which were of international significance.

By the final provisions of the convention contained in Chapter VI, there will probably be a delay of a year before the convention can be ratified by the signatory powers and those powers who agree to sign the protocol of supplementary signature. That, however, is of little moment compared to the new international comity which has been established by the document, and the furtherance by it of new principles of international commercial law; while the deduction may be made from article 22 of the convention, that all future Hague conferences dealing with matters of general international commerce must be composed of an overwhelming majority of the nations.

There is, however, one aspect from which the convention may be viewed that should be disquieting to the Government and the people of the United States. It has just been stated that a reflex effect of the initiation by the United States of the international movement for the abatement of the opium evil took the form of improved domestic legislation in nearly all the countries concerned, of very drastic legislation in some, while one country at least—Great Britain—both by national and colonial law, effectuated resolution 4 of the International Opium Commission, as now embodied in article 3 of the International Opium Convention.

The one nation which has not been vitally affected by the international movement initiated by the United States is the United States itself, except in the Philippines. In the islands there are model antinarcotic laws; but, in spite of repeated urging by the Executive, the Congress so far has failed favorably to consider carefully drafted measures aimed to bring the continental United States into line and in accord with the principles now embraced by the International Opium Convention. A good beginning was made by the Federal Government, as may be seen by reference to the opium act approved February 9, 1909. This act is imperfect—the only effect which it could possibly have being to prevent the legal importation into the United States of the vicious form of opium known as opium prepared for smoking.

The Federal Government legalized the importation of the latter form of opium by the tariff act of 1860, and from that year until the opium-exclusion act became effective on April 1, 1909, there were legally imported into the United States over 4,000,000 pounds of this debasing form of the drug on which the Government collected a customs tax of nearly $27,000,000. In addition to the legal importation from 1860 onward, almost half as much again of this form of opium is supposed to have been smuggled into the United States. The evils, economic as well as moral, associated with the importation and use of this form of the drug can not be accurately computed, but what might be fairly called an underestimate of them was set forth in the report made on behalf of the American delegates to the International Opium Commission. (S. Doc. No. 377, 61st Cong., 2d sess.)

Just prior to the assembling of the International Opium Commission at Shanghai in February, 1909, it became apparent to the Department of State that the American Government had invited the cooperation of 12 nations to mitigate or suppress the opium evil as seen in Far Eastern countries, but had failed to recognize that it had legalized the importation of that form of the drug which had been most baneful in its effect on the people of China and of other Asiatic States. It was at once seen that it would be quite impossible for the American commissioners to appear at Shanghai until the Federal Government had taken some step toward a house cleaning. This was promptly done in part by the passage of the so-called opium-exclusion act just after the International Commission had convened.

Animated by the example of the Federal Government, some 30 of the States have improved the intrastate legislation aimed to confine narcotics to legitimate uses, but since February 9, 1909—the date of approval of the just mentioned act—no further decided congressional action has been taken, and the United States is now in the position, after having received the cordial cooperation of 12 powers, of being far behind in the movement to accomplish the purpose to which the American Government set itself in the autumn of 1906, when the first steps were taken to secure such cooperation.

There is no doubt that during the sittings of the International Opium Conference at The Hague the American delegation was placed in a somewhat embarrassing position, owing to the neglect of the Congress to pass legislation which had been urged upon it by the Executive, aimed to perfect the opium-exclusion act of February, 1909, and to bring under efficient control the export and interstate commerce in opium and other habit-forming drugs. Both formally and informally, it was pointed out to the American delegates at that conference that the other nations could have little hope for a final suppression of the opium and allied evils by international action so long as the United States, which had initiated the movement, failed to adopt the standard of national control in vogue in several European nations and in Japan.

Three bills with this purpose in view have been urged upon Congress since March, 1910. They are entitled as follows:

(a) A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes," approved February 9, 1909;

(b) A bill to amend the act of October 1, 1890 (26 Stat., p. 1567) regulating the manufacture of smoking opium within the United States;

(c) A bill imposing a tax upon and regulating the production, manufacture, and distribution of certain habit-forming drugs.

A fourth bill has been designed to carry out the pledges of this Government as contained in resolutions 8 and 9 of the International Opium Commission and as now pledged by this Government by virtue of article 16 of the International Opium Convention. The title of that bill is as follows:

(d) A bill to regulate the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poisons in the consular districts of the United States in China.

The bills (a), (b), (c), were drafted after a wide consultation with all the interests likely to be affected (see S. Doc. No. 377, 61st Cong., 2d sess.). They have the general support of the pharmacy boards of the different States of the Union which are charged with the enforcement under the police power of the States, of the State acts for the regulation of pharmacy and the sale of narcotics; of the legislative committee of the National Retail Druggists' Association; and of the legislative committee of the National Wholesale Druggists' Association.

Since the adjournment of the International Opium Conference on the 23d of last January, these bills (a), (b), and (c), have been carefully revised by a joint committee composed of representatives of the Department of State and of the Treasury Department, and their speedy consideration has been urged upon the Congress by the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Treasury. Finally, it may be stated that the President has commended to Congress, with his approval, the legislation in question:

First. By a message transmitting from the Secretary of State a report on the International Opium Commission and on the opium problem as seen within the United States and its possessions (S. Doc. No. 377, 61st Cong., 2d sess.)[1];

Second. In his annual message to the Congress, December 7, 1910;[2]

Third. In a special message to the Congress, transmitting a report of the Secretary of State relative to the control of the opium traffic (S. Doc. No. 736, 61st Cong., 3d sess.)[3]; and

Fourth. In his message on foreign relations, communicated to the two Houses of Congress December 7, 1911.[4]

It has been pointed out above that the United States had collected in customs duties, from 1860 until April 1, 1909, nearly $27,000,000 from the legalized importation of that vicious form of opium known as opium prepared for smoking, and that the use of this drug within the United States had caused an economic and moral degradation which could not be accurately computed.

Since June, 1908, the Congress, on the request of the Executive, has appropriated $45,000 to enable the Government to secure international and national action for the mitigation or suppression of the evils connected with opium. Such international action has been secured at an expense wholly at variance with the large revenue which accrued to the Government as the result of the lgal importation of prepared opium. This supply of $45,000 has been administered more than economically, and has enabled the Government to support for four years a commission composed from time to time of from one to three members, to send three delegates to an International Opium Commission in the Far East, and later three delegates and the necessary secretaries to an International Opium Conference at The Hague. Therefore, it is the mature conclusion of those who have, under the Secretary of State, been intrusted with the work connected with the national and international aspects of the opium question that the Congress, having financially supported the Executive in its successful effort to ameliorate the international aspects of a great evil by the cooperation of 12 States extending over a period of four years, that the Congress should speedily consider and pass the legislation so urgently needed to redeem the position of this Government, and to place it in the advanced line achieved in domestic legislation by a majority of the interested nations, and now formally agreed to by a conference composed of the delegates of 12 States representing the highest civilization of the West and East.

HAMILTON WRIGHT,
On behalf of the American Delegates.

The Secretary of the Treasury to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.[1]

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, July 2, 1912.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, copy of a communication of the Secretary of State of June 29, 1912, submitting an estimate of appropriation in the sum of $25,000 in connection with the international effort to eradicate the opium evil, as follows:

To enable this Government to continue its efforts to mitigate if not entirely stamp out the opium, morphine, and other allied drug evils by further investigations and proceedings, and through another international conference, if necessary, to make effective the results heretofore accomplished, twenty-five thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

Respectfully, FRANKLIN MACVEAGH.

The Secretary of State to the Secretary of the Treasury.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 29, 1912.

SIR: For some five years past this Government has been in the forefront of the international effort to eradicate the opium evil as seen in far eastern countries, more especially in China and in the Philippine Islands. On the initiative of this Government there have been held, first, an international commission to scientifically study the various aspects of the question, and, recently, an international opium conference, composed of delegates with full powers, to give the force of law and of international agreement to the recommendations of the previously held commission. In all this time this Government has had the hearty cooperation of 12 other nations of Europe and Asia, and the movement has been broadened so as to include the opium and allied evils as seen in the national territories of the powers concerned. By the international opium convention signed at The Hague on January 23 last the movement was still further broadened, provision having been made for the cooperation of the remaining 34 powers of Europe and America.

On May 28 last I had the honor to transmit to the President, who in turn transmitted it to the Congress (S. Doc. No. 733, 62d Cong., 2d sess.), a report[2] of the American delegation to the international opium conference. This report carefully analyses what has already been accomplished by the thirteen Governments concerned, and also the convention signed at The Hague, and explains the diplomatic and economic difficulties which may make necessary the holding of another conference at The Hague in the near future, at which final action on the questions involved is to be taken.

Pending future international action by the large number of powers concerned, it is essential that this Government continue its activity in the consideration of legislation and other matters necessary to enable the United States to redeem pledges entered into by virtue of the international opium convention recently signed at The Hague, and to assist the Netherlands Government to obtain adhesion to the convention by the Latin-American States.

Appropriations made by the Congress for the furtherance of this work have been set forth in the above-mentioned Senate document, and it has been pointed out therein that the $45,000 thus appropriated has been more than economically administered, and that the results attained by the Department of State have been highly gratifying considering the limited amount of the appropriation. It has been pointed out that the direct benefit which has accrued to the United States and its possessions as the result of the international movement for the settlement of the opium problem has been many times greater than the amount so far appropriated by the Congress and, further, that it has been a principle of the Department of State to request small appropriations to carry on the work as it develops, rather than a single large appropriation which it has known might be necessary to bring the work to a conclusion.

[1] Referred to the Committee on Appropriations July 3, 1912, and ordered to be printed.
[2] See p. 207.

The appropriation made by the Congress is now practically exhausted, and an additional sum is necessary for the conclusion of the great humanitarian object, through the cooperation of the Federal Government with that of the Netherlands and with those of the other foreign powers.

I have therefore the honor to request that you be good enough to submit to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, with a view to its inclusion in the general deficiency bill, the following item of appropriation:

> To enable this Government to continue its efforts to mitigate if not entirely stamp out the opium, morphine, and other allied drug evils by further investigations and proceedings and through another international conference, if necessary, to make effective the results heretofore accomplished, twenty-five thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

I have [etc.].

P. C. KNOX.

NOTE.—On July 10, 1912, the Secretary of the Treasury called the attention of Congress to the foregoing letter of July 2, 1912, and added his own recommendation to that of the Secretary of State, relative to the urgency of the desired appropriation of $25,000. (House Doc. 1043, 62d Congress, 3d session.)

House Doc. No. 1043, 62d Cong., 3d sess.

The Secretary of the Treasury to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.[1]

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, December 2, 1912.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, copy of a communication from the Secretary of State of October 28, 1912, submitting an estimate of appropriation in the sum of $25,000 to enable this Government to continue its efforts to mitigate the opium, morphine, and other allied drug evils.

A similar estimate was transmitted to Congress at the request of the Secretary of State on July 2, 1912 (H. Doc. No. 861, 62d Cong., 2d sess.), for inclusion in the general deficiency bill, but was not so acted upon by Congress, and the Secretary of State renews the estimate at this time with a view to its inclusion in an urgent deficiency bill.

Respectfully, FRANKLIN MACVEAGH.

[Inclosure.]

The Secretary of State to the Secretary of the Treasury.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, October 28, 1912.

SIR: On June 29 of this year I had the honor to address you requesting you to be good enough to submit to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, with a view to its inclusion in the general deficiency bill, an item appropriating $25,000 to enable this Government to continue its efforts to mitigate the opium, morphine, and other allied drug evils. In accordance with my request, on July

[1] Referred to the Committee on Appropriations December 5, 1912, and ordered to be printed.

2 you addressed the Speaker of the House of Representatives in the above sense. The Congress, however, failed to include in the general deficiency bill the item in question.

In my letter it was pointed out that diplomatic and economic difficulties might make necessary the holding of another conference at The Hague in the near future, at which final action on the questions involved would be taken. It is now quite certain that a concluding conference will be held, convening early in the coming year, and bearing in mind the prominence of this Government in the international movement looking to the eradication of these drug evils, bearing in mind indeed that it was on the initiation of this Government that there was held, first, the international commission to study the various aspects of the question, and then the international conference of last winter, to finish the work of which the coming conference is to be called, the absolute necessity of the appropriation I am now requesting is apparent. The failure of the Congress to make this appropriation means the failure of this Government to assist in carrying out the work which it initiated, a work which it is manifestly pledged to conclude.

With a view to its inclusion in the urgent deficiency bill, I therefore have the honor to request you again to submit to the Speaker of the House of Representatives the following item of appropriation:

> To enable this Government to continue its efforts to mitigate if not entirely stamp out the opium, morphine, and other allied drug evils by further investigations and proceedings and through another international conference, to make effective the results heretofore accomplished, twenty-five thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

I have the honor to transmit herewith copies of Senate Document No. 733, Sixty-second Congress, second session; of House Document No. 861 of the same Congress, and of your letter of July 10 to the Speaker of the House of Representatives. I have the honor to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

P. C. Knox.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of Department despatch No. 7 dated December 29, 1911,[2] relating to the claim of Señor Ramos Ruiz for damages said to have been sustained by his house and furniture while occupied as the American Legation by Minister Charles Burdett Hart about ten years ago.

Immediately on receiving the despatch I obtained an interview with Mr. Ruiz in the Legation, and he said his claim was for over seven hundred dollars. Shortly after this interview his wife died and I refrained from further communication with him owing to his complete prostration. A few days since he called at the Legation and said that he was very feeble, and the claim had been so long under consideration he would give a receipt in full upon payment of $400, which according to Mr. Hibbin's No. 219, dated January 1, 1909, the Foreign Minister had mentioned as the basis of settlement.

[1] General Pedro Nel Ospina resigned February 21, 1912; the new minister, Señor don Julio Betancourt, was received July 25, 1912.

[2] Not printed.

Mr. Ruiz is feeble and desires an early settlement, and has requested that if possible the amount $400 should be paid through this Legation. As the claim is from all I can learn a just one and the amount demanded reasonable, and as the existence of this claim militates against the prestige of this Legation, I earnestly recommend the payment of the $400 which Mr. Ruiz now offers to accept in full liquidation of his claim.

Ruiz matter, your dispatch No. 37. You will draw on the Secretary of State $400 and pay Ruiz in full settlement of his claim. When you make the payment point out to the Foreign Office that there is no legal liability attaching to this Government in the matter, but in view of all the circumstances the payment is made as an act of grace.

COSTA RICA.

MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT, DON RICARDO JIMÉNEZ, TO THE CONGRESS, MAY 1, 1912.[1]

[Extract—Translation.]

At the beginning of March we were the object, on the part of the Government of the United States of America, of a mark of great distinction. Its Secretary of State, His Excellency Mr. Ph. C. Knox, made us a visit of courtesy and friendship. His affability, the cordiality of his words, the satisfaction given by his speeches and the direct knowledge that he now possesses of ourselves and our conditions will guarantee the frank relations of the two Governments and the permanence of the close relations that have been constant in the past and will be more closely woven in the future, with the opening of the Panama Canal.

NATURALIZATION CONVENTION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND COSTA RICA.

Signed at San José, June 10, 1911; ratification advised by the Senate, February 14, 1912; ratified by the President, March 29, 1912; ratified by Costa Rica, August 5, 1911; ratifications exchanged at San José, May 9, 1912; proclaimed, June 6, 1912.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas a Naturalization Convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Costa Rica was concluded and signed by their respective Plenipotentiaries at San José on the 10th day of June one thousand nine hundred and eleven, the original of which Convention, being in the English and Spanish languages is word for word as follows:

Convention to fix the condition of naturalized citizens who renew their residence in country of their origin

The President of the United States of America and the President of the Republic of Costa Rica, desiring to regulate the citizenship of those persons who emigrate from the United States of America to Costa Rica and from Costa Rica to the United States of America, have resolved to conclude a convention on this subject and for that purpose have appointed their plenipotentiaries to conclude a convention, that is to say: the President of the United States of America, G. L. Monroe Jr., Chargé d'Affaires ad interim of the United States at Costa Rica, and the President of Costa Rica, Señor Licenciado don Manuel Castro Quesada, Minister for Foreign Affairs, who have agreed to and signed the following articles:

[1] Transmitted by the American Chargé d'Affaires May 16 with dispatch No. 25.

ARTICLE I

Citizens of the United States who may or shall have been naturalized in Costa Rica, upon their own application or by their own consent, will be considered by the United States as citizens of the Republic of Costa Rica. Reciprocally, Costa Ricans who may or shall have been naturalized in the United States upon their own application or with their own consent, will be considered by the Republic of Costa Rica citizens of the United States.

ARTICLE II

If a Costa Rican, naturalized in the United States of America, renews his residence in Costa Rica without intent to return to the United States, he may be held to have renounced his naturalization in the United States. Reciprocally, if a citizen of the United States, naturalized in Costa Rica, renews his residence in the United States, without intent to return to Costa Rica, he may be presumed to have renounced his naturalization in Costa Rica.

The intent not to return may be held to exist when the person naturalized in the one country resides more than two years in the other country, but this presumption may be destroyed by evidence to the contrary.

ARTICLE III

It is mutually agreed that the definition of the word "citizen" as used in this convention, shall be held to mean a person to whom nationality of the United States or Costa Rica attaches.

ARTICLE IV

A recognized citizen of the one party, returning to the territory of the other, remains liable to trial and legal punishment for an action punishable by the laws of his original country and committed before his emigration; but not for the emigration itself, saving always the limitation established by the laws of his original country, and any other remission of liability to punishment.

ARTICLE V

The declaration of intention to become a citizen of the one or the other country has not for either party the effect of naturalization.

ARTICLE VI

The present convention shall go into effect immediately on the exchange of ratifications, and in the event of either party giving the other notice of its intention to terminate the convention it shall continue to be in effect for one year more, to count from the date of such notice.

The present convention shall be submitted to the approval and ratification of the respective appropriate authorities of each of the contracting parties, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at San José or Washington within twenty-four months of the date hereof.

Signed at the city of San José on the 10th day of June one thousand nine hundred and eleven.

[SEAL.] G. L. MONROE JR
[SEAL.] MANUEL CASTRO QUESADA

And whereas the said Convention has been duly ratified on both parts and the ratifications of the two governments were exchanged in the City of San José on the 9th day of May, one thousand nine hundred and twelve;

Now, therefore, be it known that I, William Howard Taft, President of the United States of America, have caused the said Convention to be made public, to the end that the same and every article and clause thereof may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by the United States and the citizens thereof.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this sixth day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and twelve, and [SEAL] of the Independence of the United States of America, the one hundred and thirty-sixth.

The Minister of Costa Rica to the Acting Secretary of State.

LEGATION OF COSTA RICA,
Washington, February 14, 1912.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt this afternoon of your esteemed letter dated yesterday, in which you were pleased to inform me that, [etc.] [1]

In answer thereto it affords me the greatest pleasure to say that the Government and people of Costa Rica appreciate in all its importance the happy thought of His Excellency the President and will receive with the deepest gratification the honor of the visit of his excellency the Secretary of State. I am sure that he will have an opportunity to notice how highly they regard the happy and cordial traditional amity which it has been and is the aim of Costa Rica to cultivate with the United States.

With many thanks [etc.]

Department of State,
Washington, February 24, 1912.

The visit of the Secretary of State to the Republics surrounding the Caribbean Sea has long been in the mind of the President and is now suddenly decided upon for the reason that he considers the present moment peculiarly opportune. The approaching completion of the Panama Canal will, it is foreseen, initiate a new era in our intercourse with these Republics, one creating vast mutual interests and necessitating unity of effort if its benefits are to be fully secured. It is the earnest desire of this Government to establish closer political and commercial relations with them in anticipation of this new era, for the mutual furtherance of common ends and for the promotion of international peace and welfare. The visit is also for the purpose of carrying a message of good will, and is thus similar to that of Secretary Root in South America. It has no other objects than the above.

The foregoing is merely for your information and discreet personal use if this becomes locally the subject of conversation.

Sir: The Costa Rican Government has made the most elaborate preparations for the reception and entertainment of Mr. Knox. On the day preceding the Secretary's arrival a special train will be sent from San José conveying the reception committee appointed to receive him at Port Limón, where a breakfast will be served upon his landing. Upon the Secretary's arrival at San José he will be conducted to the residence of the Minister of Finance, one of the best appointed establishments in the city, which has been especially fitted out for this visit. The Minister of Foreign Relations has been furnished a list of Mr. Knox's party and special provision has been made for their accommodation.

No ceremony has been arranged for the evening of Mr. Knox's arrival as it is expected that he would prefer to rest after the fatigue of the journey; however, there will be a concert by the National Military Band in front of his residence during the evening. On Saturday morning: a visit to the National Hospital and National Asylum at 8.30; at 1 the Secretary will be received by the President; this will be followed at 3 by a reception given by the American colony; at 10 p. m. a grand ball given by the Government in its magnificent National Theater. Sunday, March 3: most of the morning is reserved for official visits; that afternoon I hope to have the pleasure of entertaining the Secretary and his party and principal Government officials at luncheon; at 8 the President will give a banquet of some two hundred covers in honor of Mr. Knox. For Monday, the day of Mr. Knox's departure, no ceremonies have been announced except that it is known that the Government has arranged for a special train to convey the Secretary's party to Puntarenas.

I shall meet Secretary Knox at Port Limón and shall do all that I can to help make his visit the success which it is expected that it will prove.

SAN JOSÉ, March 7, 1912.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that the Secretary of State and his party left San José for Puntarenas on the morning of March 4, where he embarked for Corinto on the U. S. S. Maryland. The trip to Puntarenas was made on a special train of private cars furnished by the Govenment. Mr. Knox was accompanied to Puntarenas by the Minister of Foreign Relations, other members of the Cabinet, various Government officials and myself.

The program for Mr. Knox's visit as prepared by the Government and which I submitted to the Department in my dispatch of February 26, was most successfully carried out in all of its details. * * * The most important function of the Secretary's visit was the banquet of one hundred and fifty covers given by President Jiménez in honor of Mr. Knox. This entertainment is said to have been the most elaborate ever given in this country. The foyer of the National Theater was especially fitted up, even so far as having special kitchens erected.

I have the honor to transmit herewith clippings giving the speech of President Jiménez together with the reply of Mr. Knox. * * * In extending to Mr. Knox the hospitality of this little country there was nothing that could be done that was neglected by its Government. He was most cordially received and the greatest good will was manifested on all occasions. The visit of the Secretary to Costa Rica can only be considered as a very great success. The expression of his views and the personal knowledge which the officials of this country have gained of his character and ability should create a better understanding and greatly strengthen the friendly relations which exist between the two countries.

[Inclosure 1.—Translation furnished by the Costa Rican Government.]

Toast of President of Costa Rica to the Secretary of State.

You are welcome to Costa Rica, distinguished representative of the United States of America, that friendly country that from remote times and in a variety of ways has exercised such a far-reaching influence over the destinies of this Republic.

A little time after the thirteen colonies, according to the terms of your Declaration of Independence, "assumed, among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitle them," the Spanish colonies, stirred up by the revolutionary fermentation of the north and encouraged by your noble example, repeated and made good your words, applying them to themselves, declaring that "they were, and of right ought to be, free and independent States"; and so it was, sir, that Costa Rica, without hatred toward and even without disaffection for Spain, and carried along by the wave of emancipation that swept over the New World from Massachusetts to the Argentine, abandoned her secular vassalage and assumed the sovereign arbitration of her destiny.

Nevertheless, it was very possible, above all in Central America, that our exercise of sovereignty would only have been a momentary eclipse of European domination of this or that State, if it had not been for the joint Anglo-American action and if the United States had not pronounced in 1823, through the mouth of President Monroe, its formidable veto. The American Eagle then spread its wings over this continent and in its flight joined that of the "nopal" and the condors of the south. And from that epoch the schemes of conquest or reconquest of the ancient colonies were consigned to the dominions of things past and gone forever.

But there is another benefit that we owe to your country, the greatest of all, without which all others would be mere dross: We have cast our institutions in the moulding-sand of yours. In our first attempts in the exercise of self-government—the only kind that deserves the decorous respect of men—we learned to spell in your famous document of Declaration of Independence that "all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness"; and consistent with these fundamental principles, as incontrovertible now at the beginning of the twentieth century as they were at the end of the eighteenth, we regulated our political system, and within that system the smallest Republic of this hemisphere lives happily, "without envying others or being envied by them," in the same manner as your wonderful country, enjoying all the privileges of that same system, also lives felicitously, a palpable demonstration that self-government, with powers distributed and limited, with liberty of speech and a free press, of effective and extensive individual rights, a government that derives its just powers from the consent of the governed, is beneficent everywhere—at least in America—with that same universality of the mathematical laws that are equally appropriate for fixing the course of the planets as they are for arranging the most humble transactions of men.

I hope, sir, that the personal knowledge of our institutions and customs may excite in you a feeling of true pride and pleasure on seeing many of the seeds of good government bearing fruit in this little corner of America, snatched from your fields of liberty by the winds that carry civilization from country to country, and dropped by them here and there in all parts of the world.

There will be perpetual peace between the United States and the Republic of Costa Rica! These were the prophetic words of Daniel Webster, stamped on the treaty of 1851, which bears his signature. Consecrated by the lapse of time the things that have happened since then have confirmed this prophesy. Our mutual relations of countrymen with countrymen have grown in a constant manner. We sell in the markets of the United States 60 per cent of our exportations, and in exchange we buy in them 60 per cent of the articles that Costa Rica imports. This present condition of reciprocity is an excellent sign that prognosticates the firmness of our future relations. In negotiating, we enter into mutual relations with others, and to have amicable intercourse with others is to be known, to be appreciated, and to consolidate friendships. Attracted by the fertility of our soils and the riches of our mines, and, I presume, attracted also by our peacefulness and by the respect we show to strangers, their properties and creeds, you will find here a great number of your fellow countrymen managing large capitals of their own or of persons who reside in the United States. Far from frowning upon their good luck, we are pleased to see it; and as their gains are not derived through legislative favors, their prosperity does not diminish, but, on the contrary, helps to augment vigorously the prosperity of the nation.

Lastly, Mr. Secretary, it is not possible to pass over in silence that share which, through our initiative and confident acts, your country has taken in the limitation of the territory of this Republic. An American hand, the just hand of Mr. Cleveland, of blessed memory, marked our boundaries on the north; and another American hand, the hand of Mr. White, in which hangs, happily for you and also for us, the scales of justice, will trace our southern frontier. In the arrangement that Costa Rica and Panama made to this effect, you put, out of consideration to both parties, the valuable contingent of your skill, your benevolence and friendly interest, and I am delighted to be able to take advantage of this occasion to express to you by word of mouth the profound gratitude that from that time we Costa Ricans owe to you, a gratitude that expands, now that we find ourselves honored with your visit. And I am confident that this advent of yours will leave in us a wake of fellow feeling, not like that made by the furrow that the ship forms in the waters, to be destroyed by them immediately afterwards, but a wake as wide and luminous as it is permanent.

Based in these antecedents is inspired the cordiality with which I drink your health, Mr. Secretary, and also that of President Taft, and in the same way the health of the people of the United States; and as that great country does not now see in any quarter a cloud that may darken the splendor of its power, I hope that it may never see the refulgent sun of justice eclipsed on its horizons, so that its greatness and moderation, without losing their force for a moment, may continue shining over the world until the end of time.

To your health, Mr. Secretary.

Reply of Mr. Knox.

Mr. President, Ladies, and Gentemen: It is indeed a pleasure for me, Mr. President, to acknowledge how deeply I appreciate the generous sentiment you have proposed and the honor you do me, and through me the American people, by showering upon me your bounteous and cordial hospitality, thereby evincing your sympathetic response to the spirit which has inspired my mission to you. I know that I am acknowledging no feigned friendship or simulated courtesy, but that the great heart of Costa Rica has responded to the heart of her most northern sister republic. The similarity of our political organizations, our geographical proximity, the tendency of our commercial and industrial interests and policies, and our traditional and long-continued relations of friendship and good will inspired in the President of the United States the sincere desire that our sympathies, cooperation, and good understanding should increase, and for that reason he directed me to visit the Republic of Costa Rica and our other sister republics in the region of the Caribbean Sea, in order that I might carry to them a message of good will from the people and Government of the United States, and, further, that I might make that personal acquaintance with your public men and hospitable peoples to the end that such direct personal knowledge and understanding and appreciation might result in mutual advantage and cooperation for the advancement of our common interests.

It was with a feeling of genuine wonder and admiration that I arrived at your capital city after the marvelous ride from the coast, along the wonderful Revantazon, following its tortuous and difficult windings through the most beautiful tropical foliage until, arriving at the highlands, the verdure of the Temperate Zone at once met the eye. The ability to make this journey in so much comfort was, Mr. President, a suggestion of what the Costa Ricans have accomplished along other lines, and fully prepared me for the abundant evidences of the industry, thrift, tenacity, and culture of your people which I met at every hand.

It is with a feeling of gratified expectancy that one finds at every turn expressions of the traditional love of your people for education, not only in its practical forms, but for the higher arts, notably architecture and music, and to see in the happy and radiant faces of the children the reflection of the beauty of their mothers and sturdy qualities of their fathers.

It is given to few countries to make the just boast that within her borders the school-teachers outnumber the soldiers and that resting upon her bosom in the very center of America is the first perfect type of an international court of arbitral justice.

The attitude of the Government of the United States, toward the peaceful settlement of international disputes, of which this court forms a model, has been consistently maintained since the foundation of our Government, as is evidenced by the Treaty of Ghent. The attitude of the Republic of Costa Rica has likewise been consistent and is amply evidenced by the course adopted for the settlement of the century-old boundary dispute with Panama. I repeat, Mr. President, that the people of Costa Rica may justly felicitate themselves that in their very midst is the home of the Central American Court of Justice, the one tribunal before which one nation may bring another—yes, before which an individual may bring a nation—to determine before the bar of impartial justice the differences that exist between them. My Government and, I am sure, the Government of Mexico feel proud of the part played by them in the Central American Peace Conference, convoked under their auspices, out of which grew this international forum, which is the prototype of the court it has long been the desire of the United States to see established by the nations of the earth. In this connection, Mr. President, let me express the feeling of profound satisfaction that the people and Government of the United States entertain, not only because of the rapidly increasing prosperity of Costa Rica, but because of her love for peace, because of the respect she inspires in the family of nations, because she has laid the foundations of perpetual freedom upon the eternal rock of justice and occupies an exceptional and enviable position among the American republics and to the general distribution of property among her people, and because of the constantly increasing intimacy and friendliness between her people and our own.

It is but a short time, Mr. President, until at Panama a new highway of commerce will be opened to the world. That event, so conspicuous and significant, will remove the countries of the Caribbean Sea from their comparative isolation and place them upon the greatest highway on the globe, a highway from the northern to the southern, from the western to the eastern world. The republics of this hemisphere will be thrown into a new day and a new condition. It would be folly to enter that new day without a proper conception of its opportunities and possibilities for our common good. We should go into the new epoch as befits it, with new aspirations and enthusiasms and with greater promise. The casual relations which once marked our intercourse are now happily not casual, but they must be closer and more friendly still—so close, indeed, that as we labor to better human conditions this common end will be a bond of trust and hope.

I bear you, then, not only a message of good will, but one bespeaking a mutual understanding and union in aspiration and effort toward furthering the progress of the Western World through deeds of reciprocal helpfulness.

The free and equal republics which have established themselves upon this hemisphere have a singular harmony of destiny, and that is to bring their common form of government to the highest point of efficiency for the maintenance of popular rights. The greatest strength of these republics, whose heritage is so wonderful, lies in unity of aim and effort.

While we will all be more or less, in the future as in the past, engrossed in questions affecting our internal development and our own acute problems, it is wise to seize every opportunity to impress upon the world and upon ourselves that ours is a Pan-American union of lofty Pan-American public opinion, doing justice and exacting justice, disclaiming ignoble suspicion, and putting to scorn international acts of unworthiness when, unhappily, they may be found among us.

Ladies and gentlemen, I propose the health, the happiness, and the prosperity of the President, and people of Costa Rica.

Great and Good Friend: The People and Government of Costa Rica have been honored by the official visit of that distinguished diplomat the Honorable Philander C. Knox, your Secretary of State, who during his brief stay in this country made evident the great and noble endeavor of the American Government in behalf of the progress and welfare of the Republics of this continent on the basis of fraternal union for their common destiny, with no other limits than those of their own sovereignty and independence. I have therefore found it appropriate, in view of so excellent a motive, to accredit as Special Envoy to Your Excellency don Joaquin Bernardo Calvo, the distinguished gentleman who is now the Minister Plenipotentiary of Costa Rica at Washington, with the charge to present to Your Excellency my fervent wishes for the happy outcome of that generous labor for American fraternity and for the growing prosperity of the Great Republic, admirable not only for its wonderful progress but even more for its wise institutions. In this sense I beg Your Excellency to receive unreservedly what Mr. Calvo will say to you, especially when he renews the expression of my lively desire for the personal happiness of Your Excellency.

I am, great and good friend, with high esteem,

GREAT AND GOOD FRIEND: I have received from the hands of Señor Don Joaquin Bernardo Calvo Your Excellency's letter of May 20 last, in which you gave expression to the pleasure which the people of Costa Rica felt at the recent visit to your capital of Philander C. Knox, Secretary of State of the United States of America.

I cordially reciprocate the sentiments of friendship and good will which you in the name of the people of Costa Rica conveyed to me, and I assure you that the Government and people of the United States appreciate the friendly spirit shown towards the United States by the kindly and cordial manner in which Mr. Knox's visit was received.

SIR: I have the honor to report that during the past month various associations of Cuban veterans of the wars for independence have been carrying on a systematic campaign to create popular feeling against the "guerrilleros"—Cubans who bore arms for the Spanish cause—who are now in public office, and to force the national and local authorities to remove them from the public service. The veterans themselves disclaim any desire on their part to monopolize the public offices.

On the 21st ultimo, after a largely attended meeting at the National Theater, a committee of veterans headed by General Loynaz del Castillo and others called upon President Gómez at the Palace to inform him regarding a resolution which had been adopted at that meeting demanding the dismissal from public office of all "guerrilleros" before the 27th of this month. In a fiery speech General Loynaz del Castillo informed the President that if their demands were not complied with "the veterans would know their duty." The President replied in a few dignified but emphatic words to the effect that while in thorough sympathy with his fellow-veterans his duty under the Constitution was to Cuba as a whole and that he was not to be intimidated by threats of any sort.

A demand has also been made upon practically all provincial governors and alcaldes throughout the island for the dismissal of "guerrilleros" in provincial and municipal employ. The invariable answer has been that the employees against whom this demand is directed are protected by the provisions of the civil service law. In view of this obstacle arrangements have now been made to introduce in Congress a bill providing that any person who has borne arms against the Cuban cause should be ineligible for office under the civil service.

The agitation has recently become so acute as to cause general apprehension. The fears of the Government that serious trouble might result from this agitation induced Señor Sanguily, Secretary of State, to visit, last night, the headquarters in this city of the Veterans' Association.[1] He called upon the large gathering of veterans, who awaited him, to make some reassuring declaration which would tend to allay public apprehension; harangued them at some length on the necessity for orderly procedure, and painted in glowing colors the horrors of possible civil war or another American intervention. The veterans present were not responsive to this appeal; and, after some three hours of futile discussion, Señor Sanguily left the meeting without having achieved his object.

The Government is clearly alarmed by the threats of the veterans to take the law into their own hands unless all the "guerrilleros" are dismissed from office by November 27, and the President's acceptance of the arbitration idea is a complete retreat from his first stand of refusing to consider the demands of the veterans.

Sir: Referring to my dispatch No. 1198 of the 16th instant [etc.] I have the honor to report that an agreement reached yesterday by the commission has been approved by the President and by the Council of Veterans. * * * Briefly stated, the agreement provides for the immediate removal from office of all "guerrilleros" who are not protected by the civil service law. * * * Those employees who are protected by the civil service law are to be suspended from their posts until a law can be passed which will effectually bar them from the public service. * * * In return for these concessions the veterans pledge themselves to support the Government in case any disorders arise as a result of carrying out the agreement.

The Government has thus clearly complied with all the original demands of the veterans and completely receded from the resolute stand taken when the question arose. * * *

Sir: With reference to my No. 1207 of November 21 [etc.] I have the honor to report that despite the apparently satisfactory settlement reached by the veterans and the Government a disposition not to accept that settlement seems now to prevail in the councils of the veterans, and the situation has again become quite as serious as ever, if not indeed more so. * * * While the Government agreed to remove from office, or allow to resign, employees and officials of "objectionable war antecedents" who hold office under Executive appointment and whose tenure is not subject to provisions of the civil service law concerning the classified service (a relatively unimportant number) the status of those affected by these provisions was tacitly recognized as not subject to administrative action without an appropriate amendment of the civil service law. A day or two before that a bill had been introduced in the Senate—which was subsequently passed by that body—to amend that law in the sense of excluding from public employment men of the character whom the veterans are attacking. * * * This bill has however met unexpected opposition in the House and the present outlook is that it will not pass. * * * This afternoon Mr. Sanguily, Cuban Secretary of State, told me in the course of a conversation at the Department of State that in the opinion of all the members of the Government the situation was now more critical than ever before. * * *

The veterans now demand dismissal of "traitors" from judiciary and elective offices as well as from the civil service. Bill to suspend the civil service law[1] has passed the House and will probably pass the Senate to-day.

The Speaker, Ferrara, in answering the argument that the bill was contrary to the Platt amendment, claimed that as Cuba had adopted the amendment under coercion it was not binding upon her.

SIR: * * * I have to report that the suspension act, as amended by the Senate and sanctioned by the President, reads as follows:

> All laws which guarantee the irremovability of public officials and employees are hereby suspended, in such part as concerns said irremovability, for a period of eighteen months.

The original measure contemplated the suspension of the civil service law alone, thus affecting only civilian employees of the classified service; but as finally enacted it affects the judiciary and military as well, whose tenure is protected by other laws containing provisions of a character similar to those of the civil service law.

The President issued at the same time a decree prescribing regulations purporting to construe the spirit of the law as enacted and facilitate its execution. * * * To pass upon charges brought against such officeholders provision is made for the appointment of a body to which the press promptly gave the picturesque name of "decapitating commission", composed of four members—one to be designated by the Liberal party, one by the Conservative party, and two by the veterans—and a chairman to be chosen by the President of the Republic. This commission is charged with the further duty of appointing to every vacancy arising from the removal of an officeholder accused before its bar a person belonging to the same political party as the one discharged.

Although it was the obvious purpose of the President in issuing this decree to provide a workable means for carrying out in good faith the terms of the agreement between the Government and the veterans * * * the veterans have flatly refused to have anything to do with the designation of the two members of the commission allotted to their organization. They contend that the voices of their representatives would be smothered by the two political members and the partisan chairman appointed by the President. * * * To sum up their attitude, they make no effort to conceal their distrust of the President, although he has lately shown a disposition to please them in every way possible. * * *

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Habana, January 11, 1912.

The House yesterday passed a resolution accusing officers of the Army and of the Rural Guard of pernicious political activity and participation in seditious manifestations; calling for a statement from the President of steps against them, and information as to whether he had dealt with Monteagudo[1] for violations of military law. The newspapers regard the situation as critical.

JANUARY 15, 1912.

The President on the 15th issued a decree forbidding officers of Army and Rural Guard from participation in politics; this was already forbidden by military law. The decree also forbids their attendance at meetings of the Veterans' Association, whose leaders declare that unless the decree is revoked they will go to any lengths to obtain their end. I earnestly suggest advisability of a decided stand at this time on our part. Should our intention to support the President be made known it would probably have a discouraging effect on those wishing to provoke intervention. Threatening speeches made by prominent veterans. Situation now more alarming than at any previous time.

> The situation in Cuba as now reported causes grave concern to the Government of the United States.

[1] The general commanding the Army; he had issued a general order forbidding soldiers to take part in the veterans' movement to form a political party.

That the laws intended to safeguard free republican government shall be enforced and not defied is obviously essential to the maintenance of the law, order and stability indispensable to the status of the Republic of Cuba, in the continued well-being of which the United States has always evinced and can not escape a vital interest.

The President of the United States therefore looks to the President and Government of Cuba to prevent a threatened situation which would compel the Government of the United States, much against its desires, to consider what measures it must take in pursuance of the obligation of its relations to Cuba.

Those of the opposition who want trouble are saying that the second paragraph of the note I handed to the President yesterday means a demand by the United States for a complete return to the status quo ante by immediate repeal of the new civil service law amendments. The President answers that it means merely that he shall not revoke the decree forbidding officers attending Veteran meetings, and court martial for the disobedient, with no further unlawful concessions to the Veterans. He earnestly requests that Department let him know if he is correct.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Habana, January 20, 1912.

There was a meeting at the Palace tonight at which an agreement was signed the terms of which will be made public tomorrow after obtaining a few additional signatures. The agreement reads as follows in translation:

1. The Association of Veterans of the Independence will confine its activities to the ends and limits set forth in its by-laws.

2. The National Council of the Veterans of the Independence will choose between the cessation of the functions of the Revisory Commission, with consequent transfer of those functions to the Executive departments, and a continuance of the Commission.

3. Whichever of the alternatives stated in 2 is decided upon, a term shall be set for terminating said functions with the settlement of the cases in hand, which term will expire February 24, 1912.

4. At the expiration of this term the suspension of the civil service law shall cease by virtue of a resolution of Congress upon request of the President.

5. The leaders of the Cuban revolution this day assembled in the Palace and the members of the local organizations of the Veterans of the Independence pledge themselves to be the guardians of the moral and material peace by assisting the national Government in maintaining it.

6. The Government of the Republic shall publish this agreement so that all may know that those who sacrificed themselves to Independence are the most stable support of the Republic, and that law and order and the stability of our institutions are henceforth guaranteed and peace assured; wherefore there will be no justification for any intervention in our internal affairs by the United States, to whose honor and loyalty as well as to its own patriotism the Cuban people trusts its peaceful développment.

It will be noticed that the agreement, in providing for the repeal of the suspension of the civil service law, goes farther than was demanded by the Department's note. The Sub-Secretary of State assures me that complete accord prevailed at the conference and that the terms of the agreement would undoubtedly be complied with.

Sir: I have the honor to invite the Department's attention to Mr. Jackson's despatch No. 672 of March 10,[1] the Department's instruction No. 263 of March 20, 1911,[1] and prior correspondence relative to the "Independent Party of Color" (Partido Independiente de Color) of Cuba. It was announced at that time that the party intended to send a delegation to Washington for a presentation of grievances.

The leader of that party, Evaristo Estenoz, called at the Legation two days ago and stated that the party had decided to send to Washington "as soon as the present cold weather in the north should let up a little" a delegation of six, one from each province. He said that the principal grievance which among others it is intended to bring before the President of the United States is that, preceding the elections held in the fall of 1908 under the Provisional Government, their party was duly recognized and given standing as a political party by Governor Magoon in a formal decree; that, in contravention of the proclamation which made all acts of the Provisional Government binding upon the Republic of Cuba, the Gómez administration through the bipartisan electoral boards has refused to recognize the standing which had been accorded them by the Provisional Government; and that in the approaching electoral period they have reason to believe that they will be similarly debarred from placing a ticket in the field. Estenoz also said that when he and the other leaders of the party were arrested in April and May, 1910, on the charge of "inciting rebellion" the Government made known to them indirectly that their arrest and incarceration for several months had been in obedience to "indications from Washington."

SIR: I have the honor to report that a committee headed by Evaristo Estenoz, representing the Independent Colored Party, called at the Palace on Friday to induce the President to agree to use his influence for the repeal of the Morúa law, which forbids the organization of negroes into a political party.

President Gómez, according to a statement issued at the Palace, informed the committee that he was disposed to aid them provided they dropped the word "Colored" from their party name. They replied that they were not prepared to accept the condition as it would prevent them from realizing "the noble ideals at which they aimed." The President thereupon informed the committee that not only would he not aid them in obtaining the repeal of the Morúa law but would put every possible obstacle in their way. The spokesman of the committee replied that notwithstanding the opposition of the President "they would allow nothing to stand in the way of carrying out their intentions."

Evaristo Estenoz yesterday made a statement to the press in which he declared that the Colored party was all-powerful and that no political party could hope to win at the polls without its help. He also stated that a committee of his organization "authorized by Minister Beaupré" would soon go to Washington to explain the situation to the American Government. I need hardly state that I have had no conversation with Estenoz and know nothing of his plans further than already reported in my No. 71 of the 26th ultimo.

This continual agitation of the "Independientes de Color" carries with it an element of considerable danger to public order, for while only a small proportion of the negro population is affected by the Estenoz movement his followers are sufficiently numerous to form the nucleus of a revolt that in any case, even were the Government able to cope with it, would be extremely harmful, and if ably led and financed by other discontented elements might result in a repetition of the events of 1906.

You will explain to the Cuban Government that the following has to-day been given to the press in the hope of somewhat steadying the situation and thereby assisting the Government of Cuba to put down the present uprising:

> Information reaching the Department of State has indicated a serious state of disturbance in the easternmost Province of the Island of Cuba, especially in the neighborhood of Guantánamo and Santiago, where there are important American interests, which have already made representations to the Department to the effect that their property is being seized and the lives of their employees endangered, and have requested that the Government of the United States procure for them adequate protection. The Department of State has accordingly requested the Navy Department to send vessels and marines to the United States naval station at Guantánamo, which is near the center of the disturbance. The Prairie is to take 500 marines and join the Paducah and Nashville there. These steps have, of course, been taken simply in order that, in case of necessity, protection may be accorded to the Americans in that vicinity.

Should situation require, additional vessels will also be ordered to Guantánamo.

No. 268.] AMERICAN LEGATION,
Habana, May 24, 1912.

SIR: Referring to previous correspondence in regard to the present negro uprising, and as a matter of record, I have the honor to report as follows: * * *

From the beginning of the movement I have been in close touch with the representatives of American companies in the disaffected districts and have, whenever there was any cause for alarm, applied to the Cuban Government for military protection. On the 22d instant, on learning of the fears of various American companies in Oriente Province, I deemed it advisable to call upon Mr. Sanguily [Secretary of State] to discuss the entire situation in an informal and friendly way. While applying for protection for the Juraguá Iron Co. I told Mr. Sanguily that my representations on behalf of this and other American companies should not be considered in the nature of complaints; that I felt and was confident that he also realized that the interests of the American and Cuban Governments were identical in the present crisis; and that the American Government was just as anxious as that of Cuba to avoid the necessity for an intervention. I went on to point out that the greatest danger now lay in possible failure to afford adequate protection to foreign lives and property, which might readily cause pressure to be brought upon the American Government by other foreign Governments to bring about an intervention for the benefit of their national interests. I went on to say that, although there had as yet been apparently no failure on the part of the Cuban Government to discharge its obligations in this regard, I deemed it the part of true friendship to point out this possible danger to the maintenance of Cuban independence and urged him to exercise every effort to avoid complications.

Mr. Sanguily expressed himself as thoroughly understanding and sincerely appreciating the force and spirit of my remarks, with which he said that he fully agreed. He informed me that he would go immediately to the Palace and make clear to the President the vital necessity for exercising every possible effort to protect foreign property, urging him personally to issue instructions in harmony with the ideas expressed by me. While I had no instructions from the Department authorizing me to make such representations, I felt confident that I was stating elementary truths which were in complete harmony with the desires of the Department.

As a result of Mr. Sanguily's interview with the President a body of 180 troops was despatched to the various properties of the Juraguá Iron Co., and the officer in command in Oriente Province was directed to despatch small forces to the various foreign properties throughout the district and at the same time to arm their employees so that they might defend themselves if attacked. I am informed that these instructions were promptly obeyed.

The sending of the Prairie, Paducah, and Nashville to Guantánamo has made a very good impression here, and both the President and Mr. Sanguily express themselves as gratified by our action in the matter. It is difficult to say, however, what moral effect the presence of these ships will have upon the irresponsible negroes, who are unlikely to be greatly concerned over the possible consequence of their actions. * * * Aside from the fact that we have been unable to form an accurate estimate of the strength and extent of this movement, its most remarkable characteristic is that there is no definite knowledge of its real purpose. There are various theories advanced to account for the movement. The most prevalent belief is that the movement was initiated for the express purpose of provoking an American intervention for the benefit of various interests which believed that they would profit by a change of government. A movement aimed at provoking intervention would naturally devote its first efforts to the destruction of foreign property, but, as I have already reported, very little has been done in this direction. * * *

In summing up the situation I can not go further than to say that it would seem evident that the present movement is organized and directed by some unknown interest, it being highly improbable that the negroes at the head of the Independent Colored Party would be capable of engineering a movement on this scale. The negroes now in revolt are of a very ignorant class, and, although it may or may not be the intention of their leaders to attack foreigners and destroy their property, it would at any time require only a well-conceived appeal to their prejudices or cupidity to precipitate serious disorders. Although it is still impossible to make any predictions as to the future, I feel that our Government has acted most wisely in sending forces to Guantánamo in anticipation of possible eventualities.

The Secretary of State of this Government informs me that he has received a note from the Minister of the United States in this city advising him that the Government over which you preside has ordered a gunboat sent to Nipe Bay and the concentration of a naval force at Key West in anticipation of possible eventualities, so that in the event of failure or neglect of the Government to protect the life or property of American citizens forces of the United States will land on Cuban territory for their necessary protection, adding that these measures must not be considered specifically as an intervention; but as in reality they do not seem anything else, and the natural development of events, once these foreign troops landed, would accentuate that character, it is my duty to inform you that a determination of this serious character alarms and injures the feelings of a people loving and jealous of their independence, above all when such measures were not even decided upon by previous agreement between both Governments, which places the Government of Cuba in a humiliating inferiority through a neglect of its national rights, causing it discredit within and without the country. Nor is the action of the American Government justified, because neither it nor any other Government in analogous circumstances would have displayed, as has that of Cuba, such an extraordinary activity in mobilization and operations. In only four days it has accumulated more than 3,000 men of the regular forces against the rebels, sending them from the west to the east by land and sea, and in this short time it has cleared the whole island, with the exception of a limited eastern territory, of armed parties to such an extent that there does not exist a single one which will resist, neither in Pinar del Rio nor in this Province nor in Santa Clara, where, since the 19th instant, some of them appeared, who were punished and disbanded. Furthermore this Government has awakened public spirit, has distributed for the defense of farms and villages more than 9,000 rifles, with cartridges, and preparation is being made to flood with fighting patriots and with soldiers the relatively narrow zone to which the rebels have been reduced, the fact being really astonishing that up to the present no sugar mill has suspended work. I have recourse to you, therefore, as the loyal friend of Cuba and respectful of her rights, in order that with calm judgment and highmindedness you may appreciate the facts set forth, sure that you will reach the conviction that this Government is quite capable and sufficiently supported by the valor and patriotism of its people to annihilate a few rebels without a cause and without a flag. If you properly appreciate these facts you will without doubt hasten to recognize that it is not a friendly Government which, perchance by way of an unjustified precaution, would precipitately contribute to the discredit of a Government and a people like those of Cuba, placed, it is true, in circumstances difficult although not superior to the measure of its patriotism and its spirit.

I am sincerely gratified to learn of your Government's energetic measures to put down the disturbances and to know that you are confident of being successful. As was fully explained to the Cuban Chargé d'Affaires here, this Government's motive in sending ships to Key West, just as in sending the Prairie to the Guantánamo naval station, was merely to be able to act promptly in case it should unfortunately become necessary to protect American life and property by rendering moral support or assistance to the Cuban Government. As was made quite clear at the time, these ordinary measures of precaution were entirely disassociated from any question of intervention.

This Government has taken pains to make absolutely clear its position and the absolutely evident distinction, on the one hand, between "intervention" and political acts under our treaty rights which are not now contemplated, and, on the other hand, preparedness to land marines and the landing of marines if necessary in sporadic cases to prevent or suppress jeopardy to American life or property. Part of President Gómez's last message evidently seeks to read a singular misinterpretation into this Government's clear expressions. This Government does not undertake first to consult the Cuban Government if a crisis arises requiring a temporary landing somewhere to protect life and property on the broad principles of international practice. The president of Guantánamo & Western Railway, Mr. Lewis, who arrived this morning from Oriente, informs me that when the store of his sugar estate at Marcos Sanchez was robbed two days ago, leader of band, who could not read or write, gave what he evidently thought was a receipt for the goods taken, but it was really an original order from Estenoz to his lieutenants, and in translation reads about as follows:

To the lieutenant [who] receives this and to all my other loyal lieutenants:

If by June 1 the Morúa law is not repealed you will at once start to destroy all railroad bridges, telegraph and telephone lines, and other property of American ownership, and if this does not accomplish our purpose with the present

Government, within 15 days thereafter you will start killing men not of our color irrespective of nationality.

Lewis has original document in his safe. If it is authentic and not a spurious document deliberately allowed to fall into foreign hands for the purpose of inspiring alarm, it would appear to be the most significant indication we have had as to intentions of leaders and reasons for lack of violence to date.

Lewis also showed me letter from Estenoz to him demanding 25 rifles and 5,000 rounds of ammunition, under penalty of destruction of his property.

Mr. Gibson delivered my note regarding protection of Spanish-American Iron Co., and under my general instructions to make strong supporting representations, he had a very frank but friendly talk with Patterson.[1] I trust this may stimulate the authorities to proper action. Gibson pointed out that failure to fulfill repeated verbal and written assurances of protection was the one thing destructive of our confidence in ability and willingness of Cuban Government to fulfill its obligations; that repeated failure would surely cause our Government seriously to consider the need for its giving protection to American interests; that if this was to be avoided Cuban Government must immediately take energetic steps. Patterson replied that it was local military authorities who were at fault, but Gibson rejoined that admission of inability of Cuban Government to secure obedience of its military officers was very serious, and that our Government looks alone to the Central Government for the protection of American interests. Patterson cordially promised to use best efforts to bring military authorities to proper realization of responsibilities.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Habana, June 1, 1912—12 midnight.

Persistent and consistent rumors of concerted negro uprising in Habana for the past several days. Although disclaiming knowledge of plan, President's private secretary is organizing local civil guard for the protection of Habana and Vedado. This afternoon I asked President Gómez whether he had knowledge of any such plan. He said that he was sure there was nothing of the sort intended; that he has ample forces to put down any movement. Military attaché states that there are at most 700 soldiers in the neighborhood. Chief of police has recently complained to member of Legation that he has only a little more than 800 men, not enough to guard city in normal peaceful conditions. The foregoing may be sufficient for the Department to determine whether it is advisable to send to Habana immediately one of the ships now at Key West with a force of marines.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Habana, June 4, 1912.

SIR: It may be said with certainty that the Cuban Government is systematically endeavoring to create an unduly optimistic view of the present situation. Whites throughout the Republic continue to grow more apprehensive. For the past four or five days considerable apprehension has existed in and around Habana. The Government itself, although strenuously denying that there was any ground for fear, has taken the most exaggerated precautions to prevent an uprising. The contradiction between the Government's action and its denials of apprehension have created a decided feeling of apprehension in the city, probably much greater than if the Government had frankly made public its reasons for fearing an outbreak.

It may not be amiss at this time to call the Department's attention to my telegram of May 29, 7 p. m., wherein I quoted what purported to be instructions from Estenoz to his lieutenants. It will be noted that the active destruction of foreign property began on the night of May 31, about the time indicated in this instruction, whereas the negro leaders would have found it far less difficult to carry out their purposes in this regard during the first days of the rebellion and before the arrival of the Government forces.

Sanguily said to-day that Cuban Government thoroughly understood that American Government reserved right to land forces in its judgment; that all possible facilities in the way of supplies, transportation and cooperation will be given our troops; that his Government welcomed the sending of marines to Guantánamo and that the Cuban troops thus relieved from guard duty would be immediately put in the field. He asked me to transmit the President's request that the officers in command of our forces be instructed to deliver to the municipal authority any rebels who surrender or are captured by them. This is for the purpose of combating belief among the negroes that by surrendering to Americans they will become prisoners of war and will be released upon the termination of hostilities. Sanguily said that although the Cuban Government thoroughly understood our attitude and the more intelligent Cubans approved the landing of troops, there is still a considerable element of suspicion among ignorant classes. This may complicate situation unless successfully combated by some such means as a definite agreement for harmonious action of Cuban and American forces, which would show the negroes that we are determined to lend our support to the constituted Government. In conclusion Mr. Sanguily stated that although he had no authority from the President to ask for the sending of more troops, he could state that it was the intention of the Cuban Government immediately to employ in active operations any troops relieved by the arrival of our forces.

The Cuban authorities having failed to take effective action for the protection of American life and property the commandant at Guantánamo naval station has been compelled to land four companies of marines. This action has been taken as a measure of protection only and not for the purpose of putting down the insurrection, which is clearly the duty of Cuba. Four large war vessels will forthwith be sent from Key West to Guantánamo. It is hoped these measures will at once awaken the Cuban Government to prompt and adequate discharge of its responsibilities, and you will vigorously impress upon the President of Cuba that a continued failure on the part of his Government adequately to protect life and property will inevitably compel this Government to intervene in Cuba under and in response to its treaty rights and obligations.

No. 287.]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Habana, June 6, 1912.

SIR: Referring to previous correspondence in regard to the present negro uprising in Cuba, I have the honor to submit the following observations for such consideration as the Department may deem appropriate:

While the situation is very serious and rapidly tending toward a condition which will render intervention inevitable, it seems to me that there is still an opportunity for the adoption of a policy or line of action which might result in a better state of affairs.

It has been my understanding that you earnestly desired to avoid another intervention in Cuba, and I have, therefore, labored constantly to that end since I have been here, under the conviction that intervention, occupation, or annexation would be contrary to our traditional policy and to your expressed wishes and, therefore, to be avoided by all reasonable and honorable means.

There is no doubt in my mind that the present uprising in Oriente is extremely serious, far more serious than the Cuban Government appears to realize or, at any rate, than it is prepared to admit. If the present tactics are continued there is every reason to believe that the uprising will not be put down for months, or even years, without material assistance or intervention by the American Government.

The greatest burden now resting on the Cuban Government is the protection of foreign property. In order to afford anything approaching the protection demanded by foreign interests here it would require forces greatly in excess of those now at the despatch of the Cuban Government at a time when that Government should devote to active operations every soldier it can command. With the best will in the world, the Cuban Government can offer only relative protection, but most of the foreign interests in Oriente quite fail to make any distinction between the interest of the Cuban Government in protecting their property in order to avoid the subsequent claims for damages and their own absolute right to demand and obtain complete security in spite of the troubled conditions now existing.

Although the Cuban Government had not requested the landing of marines for the purpose of affording protection to foreign property, the President expressed his gratification on learning of the fact that a force of marines was landed at Guantánamo yesterday, and sent me word that as rapidly as American forces arrived for the protection of different foreign properties the Cuban troops stationed there would be promptly withdrawn and devoted to active operation against the rebels.

Aside from the fact that assistance of this sort coming from us would tend to hasten the reestablishment of normal conditions in Cuba, it would seem evident that we will be obliged to land further forces in the very near future. My British and Brazilian colleagues have already expressed surprise that forces landed have been devoted entirely to the protection of American property, and the former stated to me last night that, unless American or Cuban protection was forthcoming for his nationals in the Guantánamo district by this morning, he intended to cable the Foreign Office in London to urge that representations be made in Washington with a view to having forces of American troops assigned to various British properties in the disaffected districts. I fear that this is merely the beginning of a general demand that American protection be afforded to foreign interests in Oriente. If, either through our own determination thus to aid the Cuban Government to suppress the uprising or through compliance with foreign demands for protection, we eventually release the Cuban forces from police duty so that their entire efforts can be devoted to the prosecution of a campaign against the rebels, it may be confidently said that the chances of a successful outcome will be greatly increased.

As the prosecution of an active campaign on any considerable scale will of course require a large financial outlay, it seems highly probable that the Government will soon be obliged to seek a foreign loan. Under the existing conditions it would seem improbable that any responsible banking house would be prepared to make such a loan without substantial guaranties, and would probably demand them from our Government.

It seems to me that the floating of a new loan would offer us an extremely good opportunity to be of real assistance to the Cuban people by putting our own conditions upon the granting of the loan in order to make sure of its honest application. It would seem that this might readily be made to entail some more or less active fiscal control, which would protect the Cuban treasury against the wholesale looting to which it has hitherto been subjected. As is of course well known, Cuba is naturally so rich a country that an honest administration of her finances would in a short time place the Government in a very stable and prosperous position, and would enable an honest administration to accomplish much for the country which would be impossible if it were to take over the machinery of government and the burden of debt and disorder which now exists.

In closing, I desire to impress upon the Department the fact that my observations in this regard are based upon a desire to offer some possibly helpful suggestions toward the attainment of what I understand to be the desires of the Department in carrying out its policies with regard to Cuba.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Habana, June 8, 1912.

MR. MINISTER: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your excellency's note No. 207,[1] of the 5th instant, inclosing copy of a note of the same date which you addressed to the President, quoting in part a cablegram which your excellency had received from your Government to the effect that the situation had compelled the commandant of the naval station at Guantánamo to land four companies of marines, and that this action had been taken solely as a measure of precaution and not for the purpose of putting down the rebellion. The cablegram in question also announced the sending of four warships from Key West to Guantánamo for a similar purpose should the situation require additional forces, and, in conclusion, expressed the hope that these measures would bring the Cuban Government to a realizing sense of the necessity of promptly and adequately attending to its duties and responsibilities.

Your excellency added that the Government of the United States desired to announce, through the authorized medium of your excellency, that it would, under certain conditions mentioned and in the event of the continuance of those conditions, be unavoidably compelled to intervene.

And although this announcement of a contingency which, as it is apparently desired to convey, may soon arise is predicated upon observations that are more or less debatable, since your excellency's Government must from the attitude assumed have felt justified. from its point of view, to make such observations, I shall not of course examine them closely, nor is it incumbent upon me or appropriate to discuss them: for in these times of trial for their country it is not meet for Cubans to place themselves in the light of thwarting the action of the American Government, more especially because they should not allow themselves for a single instant to doubt the good faith or intentions of the American Government concerning the stability of this Republic.

[1] Transmitting Department's instruction of June 5.

But permit me, Mr. Minister, in discharge of my conscience and in behalf of the Cuban Government, to be so honestly frank with you as to say that the intervention which has been initiated and is being prepared is in no sense justified.

Inasmuch as it is our affairs—matters of the utmost transcendence, that are really and essentially vital—that are at stake, it will not be denied that we have, at least conjointly with the right, the duty to judge the acts of others which so profoundly and absolutely concern us, which to such a degree affect our existence and our pride: for it is true beyond doubt that our Government has not failed in its earnest endeavor to combat the racial uprising and adequately to protect the lives and property of American citizens, since it is a notorious fact that no American property had been destroyed nor had the life of any American citizen been endangered prior to the landing of the American marines. In the short space of two weeks the Cuban Government has really performed wonders; indeed, not every government, even among the best, would, in view of the peculiar circumstances and the exceptional nature of the present conflict, have acted with equal diligence and such extraordinary success.

No one better than your excellency can bear witness to my assertions, acquainted as you are with the great difficulties with which the Cuban Government has had to contend, to the extent even of having had to suspend military operations, or modify the most carefully prepared plans, because of the pressure brought by foreign property owners, or their resident managers, who have contributed so greatly to inciting and keeping alive the alarm, especially abroad, with their clamors for protection for their industries, farms, or dwellings, while the natives, without legations to which to appeal, were left completely unprotected.

Your excellency knows that this is an island as narrow as it is mountainous: that the population is relatively sparse and distributed over vast solitudes despite the great progress of all kinds lately made; and that with the whites coexist an enormous mass of peoples of African extraction, many of them awakened to the highest ambitions and most unattainable desires (through the fault, be it said, of the governments which have ruled the country during the past quarter century, without exculpating any of them, though the sins of all arose from the noblest and most generous impulses) which has in the end broken out in an explosion of barbarism. So, too, has your excellency been able to see through the intentions of the insurrectionists as proclaimed by their leaders and published in the press, for the perverse authors of the uprising, alleging fantastic grievances, admit that they have the astounding intention of burning foreign property in order to force upon the United States the necessity for intervention in the absurd and grotesque hope that, as on a former occasion in dealing with the whites, the United States would enter into arrangements with them after first turning out the Government that opposed them.

Yet in but fifteen days this Government, despite so many setbacks, swept the western provinces clear of the stupid rebellion and has reduced it to the limited zone of Oriente Province, where, ceaselessly and tirelessly, it pursues the villainous bands into the very heart of the rough mountains in which they have taken refuge in order safely to plot the destruction of the property of whites or diabolical assaults upon the honor of white women.

In such circumstances the Cuban Government is of the belief that more could not be expected of it, and that more could not have been done by any government under the same conditions; and therefore so quickly and unjustly to declare the Government a "failure" in this sense is not only to commit a great injustice but to discredit it without purpose and without even advantage to anyone. Now that so many negroes have learnt a lesson, or have repented, it is not to be assumed that the uprising so resolutely prosecuted will extend to or break out in the western provinces, and, too, the assurance can be vouchsafed that in the affected zone, where the indefatigable and vigorous prosecution of our troops and of our enthusiastic volunteers have the movement cornered and almost in its last gasps, it will soon—as soon as is humanly possible, but, in any event, in a very short time—be broken up and overcome, without outside assistance and solely by the efforts of the Government and the patriotic and valorous cooperation of our people, because, in fine, the conscience and will of the nation have so resolved. For these legitimate reasons, I can really see no objection (but, in fact, positive advantage) to the United States Government—placing itself in our position and considering the efforts we have put forth, the sufficient means at our disposal, and the unanimity with which the country has responded to our call to crush, in one definite and supreme attack, the criminal uprising which is already beginning to show signs of death—deferring its preparations (if, indeed, it be true that such preparations are being made) for such time as may reasonably be considered necessary for Cuba to put the finishing touches to its work—the time that the American Government itself would need were it in our place—thus preventing the discredit of a friendly Government such as ours, in regard to which there are those who already look forward with indecent anxiety to its disacknowledgment by the Government which, on the contrary, should encourage and reinforce it with its sympathy and consideration.

Nevertheless, however the procedure of your excellency's Government may be regarded, and although the news of an impending intervention of a nature and extent at present unknown has created wide consternation, for my own part, as also for the part of my Government, Mr. Minister, after the protestations from Washington and the assurances which your excellency yourself has been good enough to give me in several interviews, we are of the number who in the present case attribute to the American Government the purpose of preparing an intervention in our internal affairs of a different character, more honorable to the people and Government of the United States, and at the same time more decorous and consoling for Cubans and the civilization which they represent, many of whom have memories of past interventions.

The rectitude of the intentions and the unwavering purpose of the United States to support and maintain through the vicissitudes of our national development the independence of the Island of Cuba having always in the end been plainly manifested, any possibility is conceivable to me in human affairs save that the friendly relations between the American Government and people and the Cuban Government and people (whose mutual affection and concord no circumstance should, for the honor of the United States and the happiness of this people, ever diminish and much less destroy) should not continue, if possible, more solid, more intimately sincere and cordial.

I avail myself, etc.,

With a letter from President Gómez accrediting him with a confidential mission, Mr. Ferrara called this morning and indicated that the reports to this Government as to the situation in Cuba had been very much exaggerated and that it was particularly important that the Cuban Government itself should put down the insurrection in order to discourage future insurrections based on a hope of provoking American intervention. No disapproval of protection of American interests by the marines now landed or such as might be landed was felt, he said; but it is hoped that they would not be called upon to suppress the insurrection, leaving that to the Cuban forces. He greatly desires that something friendly to the Cuban Government should be expressed by this Government. I told him that the United States hopes and believes the Cuban Government will, by prompt and effective measures, be able to suppress the insurrection, and that the sending of the vessels to Habana last night indicates no change in this Government's policy of nonintervention. The vessels were sent solely to provide some place and means of safety and protection for Americans and other foreigners and for such moral effect as they might have. The minister, Rivero, urges that the ships be withdrawn from Habana. What are your views concerning this request? Rivero asserts most positively that no one was killed in the troubles in Habana.

From the first it has been difficult accurately to estimate the situation because, above all, of complete failure of Government to be fair and frank with me. All statements made upon my own authority have been sent only after the most thorough verification and are entirely accurate. I believe that the consul at Santiago, our chief source of information in Oriente, is thoroughly reliable and conservative. The Government has never been frank, and quite recently it has clearly appeared to me that it considered it necessary to convince the American Government that the insurrection was crushed. in order to avoid intervention. For in spite of protestations of confidence in our intentions, the Cuban Government seems to believe intervention to be imminent. Rivero's statement as to disorders on Saturday night are quite in line with the policy of his Government in suppressing and distorting news regarding the true situation, which has added materially to the existing feeling of uncertainty and apprehension. As regards withdrawal of ships, I can only say that my telegram of June 9 was sent only after careful consideration. If the sending of the ships was warranted in the first instance I am convinced that there is now no reason for their withdrawal. To-day I gave Admiral Osterhaus the substance of my June 9, and such additional information as I had. He said that he thought the vessels should remain for a time for moral effect, even if not upon far more serious duty.

No. 291.] AMERICAN LEGATION,
Habana, June 11, 1912.

SIR: Referring to my telegram of June 9, and to subsequent correspondence in regard to the racial disorders in Habana, I have the honor to report as follows.

A little after 9 o'clock Saturday evening a number of negroes were attacked by crowds of whites armed with revolvers. At least one was killed in the center of town and two or three more in various parts of the city and suburbs, the disorders having spread with great rapidity. Large numbers of negroes were beaten and the receiving hospitals were kept busy until a late hour of the night. Although warning had been given the Government of these outbreaks, it had failed to take adequate precaution, and it was some time before sufficient forces were on the ground to clear Central Park and hold the largest crowds in check. On hearing of the trouble Mr. Gibson and Mr. Bell, the two secretaries of this legation, went to Central Park, where they met Colonel Aguirre, chief of police. At his invitation they remained with him in a café on the square, where he established himself to receive reports from his subordinates. He remained there until after 2 o'clock in the morning, receiving frequent verbal reports from his subordinates as to occurrences in various parts of the city, and it was from this source that I gained the information contained in my telegram of June 9.

It was fully expected that serious disorders would occur on Sunday evening. As it happened, however, torrential rains began on Sunday morning and have continued almost constantly. In spite of this the Government had large forces patrolling all the principal streets. It may be said without exaggeration that a large number of the various foreign colonies and a large number of Cubans were in a state of apprehension closely bordering upon panic. The amount of feeling aroused by the disorders of Saturday night and by the reports of outrages received from Oriente had also produced a very dangerous state of mind which entailed, and undoubtedly still entails, great potentialities of trouble. For these reasons and in view of the importance of the American colony in Habana and its suburbs, containing many American women, it seemed to me that a very heavy responsibility rested upon the American Government and upon me in the event of serious racial disorders.

Therefore, after much thought and careful consideration of the possible effects of the step, I decided that the only course open to me was to ask for the sending of a warship to Habana for moral effect and to calm the general feeling of apprehension. From what I am able to observe, since the arrival of the ships yesterday, the effect has been all that could be desired. A general feeling of relief is evident in the foreign colonies of Habana and apparently a large part of the Cuban population expresses decided satisfaction at our action in sending the ships here. Strange to say, none of the newspapers have expressed pronounced disapproval at the sending of the ships, and those Cubans who are not relieved by their arrival have apparently accepted it apathetically. The only expressions of apprehension or disapproval which I have heard emanate from the Cuban Government itself, which evidently entertains grave fears that the American Government is deliberately seeking pretext for an intervention.

In summing up, I beg to express my thorough conviction that the sending of the ships was fully warranted by the situation, that the effect of their visit has been salutary, and that their withdrawal at this time would be a serious mistake.

An order dated June 11, 1912, of which the following is a translation, has been issued and will be promulgated this afternoon:

> Insurgents in arms who will appear and submit to the lawful authority before 12 p. m. on June 22 will be exempted from punishment and immediately liberated, except the originators or leaders of the rebellion and those guilty of a second offense. The originators and leaders will be exempted from the penalty to which they are liable if they surrender within the same time limit, and will suffer the penalty immediately below, from the lowest to the medium degree. Those guilty of a second offense will be held under the surveillance of the authorities.

From the foregoing it would seem clear that either the Government's claim of having the rebels surrounded and at its mercy is without foundation or that the President intends to adopt no severe measures against the rebels in order for political purposes to avoid antagonizing them.

Washington, June 13, 1912.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: Availing myself of your kind condescension in offering me an opportunity to express what I think might be stated by your Minister in Cuba, with the object of giving our Government the prestige that in my humble opinion has been lessened in the eyes of its enemies by the interpretations given to the recent well meant acts of the Government of the United States, I would suggest that he say that the Government of the United States sees with satisfaction that the Government of Cuba proceeds with great activity in the repression of the movement that has been misnamed a revolution and which is localized in a section of the Oriental province, and also expects that its efforts soon will be crowned by such complete success as will reaffirm the Cuban Government on its own basis and show that even in a social crisis it can maintain its supreme authority.

That the Government of the United States, when it sent ships of war to Cuban waters and landed marines to guard the property of foreigners in Cuba against outrages that violate every right, had no intention of performing an act of interference in the internal affairs of the Cuban nation which are entrusted to the latter's Government, but on the contrary, as it would have acted in other countries, its desire has been to prevent dangers to the lives and property of foreigners, its action benefitting without any doubt the cause of the constituted order in Cuba.

It is also the firm intention of the Government of the United States to pay no heed to private interests that may have aspirations contrary to those of the majority of the Cuban people, whose only representative is the legally constituted Government.

Such declarations, made in Cuba by your representative, would calm the unrest of the people, whose greatest aspiration is the independence of the Republic, would give the Government that confidence and assurance that you and I believe to be so necessary in the present circumstances.

Habana, June 13, 1912.

Wholesale arrests of negroes in Habana and vicinity on charges of conspiracy continue. Although Government continues to maintain that the rest of the country is absolutely quiet, negroes are conspiring almost openly in various parts without interference from the authorities.

A story is being industriously circulated by the Department of the Interior to the effect that the President is planning to send General Wood or General Crowder to Cuba to look into the justice of the negroes' demands, and that if they so advise the American Government will insist that the negroes be given the upper hand in the Government. This ridiculous story is creating a surprising amount of consternation and resentment even among intelligent classes who would welcome intervention.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note, No. 27, of the 10th instant,[1] by which, in pursuance of the subject of your remarks to me on the 9th instant, you quote a telegram wherein the Cuban Government makes various statements regarding the present situation in Cuba and wherein, in conclusion, you request that the Government of the United States withdraw the warships now at Habana.

In reply I need only remark that the Government of the United States has every confidence in the reports of its representatives in Cuba, whose efficiency in this direction will naturally profit by the candor displayed by the Cuban officials with whom they deal, and that in view of the information before it the Government of the United States would not feel justified in changing at this time naval dispositions the true object of which is so well known to the Cuban Government.

Your telegram June 13. You may give publicity to the following statement:

> Under instructions from the Government of the United States, the Legation gives notice that no credence should be attached to reports as to the policy or action of the United States except only authentic official statements by the Department of State or by this Legation.
> On March 13 the President of the United States called special attention to the bad effect of unauthorized promulgation of false rumors. The occasion for now reverting to the subject is due to the story being circulated in Habana and elsewhere to the effect that the President is planning to send a representative to Cuba in connection with questions between the Cuban Government and the insurrectionists.
> Although the policy of the United States has, from the very first, been made absolutely clear, so industrious is the circulation of malicious and uninformed rumors that it may be worth while once again to state that only measures of precaution and of ordinary protection of American life and property have been taken: measures irrespective of the special relations of the United States and Cuba and unrelated to the possibility of intervention. These measures do not relieve Cuba of its obligation fully to protect foreign life and property, although they have been recognized as greatly strengthening the hand of the Cuban Government. Indeed, the spirit of these measures has been well called a "preventive policy"—a policy of giving Cuba every opportunity to vindicate its national position.

As was officially stated by the Secretary of State on June 10: "The United States is not contemplating intervention in Cuba, but hopes and believes the Cuban Government will, by prompt and active measures, be able to suppress the insurrection."

Have received telephonic message from President Gómez, who is in the country, and calls from Secretary of State and other officials, who express regret and make spontaneous promise of serious prosecution. AMERICAN LEGATION,
Habana, August 29, 1912.

SIR: Referring to my telegram of August 27 and to my subsequent telegraphic correspondence[1] in regard to the assault made upon me on the evening of the 27th instant, I have the honor to report as follows:

On leaving the Department of State on the 12th instant I was accosted by a number of Cuban reporters including one Enrique Maza, a reporter on the newspapers La Lucha and La Prensa of this city, who most insistently demanded that I inform him as to the subject of my conversation with the Cuban Secretary of State. I stated courteously but firmly I was not at liberty to discuss the matter and that they would have to secure any information they desired from Mr. Sanguily. This statement was accepted with perfectly good grace by all the reporters excepting Maza, who was very insistent and detained me for some minutes in conversation. Later in the day he called at the Legation stating that he had been sent by Mr. Sanguily, who was willing that I discuss with him the subject of our morning's conversation. Knowing Maza's character as I did, I was quite confident that Mr. Sanguily had not sent him to see me without advising me by telephone or otherwise. However, as Maza was in the employ of La Lucha, one of the editors of which had been extremely fair in his dealings with the Legation, I was most desirous not to give him offense in any way and explained to him repeatedly and with great patience that it was utterly out of the question for me to discuss official business of the Legation in the press; that there was nothing at all mysterious or ominous connected with my visits to Mr. Sanguily but that the Legation made a general practice of leaving the discussion of official matters to the Cuban Department of State. This conversation took place within the hearing of the policeman on guard at the Legation, who remarked upon my extreme patience in dealing with so insistent and impertinent a caller. Later in the day Maza again accosted me at the Department of State, and upon my third refusal to discuss matters with him, announced that he proposed to write an article for that evening's edition of La Prensa giving his imagination full sway. He did not overstate his intentions in the least as his article published in La Prensa contained a statement attributed to me in which I confirmed a number of statements which had been previously made to La Prensa to the effect that the American Government considered that President Gómez had brought Cuba to the brink of ruin, that we would not permit his reelection, and that I had contradicted statements made to the press by Mr. Sanguily. This statement was filled with such deliberate and vicious falsehoods that I felt obliged to inform La Prensa as to Maza's conduct and to state that he would not again be received in the Legation. This was evidently the reason for his attack upon me although he was careful to await a pretext which would be more likely to insure him popular sympathy.

[1] Not printed.

On Tuesday evening (the day upon which the Reilly and Donovan and Phillips claims were paid) I joined Mr. Bell[1] at the Hotel Miramar where we customarily dine. As I got out of my cab I noticed Maza standing on the far side of the large room through which one must pass to enter the garden restaurant. Mr. Bell was waiting for me at the door in company with a young Cuban official with whom we exchanged a few words. While we were speaking to the latter Maza crossed the room towards us and took his stand at one side of the door through which we had to pass in order to enter the garden. As Mr. Bell and I crossed the threshold Maza called out to me in an insolent tone, but without pausing I merely turned my hand and told him I had nothing to say to him. Without saying a word he quietly followed us, passing behind Mr. Bell, who had been between us, and without a word or warning of any description dealt me a blow on the side of the head which knocked me down and rendered me unconscious for several seconds. While I was in this condition he sprang upon me and endeavored to inflict further injuries, from which he was prevented by the prompt and vigorous efforts of Mr. Bell, who managed with considerable difficulty to pull him off and throw him on the marble floor before the arrival of the police on duty at the corner and the idly curious crowd. I had by this time regained my feet and informed the policeman who I was, and asked that Maza be promptly detained and held until the police should receive instructions from the appropriate authorities.

I immediately telephoned to Dr. Patterson, the Sub-Secretary of State, informing him what had happened, and asked that he lose no time in seeing that proper steps were taken against Maza. This he promised to do, with many expressions of regret. Although decidedly uncomfortable from the effects of the blow and fall, I remained to dine with Mr. Bell at the Miramar, where in the course of the evening I received calls from the Secretary and Sub-Secretary of State, the Chief of Police and a number of others, who called to express their regrets and to assure me that the Government intended to make an example of Maza for what they all termed a cowardly and unprovoked attack.

[1] Second Secretary of the Legation.

I was considerably astonished the following morning to note that when Maza was taken to the police station and arraigned before the Correctional judge on duty he was promptly released upon his own recognizance. I promptly communicated this information to the Secretary of Justice, who ordered the case referred from the Correctional Court to the Court of Instruction. He also ordered that the charge be changed from one of simple breach of the peace to assault upon a public minister. Although these steps were taken by 8 o'clock in the morning it was not until 5 o'clock in the afternoon that Maza was again arrested, and this time he was again released on $500 bail, the minimum in cases of this sort.

The Chief of Police has since explained to me that on hearing of the assault he promptly sent word to the Correctional judge that this was an extremely serious offense and that he should deal very severely with the prisoner. After sending this message he considered that such action was so much a matter of course that he had reported it to me as a fact. The judge however took a different view of the case and sent an insulting message to the Chief of Police to the effect that it was quite the same to him whether the individual assaulted was the American Minister or a Cuban of the lowest class, and that he would do exactly as he pleased in his own court. This Judge Almagro has on various occasions been notoriously incorrect in his proceedings and the Chief of Police informs me that he intends to prefer charges against him on account of his conduct in this case.

It appears that the assault was witnessed by several employees of the Hotel Miramar, who have already given their testimony before the Audiencia, which will have charge of the case. All testimony has now been taken except that of Mr. Bell and myself, which we are ready to give as soon as authority is granted by the Department to that end.

I may add that Maza has long been notorious for his participation in unsavory incidents of this sort and disturbances of the peace. He has been employed upon practically every newspaper in Habana but has been so entirely unreliable and disreputable that he has lost one position after another. He has been forbidden to enter several other legations in Habana, and the Department of State, as a result of wilfully false statements which have been put in the mouths of foreign representatives and the Cuban Secretary of State, and also for his extreme insolence.

As I stated in my telegram of Tuesday evening, it seems to me highly desirable that the case against Maza be vigorously pressed. The failure to press to a prompt and satisfactory conclusion the case against Yarini (the assailant of Mr. Tarler) in September, 1908, produced a most demoralizing impression, which has been steadily manifest ever since my arrival in Habana. The incident is frequently mentioned in conversation and in the press to show that Cubans may with impunity offer violence to American representatives or residents, and that the force of public opinion upon the Cuban courts is sufficiently strong to save them from any punishment. The extremely hostile attitude of a portion of the Cuban press inciting, as it does, to violence against the Legation may readily encourage the irresponsible elements here to attacks upon members of this and other legations, and only prompt action with a view to making an example of this man will effectively disabuse the public mind that the United States is unable or indifferent as regards the forcing of proper respect for its representatives abroad.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your courteous note No. 57 of the 28th instant, in which you inform me that the Chargé d'Affaires of the United States in Cuba, on entering the Hotel Miramar in the evening of August 27, was assaulted by a reporter of La Prensa who struck him with intent to do him bodily injury; and that the Department of State of the United States expects that the Cuban Government will promptly take energetic measures to punish the offender.

In reply, Mr. Secretary, I reiterate to you my regret, already verbally expressed to the Department of State, at so deplorable and unjustifiable a deed, and at the same time I inform you that my Government has instructed the Public Prosecutor's Office to bring action for the public trial and punishment of the aggressor in accordance with the penal laws of Cuba, which in cases like this are as severe as those of the United States in punishing violators of the rules of international hospitality.

My Government further tells me that as soon as it learned of the act referred to in your note, besides taking steps for the arrest and punishment of the aggressor, it gave the Chargé d'Affaires complete satisfaction through the Secretary of State, who called in person at the Legation of the United States for that purpose.

I am sure that the courts of justice of Cuba, true to their honorable traditions, will not fail to inflict upon the offender the punishment provided by law, and I trust that the deed of an irresponsible man, unfriendly to the Government to the point of being denied admittance into the Department of State of Cuba, as you inform me in the note I am answering, cannot occasion any change whatever in the good and cordial relations existing between Cuba and the United States.

In an interview yesterday with the Assistant Secretary of State I read to him the Department's telegram of August 30, and pointed out the duty and interest of his Government in making, of its own accord, a straightforward statement of charges and of its intention to proceed with the utmost vigor in fulfillment of its duties. I also emphasized the propriety and need of frank consulation with the Legation as to the proposed course of action. At his request I left with him a memorandum based on the telegram above referred to.

Today he handed me a copy of a telegram addressed to the President by President Gómez, without knowledge of the Legation, saying that it was drafted by Sanguily and sent by authorization of President Gómez. Sanguily entirely fails to grasp the significance of the situation and his responsibility therein, manifesting determined disinclination to participate in the situation in any way, in spite of representations made by me and other foreign representatives. The telegram has been given to the press. It avoids all reference to the Reilly payment affair, which is the apparent cause of the entire campaign. This, together with a practical statement that the telegram is sent only under pressure, seems to give added color to a belief that the American Government and its representatives have resorted to bullying tactics, and to leave matters in a worse light than before.

The President of Cuba to the President.

HABANA, September 1, 1912.

To the Honorable William H. Taft, President of the United States of America, Washington:

Under the painful impression caused me by the declaration made yesterday by Mr. Wilson, Acting Secretary of State, to the Minister of Cuba at Washington, and confident of your constant good will toward Cuba and the Cuban Government, I renew to you my indignation and regret at the astounding outrage committed on the Chargé d'Affaires of the United States by a madman whose act may have been instigated by secret promoters of friction between Cuba and the United States. He has been arrested and indicted, and I assure you that the proceedings already begun will be conducted as rapidly as possible and with all the severity permitted by our laws. The insults offered to the Chargé d'Affaires by certain newspapers known to be in opposition to my Government will be made the subject of such prosecution as our laws permit, although they have produced no effect whatever in my country, which pays no attention to such acts nor to the intemperance of the press except to deplore them. Animated as I am by the ardent wish to free from all doubt the resolve with which I will always uphold the immunity and privileges of the representatives of friendly nations, and with the consideration and sincere affection that Cuba has always taken a delight in manifesting to the great nation over which you preside, I appeal to you to give your careful and entirely unbiased attention to this unpleasant case so that it may be adjusted in the amicable manner that we anticipate, in keeping with the cordiality and genuine esteem manifested on every occasion by Cuba and its Government for the American Nation. The latest notes and the memorandum communicated to us yesterday have greatly alarmed those who in the uneasiness of their patriotism fear that exaggerated reports, and the difficulty caused by distance of going into the inward nature of things, may lead the Government of the United States into a lamentable error in the appreciation of the occurrences of all kinds during the past few days, and may cause it to assume an attitude which you would surely be the first to deplore when you appreciate all the circumstances and know the sincerity of my purpose to do justice and also to maintain toward foreign representatives all the consideration to which they are entitled, particularly the representative of the American Government, who in his relations with us has always been courteous and even affectionate [afectuoso]. All these things lead me to anticipate a frank and cordial statement from you that will tranquilize those who are alarmed, by convincing all that the United States will not in this case depart from its constant desire to see Cuba maintain domestic peace and the friendliest relations with all nations, together with its well-founded gratitude toward the United States.

The Cuban Secretary of State has not made any statement to the press, in spite of strong recommendations; on the contrary he has succeeded in creating a feeling of apprehension here by stating with an air of mystery and grief that the situation was extremely serious; that the telegrams from the Cuban Minister at Washington were very alarming and that no one could foresee the outcome. These statements seem to have been made deliberately. It is now consequently believed here that our Government has assumed a threatening attitude toward the Cuban Minister and that the situation is really critical.

Assured as I now am of your Government's attitude, I can not doubt but that the measures discussed by the Acting Secretary of State with the Cuban Minister at Washington will have the desired result of preventing this disagreeable incident from having even a transient effect upon those feelings of sincere friendship which I am, glad to believe continues undiminished between the two countries.

Government in regard to the essential questions now being considered: whether or not it shall accede to the demand of the three powers that the claims be submitted to arbitration.

I may add that the representatives of the three interested powers are insistently pressing for an early decision and that their notes on the subject are couched in peremptory and impatient terms.

Personal letter from the Cuban Secretary of State to the American Minister.

Habana, February 9, 1912.

My dear Mr. Minister: Only because reluctant to detain you I did not draw your attention this morning to a matter of great importance to this country; but now I have decided to consult you in the hope that, if there is no objection, you will assist me either with your valued counsel or in any other way, for I am confident that in any event your cooperation will be very effective, not to say decisive.

You will no doubt have heard through the noisy press of Habana * * * about the commotion among men of influence and nearly the entire Congress, brought about by the well-known matter of the claims of France, England and Germany against Cuba on behalf of subjects of those nations for damages which they allege to have suffered during the war of 1895–98. As far back as 1903 the representatives of these nations began steps to procure from Cuba money indemnities on the strength of those claims, which implied that in their judgment Cuba was under obligation to pay them. Various notes upon this point were exchanged between the respective representatives and the Department of State in which reasons were adduced on both sides. The controversy remained in suspense throughout the period of the second intervention of the United States, but it was renewed in 1910, and since then as before we have, naturally, invariably maintained both orally and in writing the illegality and impropriety of the demands.

In this connection it is to be noted that now, as from the beginning, the situation is an anomalous one in that the aliens who claim to have suffered damages did not apply to the Cuban authorities to enforce their supposed rights, but from the beginning leaned upon their respective Governments and, disregarding such means and recourses as might be open to them through our laws and courts, have intrenched themselves in the diplomacy of powerful nations, while Cubans who, like those aliens, suffered damages in the war have not been indemnified and, even if they had filed claims therefor, would lack the enormous advantage which those aliens have procured through their appeal to diplomacy.

Prior to the "August Revolution" (1906) the official representatives of the three powers acted—although in mutual accord, as was natural in view of their identity of purpose—severally; but from 1910 on they have been acting jointly. On April 19, 1910, the diplomatic representatives of Germany, England and France came in a body to the Department, the French representative acting as spokesman. He told me that they had already waited too long for the decision of the Cuban Government in respect of the claims filed as far back as 1903, and that if those claims should not receive proper attention they would be compelled to follow instructions which the three had received of identical tenor, which would surely result greatly to the prejudice of the Republic. Wherefore, confident that they would be heard and heeded, they had agreed to suspend the execution of those instructions, principally "out of personal consideration for the Secretary of State", because they expected that through him the matter would be settled without great delay and in conformity with what they considered to be justice, that is (I suppose) in conformity with the demands of claimants. The representative of Germany added emphatically that the powers which the three ministers represented would no longer tolerate Cuban opposition to their demands with "un fin de non recevoir".

As the situation had become clouded and aggravated for my country, and as I continued, like my predecessors in this Department, to regard the claims as unfounded and illegal, I endeavored to protract the matter in spite of their more or less veiled threats.

Fortunately, in November, 1910, the President of the Republic honored me, together with General Monteagudo, with a commission to pay his respects to the President of the United States upon his arrival at Guantánamo Bay. And here, my dear Mr. Minister, I must be perfectly frank and explicit with you, for from that visit has been derived everything that happened later in connection with the foreign claims, and the little that then transpired is in my judgment the explanation and also, as I contend, the justification of my attitude and of the course which from that time on the negotiations took.

It seemed to me both expedient and necessary to inform the President of the United States that there were European claims pending against Cuba, and I even believed it to be my duty to warn him as discreetly as I knew how that the new phase in which these claims were brought to our consideration was disquieting for Cuba on account of certain threats which the three ministers had conveyed, as above stated.

I gathered the impression that the President of the United States thought that in this matter right was not on the side of the claimants. The President told me that he would take up the matter with Secretary Knox, and I even think that I understood him to say that the result of his conference with Secretary Knox would be made known to me through the Minister of the United States at Habana.

After some time had elapsed without my receiving any word from Washington, I orally requested Mr. Jackson to ask that I be made acquainted with the all-important views of the American Government. Mr. Jackson promised me to convey my request by the means at his disposal; but time flew on and I was at a loss to find an effective and decorous means of protracting the business. To this end I had a few interviews with the European ministers, at times jointly and at other times individually; I offered to commit the examination of the claims, from the point of view discussed by both parties, to some competent jurist; and I went so far as to indicate to them the probability that pursuant of the First Transient Provision of our Constitution[1] I should recommend to the President of the Republic that he place the matter in the hands of the Congress for examination and final action.

But, as the summer drew on and the foreign ministers began to leave the country, it seemed to me profitable and prudent to consult certain influential persons competent to deal with the question by reason of their knowledge and experience in public life; and while conferring with them on the 9th of June last year I was told that the Minister of the United States had arrived and was awaiting me in the next room. I interrupted the interview immediately, begging the gentlemen present to wait for me a little while, because I wished to receive the minister at once. The minister had in his hand and showed me a paper containing the substance of a telegram which he had just received from his Government.[2] In that telegram he was informed that the Ambassadors of France, England and Germany, having complained to the American Government of the tardiness of Cuba in respect of the claims which had on behalf of their subjects been filed since 1903, the Secretary of State, or perhaps the President himself (I do not now recall the exact terms of the instruction which Mr. Jackson allowed me to read), had begged them not to bring pressure to bear upon this Republic, in view of the possible effect upon Cuban finances; but at the same time he advised us to endeavor to settle the pending conflict by arbitration, not only for our own convenience but because that method was in harmony with the ideas and policy of the United States. I cannot after so many months vouch for the accuracy of my memory in respect of the ideas expressed in that instruction, which I read but once in the memorandum; for although I asked him to leave the memorandum with me Mr. Jackson declined (courteously, as always) to do so, on the ground that I had dealt with him thus far only orally and he could consequently go no further than to allow me to read his instructions; but he nevertheless authorized me to communicate them to the gentlemen in the next room.

[1] "Primera Disposición Transitoria," as follows [translation]: The Republic of Cuba does not recognize any other debts or obligations than those legitimately contracted in favor of the Revolution by commanders of bodies of the liberating army subsequent to the 24th day of February, 1895, and prior to the 19th of September of the same year, on which date the Jimaguayú Constitution was promulgated; and the debts and obligations contracted afterward by the Revolutionary Government, either by itself or through its legitimate representatives in foreign countries. Congress shall examine said debts and obligations and decide upon the payment of those which are found legitimate. (Rodríguez. American Constitutions, vol. 2, p. 145.)

I did so, and the general agreement was that we should not now hesitate to accept arbitration; and it is noteworthy that on July 3 the Legations of France, Germany and England should have presented to this Department a note verbale proposing "the institution of a tribunal of arbitration or a special international commission" to examine the claims of their subjects and pass upon their admissibility and amount.

In view of the foregoing—the impression which I gathered from the President of the United States that it was his belief that Cuba was not under obligation to answer for damages suffered by foreigners during the war of independence; the recommendation contained in Mr. Jackson's memorandum; and the almost unanimous opinion expressed in consequence thereof by the gentlemen assembled in this Department on June 9, 1911—I became persuaded that if I resorted to arbitration no one could offer better guaranties for Cuba than the President of the United States himself. And accordingly, on the same day on which I received the note of the powers proposing the institution of a tribunal or commission, I sent cable instructions to our Minister at Washington to inquire whether President Taft would consent to act as arbitrator[1]; and the Minister replied July 6 that the President would consent if the claimant Governments should jointly with that of Cuba submit the question to his arbitrament.[2] As I did not even suspect that the powers would refuse this solution, I addressed them a note on July 10 accepting in principle the proposition of arbitration, but requesting them at the same time to accept the idea of appointing as arbitrator the Honorable William H. Taft, President of the United States. Contrary to what I had anticipated, on August 9 they handed me a collective note stating that the Republic would be notified later of the proposals of the powers regarding the organization of the arbitration; and at the same time they told me orally that the Governments in interest, "by reason of the importance of the decision", thought that "arbitration should be confided to a commission in which the powers were represented" and that therefore they "could not think of committing the question to a single arbitrator however great his high authority".

To that note, as also to the oral statement, I replied on August 12 that as the powers had indicated that they would propose the organization of the arbitration when I in my note had reserved the determination of the points to be arbitrated, and as the powers had likewise rejected my other proposal to commit the matter to a single arbitrator, I regarded it as my duty to say that the Government of the Republic considered itself free from the obligation which they attributed to it and which might have been based upon its acceptance in principle of the proposal for arbitration. But as the French Chargé d'Affaires asked me to await, before making public this statement, the amplification which they would make in regard to this question, in order to please him I waited until I received some time later[3] a memorandum in which the powers jointly submitted to the consideration of the Cuban Government detailed proposals for proceeding by arbitration to the settlement of the pending claims.

In the meantime I learned that the President of the United States declined the office of arbitrator which had been proffered him.[4] I do not now exactly recall through what channel this information reached me, but I am sure that it was alleged that the reason for the declination was the fear of the President of the United States to arbitrate a case in which he might have to act in the dual capacity of judge and party, because among the claimants for damages suffered during the Cuban revolution some American citizens might appear. And here I wish to say that if I greatly regretted that the President of the United States should, in our then very serious situation, excuse himself, it caused me far greater surprise to learn that the reason invoked was the possibility that American citizens might, like the Europeans, bring claims against Cuba for damages suffered during the war of 1895, when it is clear and conclusive that, without reference to the cause of damages—as shown by the protocols of the Paris conferences[5]—the United States undertook and bound itself to answer for the claims of American citizens and to pay such as should be proved just and proper.

Following the receipt of the collective memorandum to which I have just referred, I had several conferences with capable and learned men both in my office and in the Senate; and as the number of the conferees was small and all of them did not concur in submitting the question to arbitration, I proposed to the President of the Republic that he should convene in the Palace a larger number, chosen from among the various committees of Congress and lawyers and politicians of repute. This conference, attended by over fifty men so chosen, took place on the 30th of last month, although unfortunately without any practical outcome whatever. * * * Notwithstanding the danger and delicacy of our situation opinion is divided; some think that we should resolutely embrace arbitration while others oppose this procedure. * * * On the one hand difficulties appear and dangers arise; on the other hand the First Transient Provision of the Constitution, if not debarring aliens from pressing their claims, prevents the Cuban Government from taking any attitude contrary to its precepts; for which reasons I would not even venture to advise the President of the Republic to take any action that, with the dissent of the people, might be productive of far-reaching liabilities.

In a situation which I can well say is embarrassing, I appeal to you, for I am sure that if at any time the United States can, in protection of justice, mediate between strong nations and a weak people which is its grateful and loyal friend, now is the time when it would be most appropriate and necessary. I believe that if the Platt Amendment and the treaty in which it was embodied give the United States the right to intervene in our country in certain circumstances, those instruments likewise particularly impose upon it the obligation to defend us when those who are stronger than us menace us for reasons that are opinionable and debatable. Will you permit me to remark that inasmuch as the moral authority of the United States in respect of Cuba—which is so great in the eyes of every country in the world—can be exercised in cases that heap humiliation on us, it should in just compensation be exercised above all when, as now, the occasion offers to do it to our benefit and for our guaranty?

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Habana, February 12, 1912.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Your note of the 9th instant inspires me with the deepest respect for you personally and with a full appreciation of the difficulties and perplexities that you are meeting in the great work that you are doing for your country. I need only reiterate now what I have said to you orally on other occasions: that to the full extent of my ability and consistent with my official obligations and duties, it will give me the keenest pleasure to render you such assistance and service as I may.

In the matter of the foreign claims, however, I feel that I am not warranted in taking any action without the previous knowledge and consent of my Government. I am therefore hastening to communicate to my Government the contents of your note and will, immediately upon receipt of my instructions, inform you whether I can take such action as you desire.

I am confident that you will readily realize that my course in this matter as above indicated is prompted by no lack of willingness on my part to be of service to you, but rather by a desire to act in the only really efficacious manner, that is, with the full support of my Government.

Thanking you [etc.]

MY DEAR MR. MINISTER: As it seems to me but natural and appropriate, after my letter of February 9, that I should not leave you in ignorance of the course of the insurrectionary claims, and especially what has transpired since then, I beg to advise you that on the 22d ultimo, as published in the newspapers, the Ministers of Germany, England and France came to the Department to ask me for the reply of the Cuban Government to the proposal contained in the memorandum which they handed me on November 7, 1911, in which they submitted that the matter of the claims of their subjects should be settled by arbitration.

Animated by the same purpose of putting off a definite reply that I have heretofore had to pursue for reasons explained to you in my former letter, I offered certain arguments and exceptions, and as they asked me to reduce them to writing in the form of a memorandum which I had written the day before and now have the honor to transmit to you, confidentially, so that you may be acquainted as to what point we have arrived in this difficult situation.

[Sub-inclosure.—Memorandum.—Translation.]

The Cuban Secretary of State to the Ministers of France, Germany and Great Britain.

The Secretary of State of the Republic of Cuba has the honor to submit to the consideration of T. E. the Ministers of Germany, France and England a few remarks in respect to the memorandum that they handed to him on November 7, 1911, which embodies the point of view of the Cuban Government upon the subject of the claims filed by citizens of those nations for damages which they allege to have suffered in their interests or property during the war for independence of 1895–98.

The Government of the Republic does not reject in principle now, as it has not previously rejected, the appeal to arbitration; but it reiterates, on the contrary, its adherence to the principle of settling international disputes by that means. Unequivocal proofs of this are to be found in the Hague Convention of October 18, 1907, signed by Cuba's delegates and approved by the Senate on March 10, 1909, and in the Convention of Rio Janeiro of August 13, 1906, approved and ratified during a recess of the Senate by the Provisional Governor on March 17, 1908. And the Secretary of State, speaking in its name, and for the very reason that an attempt has been made to make it appear to the contrary to the damage and discredit of Cuba, hastens to declare that the Republic stands ready now and always to pay what it legitimately owes and is proved to owe beyond any shadow of doubt.

From data communicated to the Department of State it would appear that the claims—which, though improperly, have also been called "debts"—are of three classes, to wit:

1. Those alleged to be obligations based on documents signed by corps commanders and by the General-in-Chief of the Army of Liberation, for sums received on various grounds for the Revolution.

2. Damage caused to the property of French, English and German subjects, attributed to revolutionary forces, which must surely be supported also by documentary evidence.

3. Robberies—so they are called in some of the claims—for which it is sought to attach responsibility to the revolutionary forces and consequently to the Government of the Republic.

With respect to the first two classes of claims the Secretary of State, voicing not only his personal conviction and the contention repeatedly maintained by the Government of the Republic but the general public opinion of Cuba as well, begs to invite the Ministers' attention to the following points:

1. That claims supported by documents signed by generals and corps commanders of the Army of Liberation, or arising from proved obligations contracted by the Revolutionary Government or lawfully in its name, ought not and can not be submitted to arbitration; because, coming as they do within the terms of the First Transient Provision of the Constitution, they must as therein prescribed be passed upon by the Cuban Congress, which, if it finds them correct and legitimate, will order their payment; and as the Constitution provides a simple and easy procedure for the purpose it would be inappropriate to resort to arbitration, which in any case is a costly expedient and in this case is wholly unnecessary, for it would be sufficient for each claimant personally or each legation in the name of its nationals to apply to Congress through the Executive by petition for the consideration of the claims by that body and payment in a proper case, transmitting with their claims the documentary evidence upon which they are based.

2. That in respect of claims for damages caused to property by military necessity, inasmuch as there is a radical discrepancy of opinion between the Governments of Germany, England and France on one side and the Cuban Government on the other, the proposal to submit them to arbitration would, in the absence of any other means of settling them diplomatically, be considered by the Cuban Government. But it must be borne in mind that in order to resort to this means of settlement it would first be necessary to apply to Congress for authorization in such form as it might deem appropriate, in accordance with the said First Transient Provision of the Constitution, which limits the powers of the Executive in respect to obligations contracted by authorities and agents of the Revolution in the circumstances and under the conditions prescribed by that provision; and because Congress alone can, if the application is approved, make the necessary appropriation for the expenses of the arbitration.

In respect of the other claims, included in the third class under the head of "robberies," the Secretary of State considers them inadmissible because the present Republic of Cuba having become, according to the reasoning of the claimant powers, identified with the Revolution of 1895, if for no other reason than the respect which the Revolution inspires in the Cuban Government, and its own decorum, it cannot possibly accept on any ground the name of thieves for the soldiers of the Army of Liberation, nor responsibility for deeds which, if committed, were isolated and individual and imputable solely to malefactors.

The Secretary of State has stipulated that these remarks shall not be regarded as counterpropositions but merely as observations and points of view, although they might be reduced to counterpropositions later if accepted as the bases for an agreement by the claimant powers, as the Secretary hoped; for what to him was most important was to arrive promptly at some practicable and easy solution or arrangement in harmony with the good relations which happily exist between the several Governments concerned and that of the Republic of Cuba.

Sir: The Department acknowledges the receipt of your No. 104 of February 12 regarding the so-called insurrectionary claims against Cuba, enclosing a copy of a personal note addressed to you by Señor Sanguily. This note has been read with special interest by the Department, which has noted particularly the statement therein contained of Señor Sanguily's recollection of what transpired at the interview he had during the recent visit of the President of the United States to Guantánamo. The passage of the note referring to this matter was transcribed to the President who was requested to inform the Department whether the report of the conversation at Guantánamo touching the matter of the revolutionary claims was accurate. The President replied to this request of the Department in a letter dated March 14, a copy of which is inclosed for the information of the Legation. It should be added that a copy of this letter of the President is also going in this mail to the Secretary for his consideration should he have the opportunity to take up personally with the Cuban Government the matter of the outstanding claims against Cuba during his visit to Habana.

MY DEAR MR. WILSON: I have Mr. Adee's letter of March 12[1] in reference to my conversation with Mr. Sanguily, the Secretary of State of Cuba. His statement is true as he has given it. I expressed the opinion that the claims of which he told me were so great in amount as really to swamp the Cuban Government, and that my impression was that the decisions of the Court of Spanish Claims in Washington would furnish a good defense to most of them, but that I would take the matter up with Secretary Knox at a later stage.

Mr. Sanguily says that I said that the result of my conference with Mr. Knox would be made known to him. My recollection is that I suggested that he present the matter.

Sincerely yours,

SIR: Referring to previous correspondence [etc.] you are informed that some days ago the French Ambassador called at the Department requesting that this Government suggest to the Government of Cuba the desirability of arbitrating the fundamental question as to the liability of the Cuban Government in this respect.

For your information the Department encloses a copy of a memorandum of the conversation which took place between the Secretary and the French Ambassador, wherein the Secretary promised the Ambassador to advise Cuba that it was the view of this Government that the fundamental question should be arbitrated, and that he would inform Mr. Sanguily what the Ambassador had said in favor of arbitrating at The Hague.

My conversation with the French Ambassador about the arbitration of the English, French and German claims against Cuba for damages arising during the Cuban insurrection was this:

I told him that this Government's opinion had been asked by the Cuban Government as to whether the Cuban Government should agree to submit these claims to arbitration. I told the Ambassador that this Government would advise the Cuban Government to arbitrate the fundamental question as to whether under the rules of international law Cuba was responsible for the damages that occurred during the revolution, under the peculiar circumstances surrounding the birth of the Cuban Republic, and that I had intimated to Mr. Sanguily in Habana that that was a question which should be arbitrated. I told the Ambassador that Mr. Sanguily had said that if they were willing to arbitrate that question they would not want to take it to The Hague because while he himself did not share the opinion, yet it was undoubtedly the opinion of the majority of the Cuban people that France, Germany and Great Britain would stand a better chance in the Hague Court than Cuba, and besides Mr. Sanguily said the expenses of an arbitration at the Hague were so great he, Sanguily, thought it would be better if the question were arbitrated to submit it to some distinguished jurist or jurists who might be agreed upon.

The Ambassador replied that he believed that Cuba would stand even a better chance at The Hague than the European powers and asked me to say so to Mr. Sanguily. My promise to the Ambassador was that I would advise Cuba that it was the view of this Government that the fundamental question should be arbitrated and would state to Mr. Sanguily what he, the Ambassador, had said in favor of arbitration at The Hague.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Referring to previous correspondence in regard to the so called "insurrectionary claims" against Cuba for damages to British, French and German citizens during the last Cuban war of independence, I beg to inform you that the French Ambassador in Washington recently called upon Secretary Knox to request that he suggest to the Cuban Government the desirability of arbitrating the fundamental question as to the liability of the Cuban Government in regard to these claims.

Secretary Knox informed the Ambassador that you had asked his opinion as to whether the Cuban Government should agree to submit these claims to arbitration. He added that he would advise the Cuban Government to arbitrate the fundamental question as to whether, under the rules of international law, Cuba was responsible for the damages suffered during the revolution, under the peculiar circumstances surrounding the birth of the Cuban Republic, and that he had intimated to you during his recent visit to Habana that this was a question which should be arbitrated. The Ambassador replied that it was his belief that Cuba would stand even a better chance at The Hague than the European powers, and requested that the Secretary so inform you. The promise of Secretary Knox to the Ambassador was that he would advise the Cuban Government that in the opinion of the American Government the fundamental question at issue should be arbitrated and that he would communicate to you what the Ambassador had said in favor of arbitration at The Hague.

The Cuban Secretary of State to the American Minister.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Habana July 9, 1912.

MY DEAR MR. MINISTER: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your note of the first instant, in which your excellency was good enough to inform me concerning the recent call of the French Ambassador at Washington upon the Secretary of State, Mr. Knox, in which he asked that the latter should suggest to the Cuban Government that it was highly desirably to settle by arbitration the fundamental question as to whether or not the Republic of Cuba is responsible for the damages which English, French and German subjects claim to have suffered during the War of Independence of 1895–1898; and in which at the same time your excellency is good enough to communicate to me the opinion or advice of the Secretary of State of the United States as regards the attitude and conduct which should be assumed and followed by the Cuban Government.

From what I am able to deduce from your excellency's note, Mr. Knox explained to the French Ambassador practically all that was of material interest in the interview which I had the honor to have with him on April 13 last in the Hotel Telégrafo in Habana; although I fear that, surely because I did not express myself well at that time or did not exactly understand what was said in that interview of April 13, there has arisen some misunderstanding; for at least it does not seem that I remember that, instead of arbitration, I suggested to Mr. Knox the advantage of submitting the matter in dispute to one or more distinguished jurists whose designation could be decided by agreement; unless my memory is faulty, it was Mr. Knox who, in reply to the observation that an arbitration at The Hague would be exceedingly costly, suggested the idea of the possibility of resorting to a commission; I still remember although very vaguely some observation which I then made relative to the difficulties which might be found in such a course in the Cuban Congress, as it might not be in accord with the stipulations of the first Transient Provision of our Constitution.

After all, this doubt as to a mere incident has no importance especially, as in the interview with Mr. Knox it does not appear that the French Ambassador gave his assent or indicated his acquiescence in any form of settlement which was not that of an arbitration at The Hague.

The Secretary of State very opportunely remembered and brought to the knowledge of the French Ambassador the apprehension and the fears of Cuba in regard to an arbitration at The Hague that such an arbitration might be more favorable to the powers than to Cuba. As stated in your excellency's note, "the ambassador replied that it was his belief that Cuba would stand even a better chance at The Hague than the European Powers," and requested the Secretary of State so to inform me. There are few among those unknown to him who esteem and admire as I do the illustrious Ambassador of France in Washington; but in this concrete case it is only right to state that his belief has no more foundation that our fears; both are simple impressions derived from anticipatory hypothetical judgments; and so far is this true that if there were a better foundation for the statements of the French Ambassador than for what I declared to be our fears, it is logical and natural to believe that the French Ambassador would not recommend resorting to an arbitration at The Hague as, in his opinion, the Cubans would have a better chance than the powers; that is to say, that Cuba would have a better chance of success.

Be that as it may, it appears from the text of your excellency's note that Mr. Knox, as I take it, has designed to give us advice or rather a simple suggestion; and your excellency will remember that in the interview of April 13 already mentioned, when I explained to the Secretary of State the diversity and conflict of public opinion in Cuba concerning the European claims, I stated very frankly to him that the only thing which to my mind would unite public opinion and would relieve the Cuban Government of embarrassment in its future conduct would be a frank and resolute declaration from the Government of the United States which I should be authorized to publish; and as I have no right to believe from anything in your excellency's note that this latter step has been taken, I consider it my duty to continue to resist as strongly as possible and by all the means in my power what I consider illegitimate European pretensions; for I am convinced, Mr. Minister, that the Republic of Cuba, because of the historical conditions which produced it, is not and should not be considered responsible for the damages inflicted upon foreigners by the Cuban revolutionists during the domination and rule of Spain and that consequently Cuba cannot and should not be obliged by any one to pay damages and losses which, in justice and reason, are not and cannot be chargeable to her.

SIR: The Department has received the Minister's No. 335 of July 12 last, regarding the question of the arbitration of the so-called "insurrectionary claims" against the Cuban Government.

You are instructed to address a note to the Secretary of State of Cuba in reply to his note to the Legation of July 9, 1912, and say that "In view of the insistence with which the matter is being urged upon the attention of the Cuban Government, it is the conviction of the Government of the United States that the fundamental question which has arisen between Cuba and certain European nations as to the liability of Cuba for damages arising out of acts of the Cuban forces during the war of independence from 1895 to 1898, is of such a nature and gravity that it should forthwith be submitted for determination and settlement to the decision of an impartial international tribunal of arbitration, and that the Government of the United States trusts that this method of solution will be employed by the Governments concerned.

"Deeply interested in the welfare of Cuba and in any and all obligations which may be imposed upon the Cuban people, the Government of the United States will be glad to lend to the Government of Cuba all proper assistance not only in the matter of framing the protocol under which the questions involved in this controversy shall be submitted to arbitration but also in the matter of conducting later the actual proceedings before the tribunal."

SIR: Referring to the Department's instruction Nº 138 of the 16th instant, in regard to the so-called "insurrectionary claims" against the Cuban Government, I have the honor to enclose herewith copy of a note which, as directed in that instruction, I addressed to the Cuban Secretary of State on the 24th instant, together with copy and translation of Mr. Sanguily's reply of today's date.

Mr. Sanguily expresses the belief that Cuba could hardly proceed forthwith to arrange for the arbitration of the question at issue because, in the first place, the powers concerned have not yet replied to certain counter-propositions made by his Government, and because, in the second place, the presidential election is to be held a month hence at which a new Government (possibly of a different party) will be chosen, and "reasons of delicacy, fairness and propriety" would seem to make it desirable to defer action in the sense indicated by the Department.

The Department's attention is respectfully invited to Mr. Sanguily's concluding request for authorization to make public our indication as to the appropriateness and desirability of submitting these claims to arbitration.

YOUR EXCELLENCY: Referring to your excellency's esteemed note of July 9, 1912, in regard to the so-called "insurrectionary claims" against the Government of Cuba, I have the honor, in pursuance of instructions received from my Government, to say that in view of the insistence with which the matter in being urged upon the attention of the Cuban Government, it is the conviction of the Government of the United States that the fundamental question which has arisen between Cuba and certain European nations as to the liability of Cuba for damages arising out of acts of the Cuban forces during the war of independence from 1895 to 1898 is of such a nature and gravity that it should forthwith be submitted for determination and settlement to the decision of an impartial international tribunal of arbitration, and that the Government of the United States trusts that this method of solution will be employed by the Governments concerned.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

MR. CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your esteemed note N° 366 of the 24th instant relative to instructions received from your Government and kindly transmitted to me, in regard to the claims of European nations against the Government of Cuba for damages arising during the war of independence from 1895 to 1898, as alleged by their respective subjects, which your Government considers of such a nature and gravity that in its judgment they should be submitted forthwith to the decision of an international tribunal of arbitration, a method of solution which your Government trusts will be adopted both by Cuba and the Governments concerned. Those Governments had since 1911 expressed to the Cuban Government their desire and purpose to have recourse to arbitration in order to settle the question involved in all its aspects.

So far as the Government of Cuba is concerned, it could hardly proceed forthwith in this matter. In the first place, because the powers in question have not yet answered the memorandum which on behalf of the Cuban Government I had the honor to hand to their representatives on February 28 of the current year making certain observations in regard to the contents of the memorandum which they had handed to me on November 7 last year; and because moreover this Government awaits a reply to a note sent them on the 7th instant, and acknowledged by them on the 9th, in which, referring to the Cuban memorandum of February 28th, they were offered, with a request for an expression of their views, an easy and expeditious method of presenting the claims, and procuring settlement of those found to be just and substantiated in accordance with the First Transient Provision of our Constitution.

And, in the second place, because, as general elections are to be held about a month hence—in which the party at present in power may be returned or the opposition may be chosen—reasons of delicacy, fairness and propriety seem to make it incumbent upon the present Government of Cuba to maintain an attitude of prudent reserve rather than to precipitate negotiations that perhaps might not be agreeable to the new Government soon to succeed it, which, as all things are possible, might be the opponent of the party which now shoulders the responsibility of power in Cuba.

But whichever of the two parties will be called upon ultimately to decide the question, it will doubtless appreciate with equal sincerity the offer which you so kindly make on behalf of your Government in the contingency that arbitration is agreed to and put into practice by the Governments concerned; although when the time comes it would be but natural that we should endeavor to relieve the Government of the United States of all trouble and any sort of responsibility, direct or indirect.

I do wish, however, that the Government of the United States would authorize the Cuban Government, if—as I assume—there is no objection thereto, to make public the intimation conveyed in your note under acknowledgment that the Government of the United States considers it indispensable and appropriate that Cuba should arrange with the three claimant powers an arbitrament before an international tribunal for the impartial determination and settlement of the question at issue, in all its aspects and particularly in fundamental part; for the Government of the United States will recall that I made the same request of His Excellency Mr. Knox, Secretary of State of the American Government, on the occasion of a conference held on the 13th of April last at the Hotel Telégrafo in this city, for reasons and purposes which I then had the honor to state to him.

The Department suggests that you advise the Secretary of State of Cuba that, in view of the circumstances mentioned by him in his note, it would seem unwise at this time to make public the expression of this Government's opinion in favor of arbitration of these claims. You may add however that this Government will be glad to reconsider this determination as soon as the matter of submitting the claims to arbitration again becomes urgent.

SIR: I have the honour, under instructions from His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, to communicate to you herewith a copy of a joint note and agreement which the representatives of His Majesty's Government and the French and German Government at Havana have addressed to the Cuban Government in regard to the arbitration of the British, French and German outstanding claims against Cuba.

JAMES BRYCE.

[Inclosure.—Joint note and draft agreement.—Translations from the French.]

The British, French and German Ministers to Cuba to the Cuban Secretary of State.

The Governments of Germany, France and Great Britain have carefully examined the reply of the Cuban Government under date of Feburary 28, 1912, to their note of November 7, 1911.

As the Cuban Government tentatively accepts arbitration for the settlement of the indemnities claimed by the citizens and subjects of the three countries, the claimant powers have the honor to renew their propositions of November 7, 1911.

Those propositions were to the effect that a court of arbitration should first determine the question whether the Cuban Government is liable for the injuries caused, and, if it is, then that the claims should subsequently be adjusted by a mixed commission sitting in Cuba.

A draft agreement to arbitrate, worked out on this basis, is therefore appended to the present note and submitted to the acceptance of the Cuban Government.

As the first part of the proposed procedure does not involve any examination of individual claims, there appears to be no object in discussing the classification of the claims as suggested by the Cuban Government. It will be permissible for the claimants whose demands appear acceptable to the Cuban Government to adjust them with the latter by all means possible until the court of arbitration provided for in the agreement to arbitrate has settled the question whether Cuba is or is not liable in law for the injuries caused.

After that date all unsettled claims for indemnity will be withdrawn by the interested Governments if the court should decide that the Cuban Government is not liable.

In the contrary event they will be submitted to the mixed commission provided for in article 11.

The Governments of Germany, France and Great Britain desire to remark again that their position is based upon a spirit of sincere conciliation and on the sole desire to terminate the controversy by the means which are the most acceptable to both parties. In signing the agreement to arbitrate proposed to it the Cuban Government does not recognize in advance either the validity or the wellfoundedness of the claims which have been submitted to it. It undertakes solely to have decided by arbitration, in concert with the claimant powers, the question as to whether it is liable or not.

Between the Governments of Germany, France, and Great Britain on the one hand, and the Government of Cuba on the other, a disagreement has arisen as to whether the Republic of Cuba is bound to repair the injuries caused by the Cubans to German, French and British subjects during the war of independence. The dispute has not been settled by diplomatic means.

According to article 38, paragraph 2, of The Hague Convention for the peaceful settlement of international controversies, of October 18, 1907, the said Governments have decided to resort to arbitration in this dispute and have concluded the following Agreement:

Article 1. The question in dispute is the following: Is the Cuban Republic bound to repair the injuries caused by its regular forces or by its irregular forces to German, French or British subjects during the war of independence and before the beginning of the war between Spain and the United States?

Article 2. The parties are the following: The Governments of Germany, France and Great Britain on the one hand, and the Government of Cuba on the other.

Article 3. A court of arbitration, organized as hereinafter described, shall be instructed to render a final decision on the question in dispute (article 1).

Article 4. The court of arbitration shall be composed of three arbitrators chosen from among the members of the permanent court of arbitration of The Hague.

Each party shall choose an arbitrator as soon as possible and within a period not to exceed two months from the date of signature of the present agreement. The two arbitrators thus chosen shall choose an umpire. If within a period of one month from the date upon which they have been notified of their designation they have been unable to agree upon the choice of an umpire, the designation of the latter shall be intrusted to His Majesty the King of Norway.

Article 5. On ---------- the German, French and British Governments shall deliver to the Bureau of the Permanent Court at The Hague sixteen copies of their common argument, and the Cuban Government shall deliver to it twenty-four copies of its argument. The Bureau shall without delay attend to transmitting to the arbitrators and the parties, three copies of both arguments to each arbitrator, four copies of the Cuban argument to each of the three European Governments, and four copies of the argument of the latter Governments to the Cuban Government. Besides, three copies of each argument shall be kept in the Bureau for the files.

On ---------- the parties shall deposit, in the same manner, their counter-arguments and final conclusions.

Article 6. Each party shall deposit in the International Bureau by May 1, 1913, at the latest, the sum of 1000 Dutch florins as an advance for the costs of litigation.

Article 7. The court shall convene at The Hague on ------ and it shall proceed at once to examine the controversy.

Article 8. The parties shall each be represented before the court by a special agent, whose mission it shall be to act as an intermediary between them and the court. These agents shall give such explanations as may be asked of them by the court, and they may offer such arguments as they may deem suitable for the defense of their cause.

Article 9. The arguments of the parties (article 5) and the written decisions of the court will be in French. The members of the court as well as the agents may use the German, French, English or Spanish language in their written or oral communications, at their choice.

Article 10. In all matters not provided for in the present agreement the stipulations of The Hague Convention of October 18, 1907, shall be applicable to the present arbitration.

Article 11. If the court answers the disputed question (article 1) in the affirmative, a mixed commission shall convene in Cuba in order to pass on each of the indemnity claims. It shall comprise a representative for each of the four Governments, and an umpire, who must be the citizen or subject of an uninterested country.

Each claim shall be examined and tried by a subcommission comprising only the representative of Cuba, the representative of the interested nation, and the umpire; so that the umpire and the representative of Cuba will have to pass upon all the claims, and the representative of each of the other powers only on the claims filed by the citizens or subjects of that power.

The sums allowed the claimants by the mixed commission shall be delivered by the Cuban Government to the diplomatic representatives of the interested Governments at Havana, within a period of one year from the date of the decision of the mixed commission, and they shall bear interest at the rate of six per cent per annum from the date of the decision of the court up to that of payment.

Article 12. The two parties shall share in equal moieties the fees and traveling expenses of the arbitrators and of the umpire as provided in article 4, as well as the incidental arbitration expenses contemplated in article 6. The parties shall likewise share by halves the fees and traveling expenses of the umpire as contemplated in article 11.

Upon making a careful comparison of the draft with the text previously submitted to the Department with Mr. Jackson's despatch No. 884 of June 1, 1911, I found that a number of verbal changes had been made and that one new article had been added. While these appear in no way to alter the sense of the convention, I feel that the State and Navy Departments alone are competent to decide upon these matters and am therefore waiting to send the entire text by mail.

Apparently the only undetermined question appearing in the draft of the convention enclosed is that of the amount of the annual sum to be paid. * * *

Proposed agreement between the United States and Cuba for the enlargement of the Guantánamo Naval Station.

The United States of America and the Republic of Cuba having entered into certain agreements on February 16/23 and on July 2, 1903, by which certain described areas of land and water in Guantánamo and Bahía Honda in the Island of Cuba were leased to the United States for the purpose of coaling and naval stations, and the two Governments being now desirous of cancelling so much of the said lease as relates to the areas in Bahía Honda and of extending the said lease over certain additional areas of land and water in Guantánamo, they have therefore resolved to enter into an agreement for that purpose and to that end have named as their plenipotentiaries—the President of the United States: Mr. Arthur M. Beaupré, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Habana; and the President of the Republic of Cuba: Sr. Manuel Sanguily y Garritt, Secretary of State. Who, after communicating to each other their respective full powers found to be in due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I. The limits of the areas of land and water of Guantánamo which were ceded in lease to the United States of America by the agreements of February 16/23 and July 2, 1903, are hereby enlarged and fixed in the following form:

1. From the middle of the river Yateras at the place of its discharge into the ocean, a curved line following the middle of said river to its farthest western intersection with the parallel of 20° north latitude.

2. From the northwestern extremity of this line, a straight line running west (true) a distance of 3.50 miles more or less to its point of intersection with an extension of the line that constitutes the eastern boundary prescribed in the original lease by the Republic of Cuba to the United States; that is to say, to its point of intersection with a line running north (true) from a point on the south coast of Cuba 4.37 nautical miles to the eastward of the present position of Windward Point Lighthouse.

3. From the western extremity of this line, a straight line running south (true) a distance of 1.68 nautical miles more or less to a point east (true) from the northern extremity of the point of North Toro Cay that is situated about 5.68 nautical miles north 20½ degrees east (true) from the position of the present lighthouse on Windward Point.

4. From the southern end of this line, a straight line running west (true) to its point of intersection with a line running north 35° east (true) from the monument H 12 on the northern boundary laid down in the original lease by the Republic of Cuba to the United States.

5. From the western end of this line, a straight line running south 35° west (true) to its point of intersection at the monument H 12 with the northern boundary laid down in the original lease by the Republic of Cuba to the United States.

6. From the southwest end of this line, a straight line running north 59° 7′ west (true) through the said monument H 12 to the line of the east coast of the northeastern point of North Toro Cay.

7. From the northwestern end of this line, a curved line coinciding with the northeastern, northern and northwestern line of the coast of the northeastern point of North Toro Cay to the point of intersection with the prolongation of the said straight line that runs north 59° 7′ west (true) through the said monument H 12 and the point at the northern extremity of North Toro Cay previously mentioned.

8. From the southwestern end of this line, a straight line that runs north 59° 7′ west (true) to the point on the northern extremity of North Toro Cay previously mentioned.

9. From the northwestern extremity of this line, a broken line running first north 61° 50′ west (true) a distance of 0.42 nautical mile more or less, then south 33° 53′ west (true) a distance of 0.66 nautical mile more or less, said line terminating on the western shore of North Toro Cay at a point south 61° west (true) from the southern extremity of Fort Toro, and having its two parts respectively tangent to the northeastern and northwestern shores of the unnamed islet lying northward from Toro Cay.

10. From the southwestern extremity of this line, a straight line running west (true) a distance of 0.21 nautical mile more or less to the shore-line of Flamingo Cay at Cayoba Point.

11. From the western extremity of this line, a curved line running in coincidence with the northeastern and northern shore-line of Flamingo Cay to the westernmost extremity of the northwestern point of Flamingo Cay.

12. From the western extremity of this line, a straight line running north 70° 4′ west (true) a distance of 0.48 nautical mile.

13. From the northwestern extremity of this line, a straight line running west (true) a distance of 1.39 nautical miles more or less to a point northeast (true) from the western extremity of the northern boundary described in the original lease granted by the Republic of Cuba to the United States.

14. From the western extremity of this line, a broken line running first southwest (true) a distance of 0.52 nautical mile more or less to the western extremity of the northern boundary described in the aforesaid original lease, and thereafter conforming with the northwestern and western boundaries as laid down in said lease.

Article II. All the rights acquired and all the obligations contracted by the United States of America and the Republic of Cuba in regard to the areas leased at Guantánamo by virtue of the above-mentioned agreements are hereby extended to the new leased areas. The United States of America agrees and covenants to pay to the Republic of Cuba the annual sum of five thousand dollars in gold coin of the United States as long as the former shall occupy and use the areas leased by this agreement. All or any private lands and other real property within said areas shall, upon the request of the Government of the United States of America, be acquired by the Republic of Cuba. The United States of America agrees to furnish to the Republic of Cuba the reasonable sums necessary for the purchase of said private lands and properties, and such sums shall be accepted by the Republic of Cuba as advance payment on account of rental due by virtue of this agreement.

ARTICLE III. All the clauses and provisions of the agreements of February 16/23 and July 2, 1903, that are not altered or modified by the present agreement shall remain in full force.

ARTICLE IV. The United States of America hereby relinquishes all rights over and upon, and the Republic of Cuba hereby releases the United States of America from all duties and obligations connected with and concerning the areas of land and water at Bahía Honda as established by the cession in lease by the Republic of Cuba to the United States of America under the agreements of February 16/23 and July 2, 1903.

ARTICLE V. This agreement of lease and renunciation shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged in the City of Habana within six months from the date of this document.

In testimony of which we, the respective plenipotentiaries, have signed this lease and renunciation and affixed hereto our seals.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Habana, April 17, 1912.

SIR: I have the honor to report concerning the recent visit to Habana of the Secretary of State and at the same time to interpret as best I may be able the feelings of this Government and people at the time and subsequent to Mr. Knox's visit to this country.

Secretary Knox arrived at the port of Habana at 9 o'clock on the morning of the 11th instant on board the U. S. S. Washington. As soon as the vessel reached her moorings she was boarded by a party of officials sent to welcome the Secretary. I accompanied this party, attended by the entire staff of the Legation. * * * Mr. Knox received the party on the quarter-deck. After an exchange of greetings * * * the party returned to shore to await the arrival of Mr. Knox, who arrived shortly afterwards * * * and the party was taken to the Hotel Telégrafo where an entire floor had been reserved by the Government. * * *

At twelve o'clock the Secretary, accompanied by Mr. Doyle, his naval and military aides and the staff of the Legation, called on Secretary Sanguily at the Department of State. * * * As the Secretary's visit had been greatly delayed it was decided to waive the return call of Secretary Sanguily until afternoon, and the party immediately proceeded to the Palace to call on President Gómez, accompanied by Secretary Sanguily and Sub-Secretary Patterson. * * * After a few minutes conversation with the President the Secretary and his party withdrew and returned to the hotel for luncheon.

At 4 p. m. Secretary Saguily and Sub-Secretary Patterson returned Mr. Knox's call, at the Hotel Telégrafo.

At five o'clock I had the privilege of giving a reception at the Legation, to afford an opportunity to the higher Cuban officials to meet the Secretary. * * * The president and Mrs. Gómez arrived early and stayed throughout the reception, the first function of any sort they have attended in a legation or private residence during the administration. * * *

At half past eight o'clock President Gómez gave a state dinner in the building of the Department of the Interior. Places were arranged for over two hundred guests. * * * The best elements of Habana society have never before attended any of the functions given by the Government, and their attendance at this banquet must be regarded entirely as an evidence of friendly feeling for the United States and a desire to manifest that feeling to the Secretary of State. The event of the Secretary's visit which had been anticipated with the greatest interest was his speech delivered at this banquet. At the conclusion of the meal Secretary Sanguily arose and delivered a friendly and well-written address of welcome in which he made enthusiastic protestations of Cuba's friendliness for and confidence in the United States. * * * Secretary Knox in his reply expressed gratification at his opportunity to become acquainted with the members of the Government of Cuba, in which the United States takes so deep and unselfish an interest. * * * I have the honor to inclose herewith copies of both speeches. * * *

On the 12th there was a motor trip to the Mercedita sugar plantation at La Cabaña in Pinar del Río Province. * * *

At eight o'clock I had the pleasure of entertaining the Secretary and his party at dinner at the Legation. * * *

Shortly after ten o'clock the party proceeded to the Department of State where a magnificent ball was given in honor of the Secretary. * * * About 1,200 invitations were issued. * * * All the best elements in Cuban society were represented. * * * This was undoubtedly the largest and most elaborate ball ever given in Cuba. * * *

On the morning of the 13th Secretary Sanguily and Sub-Secretary Patterson called on Mr. Knox at his hotel and had an extended conference on pending matters, at which I was present.

At three o'clock the American Club gave a reception in honor of the Secretary. * * *

At five o'clock Mr. Knox went to the Quinta de los Molinos (the old summer home of the Spanish captains-general) where the Mayor of Habana gave a garden-party in his honor. * * *

From the garden-party the Secretary drove directly to the Caballería wharf whence he immediately went on board the Washington. The Legation staff and a few Cuban officials took leave of the Secretary on the dock. Most of the officials, however, arrived at the dock after the departure of the Secretary's launch. They all took launches and went on board the Washington to wish the Secretary a pleasant journey. * * *

It is gratifying to note that none of the local papers have published any hostile comment. All the papers devoted a great deal of space to describing the movements of the party and all comment was distinctly friendly. * * * The Cuban Government extended a hearty and sincere welcome to the Secretary and spared no efforts or expense to make his visit a success. Cuban society let down the bars which it has maintained towards the official element and joined freely in welcoming and entertaining the nation's guest. There was not a note of discord to mar the effect of the visit and we may feel highly gratified at the reception accorded Mr. Knox as the representative of the United States. More than this is the knowledge that the Secretary's visit has cleared the air of all uncertainty as to the friendly intentions and good wishes of our Government for Cuba. * * *

I have [etc.] A. M. BEAUPRÉ.

[Inclosure 1.—Translation.]

Address of the Secretary of State of Cuba welcoming Mr. Knox.

SIR: The President of the Republic has honored me by charging me with the office—a most pleasant one for me—of giving you in his name and in the name of the Cuban Government and people a most cordial and heartfelt welcome to this isle that has rocked the cradle of many a hero, and which is ever a hospitable home in which the stranger easily forgets his native land midst the blandishments of bountiful nature and the warm brotherliness of a people as noble as it is good. Harbinger of peace, in visiting regions as yet unknown to you, peopled by races of an origin and tongue so different from your own, you do not grasp the ponderous sword of conquest, but rather the glorious caduceus of Mercury, symbol of prosperity and beneficence, entwined with olive and laurel, some of whose leaves shine with the tears of our sisters and our own blood, while the heavenly radiance of our martyrdom and our heroism blends with the halo of light by which it is surrounded and illumined; for, united, the flashing American battalions and the careworn Cuban legions, thin and almost naked, accomplished—you in a rapid campaign, we battling unwearied for half a century—the splendid issue which renewed your traditional doctrines of world politics and gave new direction to your historic destiny, while radically changing our secular condition, both assuming from that moment, in return for new duties and rights toward other nations, mutual and reciprocal responsibilities by virtue of which neither do you assume the right of oppressing us nor have we suffered the misfortunes of a fresh bondage.

With your excursion to the free commonwealths of the Caribbean Sea you complete that other interesting and fruitful excursion of your illustrious predecessor to those republics south of the Equator, animated, like him, by the same spirit of harmony and fraternity; bearers, both, of one message of concord and affection which the great Republic then sent and now repeats to these impetuous republics, shaped to her image, although under different conditions—some born, as the most recent, at the magic touch of her diplomacy; others, as our own, by the help of her arms; and all, perhaps, maintained through the efficacy of her original and life-giving principles. Wherefore the visit of so high an envoy from the largest and most famous democracy of the world could never imply purposes opposed to the consecration and normal exercise and development of republican institutions, not only because of the greatness of the august federation whose conspicuous and worthy representative you are, and because of the elevation and moral refinement of the generous people who established it and have maintained and aggrandized it in the face of great perils and fearful struggles, but because of what, in the evolution of ideas and the transformation of history, the American spirit, American doctrines, and American action mean in the life of modern society. Blessed fruit of a seasoned and hard-fought development inspired and sustained by the highest aspirations of benevolence and progress, Americanism is either an empty word or is as a leaven of order, of dignity, and of that serene trust which in every man's heart builds up the sense of power and righteousness as an impregnable fortress and sows in every land the seed of vigorous virtues whereby, through its own self-respect and in the exalted interests of justice, it may become unconquerable and happy. Solely by that spirit which creates and upholds, by the humane and fruitful power of that doctrine which is the product of a high avatar of conscience, which is a new gospel of redemption and hope for oppressed peoples and bulwark of vacillating and unstable democracies, would what has been called Pan-American in contradistinction to Old World denominations be truly justified and have its full force, in harmony with the dignity and happiness of nations. Whatever may be the changes and applications of the Monroe Doctrine—the last phase of which your excellency has set forth and interpreted authoritatively in a recent well-known speech—it never could imply, as the malevolent would wish, a harassing, illegitimate, and humiliating suzerainty, consisting of a constant, arbitrary, and perturbing interference of an alien government in the private and normal life of sovereign nations.

My words are prompted, Mr. Secretary, by my admiration for your institutions as an old revolutionist as well as by my esteem and my gratitude as a Cuban. By participating in our hard struggle with the Spanish power Americans probably advanced our independence by several years, assuring to us at the same time the favorable outcome of a protracted and devasting war, and saving us from a corresponding period of hate, bloodshed, and ruin. Later, in a demoralized and discouraged community, with their better and, for us, novel methods, they corrected pernicious errors, offsetting the defects of negligence and leveling obstacles that the past had laid across our path to a new life, whereby wider and brighter prospects were opened up to us. And now, if you counsel us in the difficulties of national life, pointing out for their avoidance dangers born of inexperience, excusable in a community undergoing radical changes in organization and government by bitter struggling, it constitutes what is known as "a policy of prevention"; there being nothing reprehensible in your exercise of an office operated for our own preservation and profit, and our failure to take advantage of the benefits it offers would be blameworthy in us, inasmuch as we are not to be held responsible for the fatalities of history, nor of the time and place in which we entered upon national life. Nor have we been the first whom, because of weakness, you have sought to admonish as to error or injustice, foreseeing calamity and disaster, since in difficult or perilous circumstances the constant or direct action of your Government in American affairs, almost from the beginning of the last century till its end, with their assent and often with their compliance, imposed timely rectifications on even strong governments and powerful nations, even as in Cuba itself—in spite of its great, secular and glorious titles—the earnest words of your Presidents have called attention insistently to the dangers toward which its blindness and pride were dragging it long before finally issuing against it a sentence from which there was no appeal.

Knowing, thus, our conditions and your expressed purposes we should be too suspicious and skeptical if we still feared lest, through some evil inspiration of violence or through unspeakable motives, the stability of our national institutions were threatened; the more in that you, too, Mr. Secretary, have just proclaimed in the very heart of the continent that your country is too great and too honest to covet foreign sovereignty and too extensive to need another's territory; that not in vain has an uninterrupted heredity of virtue and culture separated immeasurably from the violence of passion the luminous serenity of justice, nor from savage times the present epochs of democracy and righteousness, and that the same distance lies in the moral world between the chaotic and dark soul of Tamerlane and the pure and immaculate spirit of George Washington.

Moreover, Mr. Secretary, we need you in the entire regulation of our national life, as, for many and diverse reasons, you need us, and therefore our common purpose should be in mutual usefulness by the giving and exchange of reciprocal and equivalent services; although it is clear that for the fulfillment of such worthy aims it is indispensable that neither here nor elsewhere should it be permitted and much less proclaimed without due correction, by the lawless voice of usury or of mammon, that anyone can, by divine right, at his fancy, suppressing the Republic by the scratch of a pen, reinstall Cuba as a subject colony; for, if we do not live by our own right and if our condition is that of a tenant, subject at will to alien caprices and interests, there is neither dignity in our lives, nor an authority to be respected in the State, nor any possibility whatever of true order and honorable and permanent peace. The interests that gained profit or were enriched in the public upheaval and interventions brought about by circumstances would be well satisfied and glad if the halcyon days of their power and predominance were to return; but for that very reason the Cuban people would be, indeed, unfortunate.

Only a few weeks ago the people of this city rendered their last tribute of pious regard over the remains of the sailors who perished on the Maine, and in great crowds gathered along the shore and followed with bated breath the last voyage of the fantastic ship. Yonder on the horizon, as the evening fell, what was left of the fearful catastrophe—the mutilated hull—was submerged forever; but in every Cuban, as in so many American homes, hearts beat as one remembering past days of anxiety, pain, and glory, and in the former as in the latter the tragic remembrance of the Maine and of that sinister night on which by the glow of that great disaster this new American nation was brought to life was evoked with religious unction. Born midst such exceptional circumstances, fruit of such labors, Cuba feels that the very roots of her national life and of her rights are planted and nourished in the conscience of the American nation; and so, trusting and grateful, she now extends her loyal hand to her powerful and noble friend. When, as a reward for your triumphant effort, the two seas separated by the Isthmus since remote ages shall be joined in one embrace, should their waves, like the folded cloak of the Roman ambassador, hide the blessings of peace or the horrors of war, Cuba, satisfied and content in its happy independence, will enjoy with you the incalculable benefits of that universal prosperity which is approaching as the necessary result of such a marvelous modification of the continent. And you may be sure, likewise, that in the hour of danger and of conflict your soldiers will not fight, should it be necessary to do so, with such enthusiasm as, for its own independence and in your aid, our people would fight, knowing as they do that in the present state of the world and in the critical eventualities of an uncertain and not far-distant future never shall the Cuban flag be more secure of respect abroad than when close to the beneficent shadow of your own, which strewn with stars, symbols of real nations in the full glow of life, prefigures the mystic and glorious galaxy of right. And therefore it is its high function, in conformity to tradition and purpose, to create free commonwealths and new republics throughout the continent and not—as those who outrage her name by invoking her power in furtherance of inconceivable enmities and ignoble interests—to be the threat and scourge of weak nations. But if the relentless purpose which iniquitous prophets of evil have been announcing should ever be fulfilled by reason of the changes and weaknesses to which humanity is subject, surely some unheard-of portent would befall; perhaps that majestic woman standing on Bedloe Island in the great estuary would loose her metal girdle and extinguish in the seething waves the gigantic torch that illumines the vast ocean and the conscience of man, while a fearsome clamor sprung from a terrified disenchantment would be reechoed from wave to wave and from height to height, proclaiming to the darkness of the world that Liberty was no more.

Never, however, shall such a misfortune take place, far more grievous and fatal than if at a moment's notice the light of all the stars should be extinguished. Wherefore allow me to be the mouthpiece of hope and love, in the sincere trust, Mr. Secretary, that you may enjoy a long and happy life of honor and of glory; that your illustrious President may be in all circumstances, as heretofore, the noble friend of Cuba; and that, crowned with blessings, in the prosperity of a spotless fame, your great nation may be now, and in centuries to come, protector of the law, ægis of the weak, example to the strong, firm foundation of civilization, palladium of republican America, realizing its great destiny as it circles in its huge orbit like a benign star, in harmony with all human interests and amidst the blessings of all the nations of the earth.

Reply of Mr. Knox.

Mr. President and Gentlemen: It has been my high privilege to be the President's chosen instrument for conveying to the independent nations of the Caribbean at this time, when the completion of the Panama Canal is near, a message of fraternal good will and an assurance, if, indeed, assurance were necessary, of the deep sense of responsibility felt by the Government and people of the United States that the great work which we have undertaken shall helpfully contribute to the well-being of the commonwealths of the Western World and be instrumental in bringing closer all the peoples of the Americas, inspiring them with broader confidence, more intimate sympathy, and more practical reciprocal helpfulness in the promotion of their mutual advantage and coordinate development. This was the message I carried, not alone to the peoples of the Carribean littoral but to all the countries of Latin America, emphasizing the sincerity of purpose and the purity of motive which have animated the United States in all its dealings with Latin America. As I said at Panama, intelligent consideration of the relations of the United States to the other American republics makes it clear that our policies have been without a trace of sinister motive or design, craving neither sovereignty nor territory.

The special purpose of my mission having been accomplished, it is alike appropriate and gratifying that on my homeward journey I should have the opportunity to get into closer personal touch with the one sovereign people of the whole Western World who are, above all, in a position to know and appreciate the broad and essentially conscientious policy of Anglo-Saxon America toward Latin America. So far as Cuba is concerned, our record speaks for itself. It is consistent and unblemished. It was formulated and proclaimed before the first shot was fired at Manila initiating the conflict to free from a crushing despotism "this fairest land the eye had ever seen" and which, happily, ended in gaining a free Cuba for free Cubans. That policy has been lived up to ever since. It needs no reiterative protestations. It is a constant, vital entity, needing not to be galvanized into spasmodic action; neither should its true import be dulled by wearisome repetition. Good faith is a thing that proves itself by deeds, not words. Our deeds in respect to the Cuban people are before you. Look to them for fresh assurance—if there be any doubting Thomas who thinks he needs it—that the United States stands firmly as the true, wholehearted friend of Cuba, glad of the work we have done for the Cuban people and ready to aid them to conserve the civic and material benefits which it was our good fortune to be instrumental in helping them to win.

First among these benefits is self-government. We hold that all peoples are fit to work out the highest ideals of self-government by creating for themselves and by their own efforts a healthy national life, inspired by the safe and sane exercise of the popular will, homogeneous in all its parts, free from radical weakness or corporeal blemish, self-respecting and imbued with respect for the rights of all at home and abroad. Providence has called upon free Cuba to be a model state among the popular commonwealths of the world and has opened the way to the achievement of that noble purpose. That is the goal for which we have, with you, spent our blood and treasure and to which our earnest efforts will ever be directed. The beginning of Cuban political life was the affirmation of the brotherhood of the American and Cuban peoples. Let us ever be brothers.

I speak to you, with all the earnestness I may, the thoughts that rise at this time, when Cuba stands on the threshold of a new era of even greater prosperity and progress by reason of being a natural gateway to the great Isthmian Canal and being destined, in the inevitable logic of events, to share in the almost incalculable possibilities to spring from the new channel to be opened to the world's commerce under a fresh and controlling impetus. It makes a newer world of the New World of Columbus. As I said at Panama, "In this new world we must be found drawn closer by sympathies and mutual esteem, and working in harmony toward beneficent ends. This must be so, for our greatest interests are those that are common to us all." We must not forget that in order to work together toward common ends each co-worker must be in a position to do his effective share of the common task. Even as the capacity of the individual workman is dependent on soundness of body and mind, so the potential efficiency of a community is measured by the homogeneous perfection of its civic organization and by the logical soundness of the public mind that directs its operations. While liberty is attained through patriotic valor, yet it is only through fraternity and unselfish coordination that it is perpetuated. The crisis in the life of any nation that has thrown off the yoke of tyranny is the period of rehabilitation. When the cohesive bonds of a common peril are relaxed by the removal of the danger and liberty succeeds oppression, unselfish fraternity must be substituted for the unity which a common danger furnished during the struggle for national rights. A people liberated from oppressive tyranny is no better off if unrestrained selfishness, which almost inevitably leads to anarchy, is the result. A people so situated can not profitably exercise the right of self-government unless they work faithfully together with singleness of aim. Mistrust, jealousy, selfishness, aloofness, and apathy will rob a people of their birthright. There is always more to unite than to separate all classes of citizens, and in Cuba, as in all republics, all classes should be alert in the consciousness of their civic duties and not commit the destinies of their country to the hands of the few who, with nothing to lose and everything to gain, make a business of the politics of their country.

It is the fervent prayer of my Government and my countrymen that free Cuba may abide steadfastly in the high station to which Providence has called her, sturdy with the strength of stable self-control, free from the infirmities that beset weak peoples, and earnest in the path of self-development.

Coming among you as I do, the cordiality of the welcome I have received makes it impossible to realize that I am in a strange land, among strange kinsfolk. I feel, rather, that I am of your brotherhood, as you are of mine. I come, too, at an auspicious time, when the association of feeling between my country and yours is made closer by the sad memories attending the removal of the wreck of the Maine. The waves of ocean have clasped that ill-fated ship in their eternal embrace, and your beautiful harbor is no longer marred by the presence of a gloomy monument of national resentment and strife. As the sun rises upon the unbroken expanse of your noble bay, it brings a message of oblivion of the dark past and of encouragement for the new Cuba, strong in the possession of rightful strength and at peace with all the world.

RAISING OF THE WRECK OF THE U. S. S. "MAINE."[1]

No. 941.]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Habana, June 19, 1911.

SIR: I have the honor to report that in view of the progress made in the work on the Maine and of the probability that it may be possible within a few days to remove any remains of the officers or men of the United States Navy which may be found in the wreck, President Gómez has issued a decree, No. 466, dated the 16th instant and officially published in the Gaceta Oficial No. 142 of June 17, to the effect that "as a special demonstration of sympathy for the sailors of the Navy of the United States who lost their lives in the explosion," honors are to be paid to their remains. These honors are to consist in—

1. the putting at half mast of the flag on all military posts and national buildings in Habana when the flag is half-masted on the vessel conveying the remains;
2. the firing of a gun every half hour from sunrise to sunset on the day that the funeral celebration takes place on board that vessel, and the furnishing of a military and naval escort;
3. the firing of a salute of twenty-one guns from La Cabaña fortress, at intervals of one minute, as that vessel leaves port for the United States, the whole garrison being paraded at attention on the parapets of the fort as the vessel passes and the band playing a funeral march, which is to end when the vessel has passed the Morro, whereupon the flag is to be raised to full mast and the band is to play the American and Cuban national airs; and
4. the accompanying of that vessel by two vessels of the Cuban National Marine as long as she is in waters under Cuban jurisdiction, which on leaving her on the high seas are to render the customary honors.

While suggesting that I be instructed to convey to the Cuban Government an appropriate expression of thanks at the proper time for this demonstration of sympathy,

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 10, 1912.

SIR: Under date of December 6, 1910, President Gómez requested in a letter addressed to the President[1] that a part of the battleship Maine be delivered to the Republic of Cuba for memorial purposes. Subsequently the Secretary of Public Works of Cuba addressed a letter to the engineer office in charge, asking that the after-turret of the vessel intact, with its guns and their mounts, be furnished for such purpose.

Under authority of the Act of Congress approved December 22, 1911,[2] I have this day approved the transfer of the said after-turret intact, with guns and their mounts and some of the shells belonging to same, to the Republic of Cuba for the purpose above indicated, and have the honor to request that the Department of State will so inform the President of the Republic of Cuba.

A copy of the President's letter to President Gómez on the subject is also transmitted herewith.[1]

SIR: The Department is advised by the Secretary of War that on December 6, 1910, the President of Cuba, in a letter addressed to the President, requested that a part of the battleship Maine might be delivered to the Republic of Cuba for memorial purposes. At a later date the Cuban Secretary of Public Works addressed a letter to the engineer officer in charge of the work of raising the Maine, asking that the after-turret of the vessel intact with its guns and their mounts might be furnished for that purpose.

Mr. Stimson states that under authority of the Act of Congress approved December 22, 1911, he has approved the transfer of the said after-turret intact with guns and their mounts and some of the shells belonging to them, to the Republic of Cuba for the purpose above indicated.

You will communicate this information to the President of the Republic of Cuba.

U. S. SS. North Carolina and Birmingham will arrive at Habana March 4, or at about that time, as may hereafter be settled, for removal of wreck of the Maine. You will so inform the Cuban Government.

You will request that permission be given by the Cuban Government, if practicable, for a suitable force of men under arms from the above-mentioned vessels to land on Cuban soil in order appropriately to participate in the ceremonies which the Cuban Government contemplates holding to mark the transfer of the Maine victims to the resting place on shore.

After appropriate ceremonies these vessels will accompany the wreck of the Maine as it is towed to sea, under direction of the military authorities. A salute of twenty-one minute-guns will be fired from the senior ship simultaneously with the similar salute which it is understood will be fired from shore as the vessels leave port. The salute will be started by the Cuban battery, each gun of which will be followed at a five-second interval by gun from the senior ship.

When the wreck is sunk in deep water outside the harbor appropriate ceremonies will be observed, after which the North Carolina and Birmingham will proceed to Hampton Roads.

I am verbally informed that permission will be granted for the landing of an armed force.

The order of exercises will be announced in a decree, which the President is preparing, as follows:

1. Night of March third, bodies to be removed from Cabaña to Habana City Hall, where they will lie in state.

2. Officials, armed forces, and delegations who so request will stand guard.

3. Route from City Hall to point of shipment to be lined with forces of Cuban Army and Navy, national police and municipal band. Remains to be escorted by armed force from American ships, who will be accorded proper honors.

4. Cuban Navy will receive remains at Caballería wharf and deliver them on board North Carolina in time for ships to sail by four p. m.

5. On departure of ships saluting station at Cabaña will fire salute of 21 minute-guns. As ships pass, all troops will form on parapets and stand at attention. Funeral march to be played from Morro during passage of ships, ceasing when they have passed beyond fortress, when flag will be hoisted to full staff.

6. Ships of Cuban Navy will escort wreck to point where it is sunk. At moment of sinking, crew of flagship will render appropriate honors and military band will play American and Cuban national airs.

7. Officials and delegations will attend ceremony aboard Cuban vessels assigned for purpose.

8. Throughout the day all military posts and public buildings in Cuba will place flags at half mast. From dawn to moment of sinking, Cabaña will fire gun every half hour.

9. Before leaving City Hall remains to be turned over by person designated by Cuban Government to person designated by American Government.

The Navy Department highly appreciates the honor contained in article four of the President's decree, relating to delivery by the Cuban Navy on board an American war vessel of the remains taken from the Maine. It would, however, be practically more expedient for the American Navy to receive the caskets at Caballería wharf and convey them to the North Carolina. You will urge upon the Cuban Government a modification of the arrangements to this effect.

The wreck of the Maine will probably not be removed before March 14.

ZAPATA SWAMP CONCESSION.

File No. 837.6112.

The American Minister to the Secretary of State.

[Extract.]

No. 327.]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Habana, July 5, 1912.

SIR: I have the honor to report that by Executive Decree No. 556, dated June 18 and published in the Gaceta Oficial of June 21, 1912, the President has granted, under the doubtful authority of Arts. 62 and 63 and minor provisions of the Law of Waters (Royal Decree of January 13, 1891), a concession to a company called the "Compañía Agricultora de Zapata", for the reclamation of the Ciénaga de Zapata, a swamp on the south coast of Cuba west of Cienfuegos containing approximately one thousand square miles. * * *

The project, which presumably contains plans and specifications of the proposed reclamation work and from which alone any idea as to the nature or extent of this work could be had, is not published.

The Ciénaga de Zapata largely consists of public lands, but there are many considerable tracts privately owned. It contains vast quantities of valuable timber and mangrove, and is Cuba's principal source of charcoal, the universal cooking fuel; these natural resources give it its principal if not its only value. Extensive charcoal operations have been going on there for many years, on privately owned as well as upon public lands under Government permits, which I understand afford a not inconsiderable source of public revenue.

The project of reclamation is merely a specious pretext for giving away incalculable millions in timber and charcoal woods. The project, if honestly undertaken for the reclamation of the land for agricultural purposes, would perhaps cost many millions of dollars, and it is very doubtful whether it would ever pay as a private enterprise. The company has eight years within which to finish its "reclamation" work, and there is apparently no obligation as to what part or how much of it shall be done in the intervening years; and in that time the company could perhaps cut millions of dollars worth of wood, and then, without ulterior responsibility, throw up the reclamation enterprise as impracticable.

There has been a strong outburst of public opinion against the concession. Among the affected landowners is General Enrique Loynaz del Castillo, who in his characteristic style has addressed an open letter to Congress bitterly denouncing the transaction as the most scandalous yet attempted in the "Republic of Pillage". A bill has been introduced in the House of Representatives to investigate the transaction, and it is likely that affected private landowners will, if not bought off, fight the concession in the courts, for the quoted provisions of law[1] relating to insalubrious lands under which the concession is made clearly contemplate low lands and swamps in inhabited regions where they are a menace to public health, while this vast swamp has barely a handful of inhabitants who are engaged in exploiting its natural resources and it has never been regarded as a menace to the health of the distant settlements any more than are the rice fields and salt marshes of our own South Atlantic and Gulf States.

The concluding article of the decree of concession provides that—

> Within thirty days from the date of publication in the Gaceta Oficial, the concessionaire shall notify the Department of Public Works of the concessionaire's conformity with the provisions of this decree; whereupon that Department shall proceed to execute the appropriate instrument or act of concession. * * *

Until the execution of the instrument prescribed in the quoted provision, the concession does not become effective; and therefore there is still sufficient time in which to procure the suspension or revocation of the concession. Public opinion here is negligible, and only those people who have something at stake (who may be bought off in the meantime) will pay any attention to the matter after the first excitement subsides and the newspapers, appropriately "silenced", cease their attacks. It is not likely that anything will come of the Congressional investigation, even if the motion calling for it is carried.

Therefore the only apparent way to stop this * * * is for us to enter without delay an emphatic protest that will leave no doubt as to our disauthorization of the measure; unofficial representations of a lukewarm character demanding no specific action might be disregarded. * * * Various promoters have, I understand, for many years sought this concession, former petitions having been summarily dismissed by the Wood, Palma and Magoon administrations, and now that the present promoters have it almost in their grasp a determined stand is necessary in order to dislodge them.

Our objections might appropriately be predicated upon the general principle of our interest in the finances of Cuba as affected by the alienation of natural resources for inadequate consideration, and upon Article V of the Platt Amendment regarding sanitary plans. If in the exercise of our rights under Art. V we insisted upon a thorough and comprehensive reclamation of the land with rigid stipulations as to the amount of work to be done each year—reducing the exploitation of natural resources to an incidental opportunity, rather than as it now is, the main object of the concession—the project would, I am convinced, inevitably fall through.

Our objections, if any, should be embodied in a note to President Gómez, and in order to be timely should be presented as soon as possible. I therefore respectfully recommend that I be instructed by telegraph.

You will address a note to the Government of Cuba saying that to the Department of State, after such inquiry as has been feasible, the Zapata Swamp concession seems to be so clearly ill-advised a project, so improvident and reckless a waste of revenue and natural resources, that this Government is impelled to express to the Government of Cuba its emphatic disapproval of the same and its firm conviction that a measure so inimical to the interests of the Cuban people will not be suffered by the Government of Cuba to be put into operation when that Government shall have given it final consideration.

My Dear Mr. President: In pursuance of instructions from my Government, I have the honor to inform you that, upon such examination as my Government has been able to make of the so-called Zapata concession as contained in Decree No. 556, dated June 18 and published in the Gaceta Oficial of June 21, 1912, the project seems so clearly ill-advised and improvident and such a reckless wasting of public revenue and of natural resources which Cuba can ill afford to lose, that my Government is impelled to express to the Cuban Government its strong disapproval of the scheme and its firm conviction that, upon final consideration, the Cuban authorities will not suffer a measure so inimical to the interests of the Cuban people to be put into operation.

It affords me great pleasure, my dear Mr. President, to renew [etc.].

File No. 837.6112/2.

The American Minister to the Secretary of State.

[Telegram.—Paraphrase.]

American Legation,
Habana, July 19, 1912.

In accordance with your telegraphic instruction of July 17, and in the language thereof, I addressed a personal note to President

Gómez, who has just sent me a reply thereto of which the following is a translation:

My Dear Mr. Minister: I reply to your letter of yesterday addressed to me directly instead of through the Department of State—perhaps by way of unofficial advice or monition, for the protocol prescribes that Department as the channel of communication.

In that understanding, I wish only to tell you that Decree No. 556, of June 18 last, was issued in conformity with the laws in force in the exercise of the powers which those laws vest in me and in the fulfilment of my duty, on the strength of reports recommending such action as a measure in the interest of the salubrity of the territory involved and as highly beneficial to the country, in that it will bring about the cultivation of regions heretofore inundated and sterile.

The procedure resulting in the issuance of the decree has been long and minute, municipal and provincial authorities having reported favorably, as did also the Superior Board of Health; and the Government of Cuba has not wasted any revenues, nor granted realizable property, nor thrown away natural resources, but on the contrary will by its happy action convert an insalubrious and infected waste into an element of economic activity and national progress.

To bring into a state of production and to impart value to lands at present worthless has never anywhere in the world constituted, nor can it constitute, a loss or damage of any kind. The assertions to the contrary contained in your letter arise from a lack of knowledge of the necessary data of fact and law, or from ex parte statements of detractors or persons interested in creating a wrong impression. And doubtlessly attributable to these same causes is the frequent transmission through your Legation of contradictory advice to my Government concerning the work of its component branches in the same matter [sic].

I am, therefore, Mr. Minister, very far from believing that the project merits the condemnatory language of your letter.

On the other hand, Congress has requested, for investigation, and has been furnished with the administrative record; and any person whose interest may be unfavorably affected by the decree has recourse to the courts, which protect the rights of all. The Government of Cuba can not, in the exercise of powers inherent in the sovereignty of a free people, allow any supervision, interference or rectification [other] than that coming in proper form from either of those two branches, for the Platt Amendment and the Treaty which embodies it have no further scope than the following:

> The Government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence, the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property and individual liberty, and for discharging the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the Treaty of Paris on the United States now to be assumed and undertaken by the Government of Cuba.

This does not authorize or signify meddling [intromisión] in internal affairs, subjecting the acts of the administration to control or tutelage; for such a supervision or censorship would be destructive of the independence and dignity of the Republic, whose rights I can not allow to be restricted without incurring serious responsibility.

Just now the Government of which I am the head has shown its efficiency by preserving public peace and health in the face of rebellion and a fearful epidemic, and it fulfills all the obligations imposed by those pacts, which can not presuppose the renouncement of its power to legislate and administrate without the need of outside authorization or permission, nor the subordination of its judgment to extraneous orders, although coming from a nation to which Cuba is so fully grateful for its generous and correct conduct.

Nor did the Government of the United States help us to create the Republic in order later to despoil it of its sovereignty by systematic intervention in its internal affairs, interpreting the law of our mutual relations in the sense disclosed in the letter under reply, which would conduce to a régime incompatible with self-government and to a supervisory control not stipulated in our treaties.

And I have gone thus far into a discussion of the premises, Mr. Minister, because of your statement that you are acting in pursuance of instructions received from your Government. My Government defines the meaning and scope of the Platt Amendment and the Treaty of May 22, 1903, as these instruments would assuredly be defined by any jurisconsults who might examine their explicit text and by statesmen undesirous of violating our juridic status.

It affords me pleasure, my dear Mr. Minister, to renew to you the assurance of my highest consideration and respect.

José M. Gómez.

Besides the general tone of the above-quoted communication and the President's astounding observations as to our Government's rights in Cuba, in the original text there is a complete absence of the perfunctory polite phraseology so natural to the Spanish language and always hitherto employed by all members of the Cuban Government in their communications with me under all circumstances.

I respectfully call attention to the fact that tomorrow ends the thirty-day period of legal notice, and the President is likely to sign the contract immediately upon its termination, and urge that I be promptly instructed by telegraph.

SIR: Referring to your[2] telegram dated July 10, 10 p. m., wherein you transmit to the Department a translation of a note received by you from the President of Cuba in response to your communication addressed to him regarding the proposed Zapata Swamp Concession, you are now directed to acknowledge this note, adding, after the acknowledgment, the following language:

[2] Mr. Beaupré's.

> Without at this time attempting fully to set forth the position of the United States I am directed by the Secretary of State of the United States to present to Your Excellency the reply of the United States to your note under acknowledgment in the following language:
> "Apart from any question as to the legality or illegality of the concessions and fiscal measures adopted or projected by the Cuban Government and objected to by this Government, it must be evident to the Cuban Government that if the apprehension of this Government as to the effect of these concessions and measures is well-founded, then it is inevitable that ultimately a situation will result requiring intervention by the United States. In any event this Government believes that the Cuban Government is pursuing a fiscal policy which will ultimately lead to a situation requiring intervention, and therefore, inasmuch as from the standpoint of both Governments intervention is not desired, it must be evident to the Cuban Government that the United States is not only justified but is acting in accordance with its rights and obligations in warning the Cuban Government against the course it is pursuing.
> "The United States transferred the control of the Island of Cuba to a government organized in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution adopted by the people of Cuba recognizing certain rights on the part of the United States, among which are those set forth in Article III of the Appendix to the Cuban Constitution, which article, in accordance with a condition imposed by the United States at that time, under the authority of an Act of Congress, has since been embodied in the Treaty of May 22, 1903, between the United States and Cuba. This article which thus forms part of the fundamental law of Cuba as well as a treaty stipulation between the two Governments is in terms as follows:
> > That the Government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence, the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property and individual liberty, and for discharging the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the Treaty of Paris on the United States, now to be assumed and undertaken by the Government of Cuba.
> "Clearly this right of intervention, which was accepted and recognized by the Cuban people in the manner above described, entitles this Government to caution the Cuban Government against adopting an improvident or otherwise objectionable fiscal policy on the ground that such policy might ultimately, either by itself or in connection with general conditions in Cuba, produce a situation there requiring the United States to intervene for any of the purposes recited in this article; so also it is clear that this Government would be justified for the same reasons in urging upon the Cuban Government the advisability of reforming and modifying any objectionable projects in order to guard in every possible way against the eventualities contemplated in this article.
> "Furthermore, it is evident that in case intervention becomes necessary, questions will arise as to the legality of any concessions or fiscal measures which by their own consequences or in connection with general conditions in Cuba have made intervention necessary. The legality of such acts can not be permitted to go unchallenged, and the United States will be at liberty in the event of intervention to take such steps as may be appropriate and necessary to undo and redress any wrongs which the Cuban people may have suffered at the hands of the Cuban Government.
> "For these reasons the Government of the United States feels that in Your Excellency's note under reply you have misinterpreted the purpose of this Government in expressing its disapproval of the particular concession under consideration, and that the expression of its objections to this and other concessions and measures affecting the financial condition of Cuba is justified by the apprehension which this Government feels as to the disastrous results which are threatened by the fiscal policy pursued by the Cuban Government and should not be regarded by that Government as unfriendly acts on the part of the United States.'"

The Department will note that in the fourth paragraph of his note, President Gómez draws a comparison between the terms of the note in acknowledgement and Mr. Beaupré's note of July 18th, which—although, as the Department will perceive by reference to Mr. Beaupré's despatch No. 343, of July 18, drafted in the language of the Department's telegraphic instruction—he seems to regard as unnecessarily harsh in tone and distortive of the "good-will and loyal sentiments" of the United States.

President Gómez also states in his note that he has repealed the Zapata decree, but as a matter of fact he has, as I am informed, merely "suspended execution", which it would seem may be accomplished at any time.

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
Habana, August 23, 1912.

MR. CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES: I have had the honor duly to receive your note referring and in reply to my note of the 19th ultimo to his excellency Arthur M. Beaupré, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America, answering the note which he had addressed me directly the day before.

I have duly noted the contents of your note, as well as the interpretation therein conveyed which the Government of the United States has through you seen fit to place upon Article 3 of the Appendix to the Cuban Constitution, from which your Government deduces the justification of its attitude towards the Cuban Government during the last few months and, particularly, in connection with a decree of mine which I have already repealed and one of the recent bills of Congress which I was prepared to veto.

The interpretation which your Government has placed upon Article 3 of the Appendix to our Constitution, as the basis for the assertion of certain rights and obligations upon its part, is very different from the interpretation of a true and proper conception of sovereignty which inspired my note of the 19th ultimo; but it would be idle at this time to reopen the question and make comparisons, especially when such an effort would not be productive of any appreciable utility.

Cognizant now of the sense in which your Government desires that we should regard its attitude, I am glad to know that none of its acts should be considered by us as inspired by other than the good-will and loyal sentiments which guide the United States in its relations with the Republic of Cuba. It seems to me, nevertheless, meet to call your attention and that of the Department of State at Washington to the fact that the noblest intentions and the most generous purposes may be distorted and made to appear otherwise, according to the form in which they are expressed; wherefore the notable difference is apparent at a glance between your note here in reference—notwithstanding that it expounds propositions of the gravest concern—and that of the 18th ultimo to which I duly replied, the text of which, had it been drafted by the Secretary of State of the United States, would in terms clearly have revealed the sentiments of affectionate cordiality towards Cuba which I am pleased to recognize on the part of the American nation and Government.

I desire you, Mr. Chargé d'Affaires, to communicate to your Government that the Cuban Government and I personally have never been animated by other than the most sincere purpose to maintain, and even to strengthen, the bonds of friendship and affection which fortunately have so long united the United States and Cuba for their common weal and happiness.

Sir: Referring to previous correspondence in regard to the Ciénaga de Zapata concession, I have the honor to enclose herewith copy of a letter and memorandum,[1] together with the accompanying blue print and pamphlet, handed me to-day by Mr. Isaac K. Champion, an American contractor of this city who states that he is interested in the company which seeks the concession. Mr. Champion says that he will in a few days submit the several papers mentioned in the memorandum as enclosures.

The blue print submitted shows the Ciénaga as lying, approximately, between Longitude 74° 15′ and 75° 30′, and—with a northerly curvature—Latitude 22° and 22° 30′. The land shown to the south, between the Ciénaga and the saltmarsh and sea, is the Peninsula de Zapata.

One of the objections to the concession was that the decree authorizing the grant did not seek to define the extent of the Ciénaga. This is important in view of the fact that hardly two maps show it alike, and many of them show it as extending all the way from Cienfuegos to Batabanó.

The chief objection to the concession was the opportunity that it apparently offered for the exploitation of timber resources. Mr. Champion says that there is no timber in the Ciénaga, and that the object of his company is exclusively to reclaim land for agricultural purposes. If this be true, and Mr. Champion's company is willing to waive in the concession all forestry rights and make the grant otherwise more specific, then practically the only objections which the Legation had in view when it reported upon this matter will have been removed.

The Acting Secretary of State to the American Consul General.

No. 306.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, October 24, 1912.

SIR: By Executive Decree No. 556 dated June 18, and published in the Gaceta Oficial of June 21, 1912, the President of Cuba granted to the Compañía Agricultora de Zapata, a concession for the reclamation of the Zapata Swamp. On July 17, the American Legation at Habana was instructed by telegram to address a note to the Government of Cuba in the sense of the following:

> After such an examination as the Department of State has found it possible to make, the Zapata Swamp project appears so clearly ill-advised and improvident and such a reckless wasting of revenue and of natural resources which the Government of Cuba can ill afford to lose, that the Government of the United States is impelled to express to the Cuban Government its strong disapproval of the scheme and its firm conviction that upon final consideration the Cuban authorities will not suffer a measure so inimical to the interests of the Cuban people to be put into operation.

To this the Government of Cuba replied, controverting the various allegations upon which the Department's opinion above stated was based and affirming that the concession is free from objection. About the middle of August, however, the Department was informed that President Gómez had repealed or suspended the decree granting the concession.

Recently, Mr. Isaac K. Champion, claiming to represent the concessionary company, has called at the Department and in continuation of his representations recently addressed to the Legation at Habana has, in an interview with the law officers of the Department, made answer to the various objections which have been leveled at the project, with a view to removing this Government's opposition.

He states that if this opposition is removed, the suspended decree will be revived and the concessionary company will undertake the projected work. His various statements have raised disputed issues of fact which he has been informed would be referred to Habana for investigation and report.

The Department accordingly transmits copies[1] of two letters received from Mr. Champion dated the third and eighth instant, which purport to sum up the conference between Mr. Champion and the law officers of the Department, and instructs you to make the desired investigation. In this investigation you will confer with the Legation, which has been instructed to cooperate with you. There is, of course, in the Legation's files a considerable record of the case up to the present time of which you may desire to make use.

It may be observed that, in view of the course which the matter has taken, you will realize that as a prerequisite to its final decision in the matter the Department desires the most careful and thorough investigation possible of the various issues raised, to the end that any action which it may hereafter take in the matter may be based upon a wholly satisfactory and adequate knowledge of the facts involved.

To clarify the issues for the investigation, the Department also encloses as a supplement to Mr. Champion's two letters mentioned herein before, a memorandum of the conference between Mr. Champion and the law officers of the Department with certain suggestions respecting the desired investigation.[1] You will understand, of course, that your investigations should not necessarily be confined to the issues presented in the enclosed memorandum, but properly should include any other considerations which may seem to you to be relevant and important.

If necessary, you may go to the Zapata region and there conduct such direct investigations as may seem to you advisable. Your report should be furnished to the Department at as early a date as practicable.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of the Department's instruction No. 306 of October 24, 1912, with the several inclosures, all relating to the concession originally granted to the Compañía Agricultora de Zapata.

In accordance with the instruction I will attempt an investigation and report upon the subject, but I must state in advance that in order to obtain the facts upon which a satisfactory conclusion as to the issues between the Department and the representative of the former concessionary company could be based, it will probably be necessary for me to go to the Zapata Swamp region, and perhaps into the swamp itself, which implies time, since until the dry season comes the district is practically inaccessible. But little light upon the matter could be gained in Habana, where of the actual conditions, characteristics and topography of the swamp about as much is known as of Central Africa.

However, I will gather such data as may be available here and in other cities, and later will inform the Department whether it will be necessary to go to the swamp. I do not believe that much haste in the matter is enforced by consideration of the interests of the would-be concessionary company, for I am well assured that no member of the group is anxious or in a hurry to go there, and I do not believe that any representative can get to work in the region in the immediate future unless he uses an aeroplane or hydroplane, or some such craft.

Sir: I have the honor to inform the Department that pursuant to the instruction in relation to a report upon the matter of the Zapata Swamp concession, I have arranged with Mr. Champion, of the concessionary company, to accompany me to the swamp, and will leave here, unless something unforeseen prevents, on November 10. I am sure that this is the only feasible method of reaching any definite conclusion about the general characteristics of the swamp. The more I have inquired into the matter in Habana the more convinced have I become that the information about the region extant in Habana is based upon the wildest hearsay and is more or less incorrect. At all events I do not consider it reliable, and although the trip to the swamp will naturally be a hard and difficult one, I prefer to make such investigation as may be possible rather than to trust to the opinions of those who have never seen it.

I will try to accomplish this journey in the smallest space of time possible and as soon as I return to Habana will endeavor to forward my report with little further delay.

SIR: I have the honor, in obedience to the Department's instruction No. 306 of October 24, 1912, to transmit herewith my report[1] upon the matter of the concession granted to the Compañía Agricultora de Zapata, and the investigation of some of the territory indicated in the concession. To this work I have devoted considerable time and therein have sought every available source of information within my knowledge, as well as having gone into the swamp where by actual observation my own conclusions have been reached.

With the findings, as contained in the report, I am absolutely and thoroughly satisfied, representing as they do my sincere and honest opinion as well as an exactly truthful and unbiased statement of fact as the features appeared to me.

JAMES L. RODGERS.

NOTE.—The conclusions of Mr. Rodgers' report are, briefly, that Mr. Champion's statements "as to the character of the area included in the provisions of the concession, the timber thereon and the difficulties to be encountered in reclamation * * * are almost exact. * * * The Ciénaga de Zapata is merely a great swamp * * *; it does not contain enough timber to pay the cost of even the effort to get it out under the most favorable conditions. * * * The opening of such an area to cultivation, if only for rice-planting * * * would be of great benefit. * * * There is every reason to believe that every intent in the matter is a legitimate one."

No. 675.] NOVEMBER 23, 1912.

SIR: I have the honor to state that I desire to make an amendment to my report upon the Zapata Swamp concession (Despatch No. 674 of November 20, 1912). It was stated that "on the face of the proposition it looks like a lucrative endeavor since the land values would certainly reach high figures and that shortly." I wish this to be understood as meaning that under a successful and economical drainage of the swamp the land for agricultural purposes would be valuable as it certainly would be rich. Assuming that the theory that the swamp can be drained successfully and economically is correct, the view I have given would be justified, but as there is yet no certainty about the matter either from an engineering or a financial standpoint, it is well, in the desire to do exact justice, to make this explanation, and I do it without solicitation from the interested parties of course, because they do not know the nature of my report.

[1] Not printed, but see note following Mr. Rodgers' communication.

The land of the Ciénaga de Zapata as at present is absolutely worthless as an entirety, and it cannot be reclaimed unless a very large amount of money is spent, whether it is an easy or difficult engineering work. That much is sure.

IMPOSITION IN THE UNITED STATES OF AN INHERITANCE TAX ON NON-RESIDENT DANISH HEIRS. APPLICATION OF ARTICLE 7 OF THE TREATY OF 1826 BETWEEN DENMARK AND THE UNITED STATES.

File No. 811.5124/5.]

The Danish Legation to the Department of State.

[Memorandum.]

According to the statutes of the State of Iowa, an inheritance tax of 10–20% is imposed on inheritance of property left in that State when the heirs are non-resident aliens, in addition to the tax of 5% imposed on heirs either United States citizens or resident aliens of the same degree of kinship to the decedent.

In the estate of the late Ane Margrethe Andersen, born Hansen, of which C. L. Hansen is an administrator, and which estate, with will, is now before the District Court of Iowa in and for Mitchell County, the State Treasurer of Iowa claims the right to impose upon the portion of the estate to be distributed amongst heirs residents of Denmark, a collateral inheritance tax of 15%+5%, or 20%.

The attention of the State Treasurer has been called to the terms of Article 7 of the Convention of Commerce and Navigation concluded between Denmark and the United States on April 26, 1826, which reads as follows:

> The United States and His Danish Majesty mutually agree that no higher or other duties, charges or taxes of any kind shall be levied in the territories or dominions of either party, upon any personal property, money or effects of their respective citizens or subjects, on the removal of the same from their territories or dominions reciprocally, either upon the inheritance of such property, money or effects or otherwise, than are or shall be payable in each State upon the same, when removed by a citizen or subject of such State, respectively.

Against the application of this article, to the effect of placing the said Danish heirs on equality of right with citizens or subjects of the United States, and therefore also citizens or subjects of the State of Iowa, the State Treasurer of that State makes the claim that in comparatively recent cases construing collateral inheritance tax statutes and treaties, such as the one referred to, it has been held that the treaty does not apply to the estate of a citizen or subject of the United States dying at home and leaving property here to subjects of the foreign country.

The State Treasurer further states that article 7 of the Danish-American convention relates to property belonging to citizens of Denmark that may be located in the United States and passes as an inheritance to subjects of Denmark; but that it does not apply where the owner of the property is a subject of the United States, owning property here that passes to subjects of Denmark.

Against this decision the Danish Minister hereby has the honor to enter a protest.

This protest is based,

1. upon the wording of said Article 7, which does not consider the status of the testator, but merely that of the legatee. It is the freedom of removal of property that is mutually assured, for the benefit of the person in whose favor the transfer of "personal property, money or effects," "upon inheritance or otherwise" takes place, on terms of equality with citizens or subjects of the State from which such removal is made;

2. upon the fact that this same article has, in several previous cases, been respected in the sense as mentioned under 1; not only in other States (Washington for instance) but even previously in the State of Iowa, in consequence of consular representations.

The Danish Minister, being of the opinion that the question under contention is one over which the State courts have no exclusive authority, ventures to submit the case to the consideration of the Department of State, with the respectful request that such action as can properly be taken by the Federal authorities be taken for information as to the position of the United States of America as one party to the convention above referred to in regard to the question involved.

THE DANISH LEGATION,
Washington, January 27, 1912.

In continuation of the memorandum of this Legation dated the 27th ultimo, in regard to the interpretation of Article 7 of the Danish-American Convention of Commerce and Navigation in its application to the case now pending before the District Court of Iowa, for the settlement of the estate of Ane Margrethe Andersen, the Danish Minister begs to submit the following supplementary information, proving that the claim of the Consul of Denmark at Chicago, with jurisdiction over the State of Iowa, to equality of treatment of non-resident Danish heirs with resident heirs, has on a previous occasion been acceded to by the proper authorities.

The estate in question then was that of Jens Andersen, before the District Court of Pottawattamie County, State of Iowa. The non-resident Danish heirs were brother and sister of the deceased. An extra inheritance tax was imposed of 5%. Counsel for the Danish Consulate, Messrs. Harl and Tinley of Council Bluffs protested against this assessment, basing such protest on the text of the said Article 7; and on November 30, 1908, Messrs Harl and Tinley were able to report to their representative in Chicago, Messrs Bastrup & O'Neil, 323 Reaper Block, the successful result of their protest, by the letter which is given in extract as follows:

Gentlemen: In re Estate of Jens Andersen. In the above-entitled estate our contention with reference to the amount of inheritance tax was presented to the State Treasurer, and he concedes the obligation to pay upon the same basis of [sic] a resident of this State. * * * Yours truly, (signed) Harl & Tinley.

In that case, consequently, the State Treasurer agreed with the views as presented by the Consul of Denmark.

The Department of State has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the memorandum of the Danish Legation, dated the 27th ultimo, in regard to the interpretation of Article 7 of the Treaty of April 26, 1826, between the United States and Denmark, in connection with the settlement and distribution of the estate of Ane Margrethe Andersen, now before the Mitchell County (Iowa) District Court.

In reply the Department of State has the honor to advise the Danish Legation that this case is receiving the attentive consideration of this Government, and that the Legation will be informed of the result at the earliest practicable moment.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 7, 1912.

File No. 811.5124/8.]

The Danish Legation to the Department of State.

[Memorandum.]

The final report to the District Court of the State of Iowa, in and for Plymouth County, from the Administrator of the Estate of Metta K. Peterson, deceased, a resident of Le Mars, Plymouth County, Iowa, was subscribed and sworn to by the Administrator, Frank Spiecker, on the 26th day of December, 1911, before Nelson Miller, Notary Public in and for said Plymouth County, Iowa.

The Administrator's report states in part:

> That all of said estate passes collaterally. That the inheritance tax levied by the State of Iowa in such cases has been paid to the Treasurer of the State of Iowa at Des Moines, and the Treasurer's receipt for the same is filed in the office of the Clerk of this Court.

The report furthermore states:

> That one of the heirs of said estate, viz: Karoline Krag, lives in Copenhagen, Denmark. That the rate of inheritance tax upon that portion of said estate inherited by her is 10%, and the total amount of said tax was, on her share, $711.06. That another of the heirs is Marie Johanson, lives in Germany, and by virtue of treaty covenants with the German Empire the tax on her portion is 5%, and the total sum $355.53. That the remaining heir, P. H. Schmidt, lives in Iowa, and the amount of tax on his portion is $355.53.

The reason for the higher taxation of the heir living in Copenhagen, Denmark, is not given in the Administrator's report, whereas a letter from Nelson Miller, lawyer, First National Bank Building, Le Mars, Iowa, dated January 19th, 1912, and addressed to M.

Godskesen, attorney, Copenhagen, Denmark, on the same matter says in part:

> The tax on the share going to Germany and on that remaining in Iowa is only 5%, and therefore you will see from the papers that Mrs. Krag gets $355.53 less than either one of the other two heirs. The reason for this is that the treaty between Germany and the United States forbids this country from tax'ng German citizens any larger sum than it does its own citizens, whereas the treaty with Denmark makes no such provisions.

If the higher taxation as used against the Danish heir is based on the view as expressed by Mr. Miller, it rests on an error. Renewing his protest contained in the memorandum of this Legation of January 27th, 1912, in regard to the estate of the late Ane Margrethe Andersen, now before the District Court of Iowa, in and for Mitchell County, and referring to the subsequent memorandum of February 2nd, 1912, the Danish Minister has the honor to submit the case of Karoline Krag to the consideration of the Department of State with the respectful request that such action as can properly be taken by the Federal authorities, be taken, in order to obtain the reimbursement of the sum of $355.53 to said Karoline Krag, this amount having been levied in excess of what can lawfully be levied in accordance with Article 7 of the Convention of Commerce and Navigation concluded between Denmark and the United States on April 26th, 1826, and which reads as follows: [Article 7 of the treaty is here quoted, as in the first foregoing memorandum.]

SIR: In further reply to your Legation's memorandum of April 17 last, in the matter of the inheritance tax on the share of the estate of Metta K. Peterson inherited by Karoline Krag, a Danish subject, of Copenhagen, I have the honor to advise you that the Department is in receipt of a report on this case from the Attorney General, from which it appears that the tax has been paid and the administration closed, Karoline Krag, by her attorney, having signed a receipt for "all money and other property to which I am [she is] entitled in said matter in full." Under these circumstances the Attorney General doubts whether Karoline Krag would have sufficient ground upon which to base a suit for the recovery of the inheritance tax, even under an Iowa State statute permitting the correction of mistakes in probate proceedings by a suit in a court of equity, as the court would be likely to consider that the plaintiff, having receipted in full for her share of the estate, after a final report had been properly filed with the Probate Court by the administrator, and due notice thereof given to the heirs, is estopped from questioning the proceedings of the Probate Court.

If, however, Karoline Krag desires to institute proceedings under this statute in a court of equity, this Department understands that the Department of Justice will be glad, if need be, to assist her attorney in every proper way during the progress of the suit.

Peterson, bequeathed to residents of Denmark, I have the honor to enclose for your information and for an expression of your wishes as to the further action, if any, to be taken with respect thereto, a copy of a letter of the 8th instant from the United States Attorney for the Northern District of Iowa, and with it a copy of the order of the District Court of Mitchell County, Iowa, holding against the contention of the Government in the case of the Andersen estate.

The United States Attorney is of the opinion that there is sufficient merit in the contention of this Government to justify an appeal to the Supreme Court of the State in the Andersen case.

This case involved the same question as is involved in the estate of Mrs. Andersen, except that the Peterson case has been fully settled and the administrator discharged; the only step that can be availed of now is to apply to the Executive Council for the refund of the tax.

OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES ATTORNEY,
Storm Lake, Iowa, August 8th, 1912.

SIR: Referring to the matter of the estate of Anne [sic] Margretha Andersen, in the District Court in and for Mitchell County in this District, I would say that on Feb. 17th you sent me a memorandum of the Danish Legation addressed to the Secretary of State and his letter to the Attorney General in regard to an inheritance tax sought to be collected by the Treasurer of the State of Iowa from the share of the estate of said decedent which passed under the terms of the will to beneficiaries who are residents and citizens of the Kingdom of Denmark. Acting under your instructions I intervened in behalf of the United States in said matter and set up the treaty of 1826 between the United States and Denmark and thereupon the State Treasurer of Iowa demurred to said petition of intervention and the demurrer was presented on extended oral argument to the court.

I am just in receipt of an order from the court in which he holds against the contention of the Government and that the terms of the treaty with Denmark do not apply in this case. I enclose herewith a copy of the findings of the court in said matter.

The only way that this can be reversed is by appeal to the Supreme Court of the State of Iowa. I am of the opinion that there is sufficient merit in the contention of the Government in this regard to justify the appeal.

Please advise me of your further wishes in the matter.

Yours very truly,

F. F. FAVILLE.

[Sub-inclosure.]

Order of the District Court of Mitchell County, Iowa, holding against the contention of the Government in the case of the Andersen estate.

In the matter of the Estate of Anne [sic] Margrethe Andersen, deceased.

This is a proceeding in probate to close the estate of the decedent, Mrs. Anderson [sic]. She died testate in said county September 16, 1909, being a citizen and resident of the county at the time. Her will was duly probated. The executor named therein died before the estate was closed and C. L. Hansen was appointed administrator with the will annexed. He has made his final report and asks to be discharged upon making distribution as provided in the will. The estate consists of a house and lots in Osage and certain personal property. Decedent was a widow without direct issue at the time of her death. The will provided for payment of debts and legal charges, makes some small devises not involved in this action, and directs the executor to sell the real estate and pay the remaining proceeds of the real and personal estate to the sons and daughters of two deceased sisters and a deceased brother, all of whom are citizens and residents of Denmark. The executor died without selling the real estate. The administrator with the will annexed made the sale under order and approval of the Court. The Treasurer of State claims a collateral inheritance tax of 20% on the net proceeds going to the beneficiaries in Denmark because of the fact that they are non-resident aliens, and the final report is made upon that basis. They have filed written objections to the payment of more than a 5% tax, and base their claim on Article Seven of the "Treaty of Friendship, Commerce and Navigation" entered into by the United States and Denmark in 1826. [Article seven is here quoted; see the first paper of this correspondence.]

The United States Attorney for the Northern District of Iowa has filed a petition of intervention on the part of the United States making the same claims under the treaty as made by the foreign beneficiaries in their objections to the payment of more than a 5% collateral inheritance tax. The Treasurer of State has demurred to the petition of intervention and therein challenges the right of the United States to make intervention because of want of sufficient legal interest in the controversy. The conclusion which I have reached on the merits of the controversy makes it unnecessary for me to decide whether or not the United States has sufficient interest to authorize intervention. But I have considered all the arguments and authorities presented the same as I would if the right to intervene were not questioned.

The language of Article Seven of the treaty in question is extremely vague and uncertain. In such cases it is the law as stated by Justice Field in Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S. 258, 271; 33 L. Ed. 642, 646. "It is a general principal [sic] of construction with respect to treaties that they shall be liberally construed so as to carry out the apparent intention of the parties to secure equality and reciprocity between them." Applying this principal [sic] of construction can it be reasonably said that the parties to the treaty in question intended that Article Seven should apply to the rights of citizens or subjects of one nation to inherit or take by will from citizens or subjects of the other? Nothing is said in the title or enacting clause of the treaty in reference to inheritance or succession. Nor is anything said on these subjects in Article Seven except the words "either upon the inheritance of such property, money, or effects or otherwise." Standing alone this clause gives color to the claims of the foreign beneficiaries. But considered with the other language of the article and of the entire treaty the construction favoring the claims of the objectors does not seem warranted or reasonable. The clause quoted when considered with all the rest of the treaty seems more reasonably to mean, "whether the owner acquired such property, money or effects by inheritance or otherwise." All other portions of the article appear to treat of the removal of property of the kind stated from the territory of one of the contracting nations by the owner thereof when he is a citizen or subject of the other nation and residing outside the country from which the property is removed. The words "removal" and "removed" are found just before and just after the clause quoted. And that clause seems to be parenthetical in its construction. The whole article seems to treat of the subject of removal of property from the domain of one of the contracting parties and not of the right of succession or inheritance. My conclusion is that Article Seven of the treaty in question does not apply to the controversy herein.

The objections of the beneficiaries under the will of the decedent to the final report of the administrator with the will annexed are overruled, to which each of them excepts. The demurrer of the Treasurer of State to the petition of intervention of the United States is sustained. The United States excepts. It declines the [sic] plead further and gives notice that it elects to stand upon the ruling on the demurrer.

The final report of the Administrator with the will annexed is approved. He is directed to pay to the Treasurer of State a collateral inheritance tax of 20% of the portions of the estate going to the non-resident alien beneficiaries under the will of the decedent and make distribution of the remainder thereof to them as provided in the will. All parties except.

Office of the United States Attorney,
Storm Lake, Iowa, August 10, 1912.

Sir: I write you regarding the tax imposed by the State of Iowa on the estate of Meta K. Peterson, formerly a resident of Le Mars, Plymouth County, Iowa.

This case involved the same question as the matter of the estate of Anne Margrethe Andersen in Mitchell County in this District, except that the Peterson case has the further complication of the estate having been fully settled and the administrator discharged and therefore, the only steps that can be taken in the matter is by an application to the Executive Council for a refund of the tax.

I wrote you yesterday regarding the decision of Judge Clyde in the State court in the Anne Margrethe Andersen case in which he construes the treaty of 1826 adversely to the contention of the Government and holds that the estate is subject to the tax of 20 per cent. If this decision stands, it would control the Peterson case.

I have withheld instituting any proceedings or making an application to the Executive Council pending the decision of this case in Mitchell County and in view of that decision, I submit the matter to you for further instructions before proceeding further.

I am very doubtful if we can secure any legal standing in any event in the Peterson case, for if the Executive Council would refuse to refund, I do not think there would be any right of appeal to any court, and the estate having been fully closed with notice to the alien beneficiaries and they having receipted in full for their share in the estate, I am of the opinion that they are estopped to maintain any action to recover for this tax and if they are out of court, it will necessarily follow that the Government could obtain no standing in the case.

Will you kindly advise me further in the matter and oblige,

Yours, very truly,

SIR: Referring to your letter of Nov. 12th[2] in regard to the collateral inheritance tax in the estate of Anne [sic] M. Anderson, I would say that I have written the Danish Consul, at Chicago, who has power of attorney from these nonresident alien heirs for authority to prosecute the appeal in their behalf. I do not think that the Government, on its own petition of intervention, can obtain any standing in the Supreme Court on appeal, unless the heirs, who are the direct parties at interest, prosecute the appeal in their own behalf.

They have not yet joined in the appeal and I have delayed taking the appeal, waiting advice from them to the effect that they would so join. If they decide to appeal the case, I would proceed to prosecute the appeal in behalf of the United States as intervenor. I think that there is such a Federal question involved that there is no doubt of the right to appeal from any adverse decision of the Supreme Court of Iowa to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The White House,
Washington, January 6, 1912.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: We are in receipt of information to the effect that Mr. Max Henius, Secretary of the Wahl-Henius Institute of Fermentology of Chicago, secured options on a picturesque part of the Danish Heath in July, 1909, and that American citizens of Danish descent have subscribed $10,000 with which they have purchased 400 acres of land in Jutland, about 20 miles from the old city of Aalborg. The reservation, it appears, has been christened the "Danish-American Park," and in August, 1912, it will be dedicated to the Danish Government, to be at all times open to the public, with the stipulation that on the 4th of July of every year the park will be given over to Americans, who will hoist their country's flag for the Independence Day celebration. This festivity will occur in Copenhagen, where an American delegation will present the deed to the King of Denmark in the presence of a special representative of the United States. The suggestion has also been made that the President permit the use of his name as the Honorary President, with the understanding that Count Moltke and Dr. Egan will be the Honorary Vice Presidents.

The President has asked me to send this information to you and to say that if there is no objection to this proposal on the part of your Department, he has none. Will you please let the President have your views on this subject?

Sincerely yours,

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, August 8th, 1912.

SIR: I have great pleasure in reporting the success of all the ceremonies surrounding the presentation of the deed of the Danish-American National Park, at Rebild Hills, Denmark, to His Majesty King Christian on Sunday, August 4th, at 12 o'clock. * * * We had made the trip to Aarhus on Saturday night, the King's country house at Marselisborg being only a short distance from this city. Their Majesties, the King and Queen of Denmark, with the young Crown Prince Frederick and his brother Prince Knud received us in the drawing-room of the country house. I read the President's letter to His Majesty, to which he replied, as follows:

> It is with the greatest pleasure I have heard the words you have addressed to me in the name of the President of the United States of America, words in which I see a new testimony of the friendship and understanding existing between the Danish and American peoples. I beg you to bring Mr. Taft my heartfelt thanks for the interest he has taken in the realization of the plan of acquiring the tract of "Rebild Bakker" as a proof of the loyal feeling towards their old country of Danish men and women who have in your country found a new home.

In my own name and that of the Danish people, I beg you to convey on this pleasant occasion to Mr. Taft and through him to the American people, the Danish people's and my own warmest greetings and best wishes for the future.

* * * On Monday, August 5th, the dedication ceremonies took place in Rebild Park, which consists of two hundred acres of heatherland. Much of this heatherland was reclaimed through the scientific efforts and the energy of Ernesto Dalgas, who was born in 1828 and died in 1894, and to whom a monument was erected in Aarhus. The work of reclamation is going on so rapidly that the old heatherlands are rapidly disappearing. This park is made up of rolling land, of gently ascending hills, so rare in this flat country, covered in this season of the year with the reddish purple heather.

The rain poured down all the morning, but this did not prevent the assembling of at least 6000 people. They came on thousands of bicycles, carriages, and carts of all kinds and an occasional automobile. The King arrived at two o'clock promptly. * * * He declined to dedicate the park, as he said that should be done by a clergyman; but he gave the signal for the hoisting of the two flags, the Danish and the American. At times the surrounding hills were covered with umbrellas, but interest in the proceedings was so great, the Danes showing an enthusiastic national pride in the proceedings, that nobody left the grounds, even after His Majesty departed after the first part of the program. * * * Dr. Henius said that he had been half promised while in Washington, a cable from the President, so I took the liberty of asking him to read the last paragraph in the President's letter. This was followed by loud acclamations from all parts of the grounds and by three cheers for the President of the United States.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose you herewith, two copies of the message which President Victoria presented to Congress on the occasion of his inauguration as Constitutional President of the Republic on February 27th, with a translation of the portions thereof of direct interest to the United States.

I have [etc.]

WILLIAM W. RUSSELL.

[Inclosure.—Translation.—Extract.]

The incident with the United States[1] arose on account of the creation, with the approval of Congress, of the present municipal surtax, and of a stamp tax on various industrial articles of import; both taxes collected in accordance with a schedule.

The Dominican Government, dissenting from the views of the worthy representative of the Washington Government on this subject, made what was thought to be a reasonable objection to the memorandum which the Minister presented to our Chancery.

In that extensive communication it was shown how we interpret the Convention of February 8, 1907, as regards local usage and consumption taxes, which, by virtue of an administrative autonomy derived from the Constitution, can be created by the Municipalities with the mere approval of the Legislative Power, without prejudicing in the least the reciprocal rights and obligations arising from the above-mentioned international document.

As a result of this discussion, the United States Minister ended the correspondence, sustaining in the name of his Government the position taken at the beginning, without insisting on making any special objection, and expressing his confidence that in future the Dominican Government will comply with the obligations imposed upon it by the Convention of 1907.

Our old boundary question with Haiti is daily growing more vexing and conflicting, in view of the inefficacy of all negotiations which have been conducted for many years to settle our frontier problem, with nothing accomplished as yet, for special circumstances with which you are familiar.

The Pedernales incident which occurred last year, and which, through the tender of the good offices of the United States, resulted in the acceptance of an arbitration for arranging the diferendum; but as yet not even the preliminaries have been arranged, owing to the limited powers of the Haitian Commissioners, by reason of which the conferences that were taking place at Washington in the beginning of 1911 had to be suspended. That incident, I repeat, has brought about another one, quite serious for us, and which may endanger our peaceful relations with the Government and people of the Republic of Haiti if we do not reach an amicable and satisfactory solution in accordance with the rights on our side in the matter.

In the days that followed the violent death of President Cáceres, the military forces of Haiti occupied a portion of our territory, under pretext of assisting in the capture of the assassins of the above mentioned Magistrate, and established headquarters with large quantities of ammunition in Tête-à-l'Eau, and in a place called Misión, all under the command of the principal authority of Thomazeau.

[1] For. Rel. 1911, pp. 139–151.

All the pacific measures taken to solve this new and serious question have been of no avail up to the present, and to the repeated claims and protests of our Minister in Port-au-Prince, under instruction from the Executive, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the neighboring Republic has replied that the points lately occupied by the military forces of Haiti are places that belong to them, and have always been considered so.

Although this incident has not yet been settled, the Dominican Government has a defined and determined view of the question, and is awaiting the moment when, without impairing any of our territorial rights, and in accordance with equity and justice, this question will be settled amicably, as today it is more important than ever for the interests of both Republics.

I trust that that moment is not far distant, and that very soon there will be a reconciling of that disparity of views which for so long a time has kept us in constant worry and conflict with our neighbors. * * *

The Dominican Government has given me a memorandum to the following effect:

1. The friendly suggestions of the United States are thoroughly appreciated.
2. All who have, since the assassination of President Cáceres, rebelled in arms against the Constitutional Government have been granted the most ample and effective guaranties.
3. Exception to 2: the authors and accomplices of the assassination of the President.
4. These guaranties had been accepted by the leaders of the Moca revolution, who left the country thereupon; but they later returned and have been defeated.
5. The Government accepted the surrender of Toribio, who followed the Moca leaders, and he remained in the country.
6. The Government gave full guaranties to Morales, except trial by the courts, which is still pending.
7. Since all the acts of the Government have from the first been strictly legal, and since the courts are applying the laws with absolute independence, there is no charge which the revolutionists can bring against it.
8. The revolution was not a concerted movement but a number of conflicting uprisings; Moca was for Horacio Vásquez for President, Toribio for Limardo,[1] Desiderio Arias for Henriquez,[2] Morales[3] for himself. The only unity of action was displayed by the electoral colleges, which elected Victoria.[4] The various revolutionary movement were thus made impotent.
9. Horacio Vásquez was against the American-Dominican convention, which was the cause of his rebellion; but he has been overthrown.
10. Gives the political history of Henriquez.
11. Same as to Morales.
12. Same as to Limardo .
13. The present state of the revolution is as follows: Arias, routed, has been for more than a month in hiding and inactive; Rosilien, the principal author of the atrocious murder of the Dominican frontier guards, was permitted by the Haitian authorities to escape to Haiti, where he is now; Limardo is in Haiti; revolutionary forces near Dajabon routed; Vidal,[5] one of the murderers of Cáceres, defeated and driven into Haiti; Sostilden forces routed.

The memorandum then goes on as follows:

The foregoing demonstrates that the Government is capable of maintaining order, thus complying with the mandates of the Constitution; it can do no more than give, as it has been giving, ample and effective guaranties, and faithfully execute them. To go further would set a precedent which, far from correcting the evil, would stimulate new conspiracies against established order. Nevertheless the Government will lose no opportunity to be magnanimous.

Reference to the foreigners Bancalari and Marin[1] come next, and the memorandum ends as follows:

> All who have been guilty of exclusively political crimes have been given or will be given ample guaranties; the Dominican Government has complied with the guaranties given and will comply with those yet to be given. Taking as a basis for stability compliance with the law and really effective and independent application of the law by the courts, the Government's patriotic aspiration is to establish a firm civil régime.

General Zamor at Cape Haitien telegraphs that Dominican troops have again crossed the frontier near Ouanaminthe and are fighting and devastating the country. As this is the second time recently that Dominican troops have invaded Haitian territory, the Haitian Government now contemplates vigorous measures. From the attitude of the Dominican Government as expressed to me by the Dominican Minister it appears that the invasion is intended to bring about a clash between the two countries.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Santo Domingo, June 11, 1912.

As to your June 8, the Dominican Government requests me to say that on June 5 revolutionary troops leaving Haitian territory attacked Dajabon but were driven back by Dominican troops there. On the same day a Dominican force making a reconnaissance along the Massacre River was attacked by revolutionists, and to repel this attack the Dominicans were obliged to advance through Haitian territory. It can be proved that the revolutionists started the aggression from Haitian territory; and it is to be noted that the Haitian Government has for some time past been advised of the presence of revolutionists within its territory near the frontier.

The Dominican Consul reports to his Government that "last night Delegate Zamor arrived and we had a very cordial interview. He has promised me to send his troops to Cape Haitien tomorrow, and the incident may be considered as closed."

The Minister for Foreign Affairs yesterday cabled instructions to Peynado to present immediately to the Department the memorandum in regard to the encroachments by Haiti.

DOMINICAN LEGATION,
Washington, June 12, 1912.

SIR: In August, 1910, the Dominican Government, for the purpose of facilitating the transit of its frontier guards, started to open up a road conecting the mouth of the Pedernales River with the Laguna del Fondo. The work of construction of said road was carried out along the entire length of the eastern banks of the Pedernales River—that is to say, on territory belonging to the Dominican Republic and never controlled by Haitian authorities—without any protest being heard from Haiti for over four months.

It was during the month of December—at which time there had already been opened up about 48 kilometers of the road—that the Haitian Government, alleging that the Dominican Government was invading its territory, sent a large force of soldiers to prevent the continuation of the work.[1] These Haitian troops occupied Cabeza de Agua, a small place to the east of the Pedernales River, by which it is separated from the Haitian village of Tête-à-l'Eau. They also occupied the village of Corte Español, which the Haitians call Coupe Espagnol, also on the eastern banks of the Pedernales River, which separates it from the Haitian village called Banane. At those places they struck the Dominican flag and hoisted the Haitian colors instead; they ordered the Dominican laborers to suspend work, and objected to the transit of Dominican frontier guards over the new road.

As soon as these events became known to the Dominican Government, a detachment of regular troops, under General Alfredo Victoria, was sent under orders to oust the Haitian troops from the eastern banks of the Pedernales River and protect the continuation of the work on the road. Upon the arrival of those troops, the Haitian soldiers abandoned the Dominican position they had occupied, which were thus taken without one single shot from General Victoria's forces.

Since then the work has been renewed, and the Dominican guards entrusted with the prevention of frontier smuggling were enabled to pass freely.

On this acount, the Haitian Government requested the Dominican Government to withdraw its troops because the Haitian soldiers had already withdrawn, and to suspend the work on the road; it proposed that there be sent to the place where the referred-to events had occurred a Dominican-Haitian mixed commision for the purpose of ascertaining whether the road under construction came or did not come within Haitian territory;[2] and that the general boundary question be submitted to arbitration.[3] At the same time it requested the United States Government to interpose its good offices in order that a speedy and peaceful solution of the controversy might be reached.

To the request and proposal of the Haitian Government the Dominican Government answered:

(1) Ordering the withdrawal of its forces in view of the fact that the Haitian troops had been withdrawn, but leaving in their former positions on the eastern banks of the Pedernales River the frontier guard charged with the prevention of smuggling and the protection of the works on the road;

(2) Sending to Pedernales to join a Haitian commission, awaiting it in Anses-à-Pitre, a Dominican commission provided with powers to constitute, with the former, a mixed commission that, going over the road under construction, should ascertain whether or not the the same passed through Haitian territory crossing the Pedernales River; and

(3) Signifying its willingness, on general principles, to accept the idea of submitting to arbitration the general boundary controversy.

The mixed commission was unable to perform its duty because, as they themselves confessed, the secret instructions issued to the Haitian Commissioners by their Government forbade them to act.

Under dates of January 24 and 26, 1911, the Honorable W. W. Russell, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States in Santo Domingo, informed the Dominican Government[1] that:

> In compliance with the express wishes of the Haitian Government, and in its earnest desire that peace be maintained and that settlement both just and honorable may be reached in the present controversy between said Republics, the Government of the United States hastens to offer its good offices to that end; the Government of the United States thinks that the two Governments should come together and conclude an agreement for a speedy settlment of the question under the essential conditions that have been accepted by both; and that mean while the status quo should be maintained, the troops withdrawn from the frontier, and the works on the road discontinued until the question shall have been definitely settled.

On January 26 and 27, 1911, the Secretary for Foreign Affairs of the Dominican Republic answered Mr. Russell as follows,[2] in substance: That the Dominican Government sent soldiers to the southern frontier merely because the Haitian Government had placed strong detachments of troops in the same section of the country with the ostensible purpose of preventing the continuation of the work on a road that the Dominican Government is opening up in territory over which its jurisdiction is indisputable, in order to facilitate the transit of its guards for the prevention of smuggling; but that as the Haitian Government withdrew its soldiers and reported this action to the above-mentioned Secretary through the medium of its Minister in Santo Domingo, the Dominican Government issued orders for the recall of its troops; that, placing the utmost faith on the representations of cordiality, and eagerness for peace, recently made by the Haitian Government, and upon the invitation of that very Government, the Dominican Government accepted, on general principles, the submission of the whole boundary question to arbitration; that, considering the relations of unalterable friendship that have always bound the Dominican people with the people of the United States and the spirit of fairness that has always in similar cases guided the conduct of the great Republic, from the good offices offered nothing can be derived but a suitable and lasting settlement between the two countries which share the domain of the Island; that on this consideration the Dominican Government accepted those good offices, with no reservations except those arising from the limited powers with which it is vested by the Constitution, within which limitations the Government would make all possible efforts to find a final solution for the vexatious problem of its boundary questions; that since, through the valuable offer of the United States Government's good offices, the boundary differences seemed to near a speedy solution, the Dominican Government agreed very willingly to suspend the work on the road during a period sufficient for the rendering of an arbitral award, because, bearing in mind the great injury that the unsettled condition of the boundary question causes to the Dominican Republic, its Government would be compelled to resume the said work if, for any cause attributable to the Haitian Government, the definite settlement should be delayed; and finally, that the status-quo implied the domain and control by the Dominican Republic over the territory situated on the eastern banks of the Pedernales river.

[2] See For. Rel. 1911, pp. 156–157.

In accordance with the last statement, which has never been disputed, the Dominican Government, on withdrawing its troops, stationed at various points on the eastern bank of the Pedernales river its frontier guards charged with the prevention of smuggling, with posts at Boca de Pedernales, Corte Español, Cabeza de Agua, and the lower section of Federico, opposite Bois d'Homme, which guards had, until November, 1911, been constantly patrolling that bank along the road recently constructed, without any opposition from the Haitian Government.

In November, 1911, at the time of President Cáceres tragic death,[1] the detachments of guards stationed at Corte Español, Fuerte Victoria in Cabeza de Agua, and Federico, gathered together at Boca de Pedernales, and the detachments stationed at Las Guásimas, Bois Tombé, El Número, and Agua Dulce, gathered at Jimaní, near Laguna del Fondo, their Chief believing that such concentrations would be sufficient to pursue the assassins.

As soon as the Haitians found our posts abandoned they took possession of them[2] and hoisted at the above-mentioned points their own flag on the very poles that flew our colors; the Haitians even went so far as to destroy the Dominican barracks of Las Guásimas and Bois Tombé, and with the materials taken therefrom they built two cabins for their own troops further to the east near El Limón; they billeted soldiers in the house of a Dominican citizen near Jimaní, and they stationed a heavy guard on a hill opposite La Florida, and at El Naranjo, a place on the road from La Florida to Puerto Escondido.

The occupation by Haitian troops of the first points, was done under pretext of maintaining order and of cooperation in the arrest of the murderers of President Cáceres; but the occupation of the latter points was accomplished without reason or pretext, and with an abundance of violent acts against the property of the Dominican inhabitants of those places, as the Haitians killed cattle and swine belonging to Dominican farmers in those sections.

On January 3 of the current year, and in answer to a communication dated December 23, 1911, from the Dominican Minister in Port-au-Prince, requesting the evacuation of the Dominican territories recently occupied by Haitian forces, the Secretary for Foreign Affairs of Haiti made the following statement:

> "I beg to confirm what I previously had the honor of stating to you, to-wit: That we have not in effect established any posts in any portion of the Dominican Territory. Tête-à-l'Eau, Bois Tombé, Bois d'Orme have always been considered Haitian possessions, as proved by the map of de Moya, officially adopted by the Dominican Republic. The Haitian Government has therefore the indisputable right to occupy said points; and on this matter, at least so I believe, there can be no possible misunderstanding."

To these evasive statements, tending to produce confusion in facts and names, and to infer from de Moya's map juridical consequences which it cannot have, and containing the confession that the occupation of the places at issue was effected by the Haitians after the offer of the good offices of the United States Department of State, the Dominican Minister in Port-au-Prince answered by a note dated January 15, last. This note explained with perfect clearness the facts and names which were misrepresented by the Haitian Foreign Office; it showed how exaggerated and erroneous is the importance attached by the Haitian Government to the Map of de Moya, which, aside from containing errors as to the position and names of certain places, does not and can not show boundaries that no convention or arbitration has fixed, and merely indicates by means of an arbitrary line the extent of the Dominican territory wherein some Haitian families have established themselves, with absolute omission of all indications as to its occupation by Haitian forces or authorities; and, finally, the note showed that the attitude of the Haitian Government "is not in keeping with the spirit of the last status-quo, a preliminary necessary for the negotiations that are to be undertaken in Washington."

[1] See For. Rel. 1911, p. 174.

[2] See For. Rel. 1911, p. 166.

This note was answered in February last, by the Haitian Secretary of State, Mr. Léger, in these terms:

> Mr. Minister: I have not failed to give my best attention to the note with which you have honored me under date of January 15, last, concerning some neighboring points in our frontiers, in which, according to your Government, Haitian posts have been unduly established. It is gratifying for me to thank you for the information you have been so kind as to convey to me. From said information there is inferred what I already supposed, to-wit, that different places have frequently the same name, which naturally contribute to produce confusion and lead to the belief that Haitian posts are occupying Dominican territory, when in reality said posts are established in places which have never ceased to be Haitian possessions. My Government's attitude during the last incident at Pedernales in January, 1911, was caused only by the attempt to open a road and maintain Dominican posts in Haitian territory. The status-quo agreed to at that time can mean only reestablishment of the state of affairs existing before the incident. On the other hand, there is nothing in the present situation that could cause the slightest interruption in the excellent and cordial relations that happily exist between our countries. And I cherish the profound conviction that these relations could not but be made closer and closer by the speedy settlement of the boundary question. Thus believing, my Government has unhesitatingly given its representatives in Washington the necessary powers to reach this happy result. It gratifies me to hope that I will soon be informed that the Dominican Republic has authorized its agent in the United States to renew the negotiations that were suspended through unforeseen circumstances.

It is not necessary, for the purpose of this statement, to present now the various proofs my Government possesses, that the places Haiti has occupied since November, 1911, to the east of the above-mentioned line, have never ceased to belong to the Dominican Republic and were never owned by the Haitian Government. To show how groundless is the assertion of the Haitian Secretary of Foreign Affairs that said places "have never ceased to be Haitian possessions" is a matter proper to a fundamental discussion, which the North-American Government does not need to hear in order to form an exact opinion of the points of fact and law which interest it in its capacity as Mediator.

But it is absolutely necessary to point out two most important circumstances originated by the above-mentioned note from the Secretary for Foreign Affairs of Haiti:

First circumstance. The note referred to does not deny, but on the contrary implicitly and explicitly acknowledges the fact that at the time when the United States Government tendered its good offices the Dominicans were occupying the points to the east of the line from Laguna del Fondo to the mouth of the Pedernales river, which the Haitians have been gradually invading since November, 1911. The tacit acknowledgment is contained in the evasive and roundabout way in which it pretends to attribute to the similarity of names of different places the motive of the last Dominican complaint. The explicit confession is contained in the paragraph that says: "My Government's attitude during the last incident at Pedernales in January, 1911, was caused only by the attempt to open a road and maintain Dominican posts in Haitian territory." It was not indeed possible to deny the Dominican jurisdiction over that region in January, 1911, when the offer was made of the good offices of the United States Government; because one single material fact, the construction of a road which still exists, for 48 kilometers along the eastern bank of the Pedernales river, without the Haitian Government knowing anything about it during the long period of over four months, on which a large number of laborers worked, is a fact which by itself is incontrovertible evidence that Haiti had not to the east of the Pedernales river any authorities that could have objected to or opposed the said work of construction; that it did not enjoy the possession of said territory; and that because it sought possession without being entitled thereto, its Government provoked the conflict that originated the friendly mediation of the United States Government.

Second circumstance. For the purpose of explaining the violation by the Haitian Government since November, 1911, of the status quo agreed to in January, 1911, thanks to the good offices of the North American Government, the above quoted note from the Haitian Minister for Foreign Affairs states that "the status quo agreed to at that time can mean only reestablishment of the state of affairs existing before the incident". The Dominican Republic can show that before the time of the incident the possessions of the two Republics on the southern part of their boundaries were the same that they had been at the time in which the meditation was offered, and that therefore there never was a status quo, previous to the incident, which established possessions other than those known to the Mediator. The Dominican Republic, therefore, is not afraid of the scarecrow of the previous status quo; but in order to clear the way of all that may obstruct it, the Dominican Government states that, even if the alleged previous status quo had existed, such an assertion as that of the Haitian Minister for Foreign Affairs would be absolutely indefensible, and the status quo agreed to in January, 1911, could mean only the maintenance of the possessions held by the two adjoining Republics at the time when the United States tendered its good offices; for the following reasons:

1st. Because it was impossible for the United States to propose and secure the acceptance of a previous status quo, since it was unknown to the American Government, besides being made uncertain and confused by the dissenting allegations of the contending parties, and impossible to define without a minute study and a careful investigation, which should be undertaken by a judge and not by a mediator. The status quo agreed to at the time of the mediation has a line, drawn by Nature and which can not be effaced—the Pedernales River; and a conventional, historical line, which likewise can not be effaced—the line fixed by the Treaty of Aranjuez—running between Laguna del Fondo and the Pedernales river, susceptible at all times of being reproduced on the ground itself. With such characteristics, and further evidenced by the presence of Dominican soldiers, during the incident, on all the eastern side of Pedernales river and in Las Guásimas, Bois Tombé, El Número and Agua Dulce; and of the frontier guards, before and after the incident, that status quo line will always be locatable at any time and the respective possessions demarcable on any map. On the other hand, could anybody have convinced the Mediator—with the urgency required by the strained relations between the adjacent countries—as to which were the respective status quo possessions previous to the incident, in case they were different from those that existed at the time of the mediation; as to which was the line separating them; as to when the instant came in which such alleged previous status quo acquired the proportions of a juridical fact worthy of consideration?

2nd. Because if, upon the acceptance of a status quo, either by the determination of a previous date, or by the expression "previous status quo," it is not clear that the parties understand that it refers, as regards the possession of territories, to a past state of affairs, it will be logical to conclude that the parties meant that the status quo should be respected from the moment in which it was agreed to. And if this is so when the insufficiency of written expressions providing for a status quo does not throw the light necessary for ascertaining the purpose that the contending parties had in mind, it is more reasonably so when, as in the case of the status quo accepted by Dominicans and Haitians in 1911, the written expressions and the acts committed at that time do not leave room for doubt. The note No. 37, that the Dominican Minister for Foreign Affairs, under date of January 27, 1911, addressed to the Honorable William W. Russell, United States Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary, reads thus, as regards the status quo: "Finally, I wish to explain to your excellency that the status quo also implies the jurisdiction and control of the Dominican Republic over the territory situated on the eastern bank of the Pedernales river." And this declaration—which was accepted without discussion by the Mediator and for his purposes, therefore, defines the status quo in relation to the possession of territories—was fully agreed to by the Haitians, who consented, without protest, that the Dominican Government, upon withdrawing its troops, might leave a body of its frontier guards to maintain its jurisdiction over the region under dispute. The Haitians did not invoke their alleged right to said region until after ten months had elapsed, on the occasion of the disturbances produced among the Dominicans by the assassination of President Cáceres, and under pretext that their only aim in occupying said territory was that of cooperating in the capture of the authors of the crime, even though subsequent facts have shown that some of those criminals were not captured precisely because they found easy and comfortable shelter in the Republic of Haiti.

In the second conference [of the plenipotentiaries at Washington], held on April 30th last, with Mr. Solon Menos, and which was attended by Mr. W. T. S. Doyle in your behalf, I had the honor to state, in the name of the Dominican Republic, that since we are now merely resuming the negotiations initiated on April 27, 1911,[1] through the good offices of the United States, it seemed essential—in order not to impair said good offices, and for the purpose of establishing a precedent of respecting the status quo which, through the same good offices, was agreed to by the two Republics last January—that it should be previously recognized that it was necessary for the Haitian Government to evacuate the territories which it has been gradually occupying since November last, to the east of the line which, from the mouth of the Pedernales River to the Laguna del Fondo, separated the possessions held by the two Republics at the time when the status quo was stipulated, and which was being maintained by both when, about the middle of the same year, the aforesaid negotiations were suspended.

The honorable Haitian plenipotentiary did not deny the fact of the occupation to which I allude; but he alleged that the point raised by the Dominican plenipotentiary might have been made the subject of a different negotiation, for which each plenipotentiary should previously apply to his Government for instructions; also that such a point should not be made the subject of a motion the sustaining of which could have no other effect than to delay the solution of the general boundary question; and finally that the plenipotentiaries had met to draft and conclude a protocol of arbitration, and would deviate from their mission if they should subordinate such protocol to the discussion of a point the solution of which—implying an agreement on the meaning and scope of the status quo and an impartial and minute verification of the facts relating to the alleged occupation or reoccupation—might not be reached until after a considerable lapse of time, while it is to the interest of both countries to come as soon as possible within arbitral jurisdiction.

The Dominican plenipotentiary is not in accord with these views of the Haitian plenipotentiary, for the following reasons:

1st, because he believes that, since both plenipotentiaries are provided with sufficient powers to negotiate, conclude and sign any treaty, convention, act or agreement that may be considered necessary for the submission to arbitration of the boundary question, both are empowered to agree to reestablish the state of affairs that existed when the negotiations of 1911 were suspended; and he further believes that such a reestablishment is necessary in order that neither contracting party may fear that the other will change its position before the final award shall have been made.

2d, because he considers it essential to the efficacy of the good offices of the United States that Haiti abandon the territory it has occupied since November, 1911. Otherwise, should both contending parties become convinced that it would be possible for them, without affecting the Mediator, to change the positions that each held at the beginning of the mediation, and should the party bent upon acquiring new possessions by all possible means profit thereby, at least for the period prior to the final award, its eagerness to encroach upon the territory of the other would provoke unavoidable conflicts.

3d, because he is convinced that the abandonment by Haiti of the territory it has occupied since November, 1911, is a question that should be settled prior to the signing of the treaty, convention, act or agreement submitting to arbitration the boundary question; for it is obvious that if such a document should be signed before such evacuation, the Haitian Government might feel inclined to delay its ratification as a means of securing additional opportunities to continue enlarging that Government's unsanctioned occupation.

Doyle at the session of April 30th last, I have the honor to request that your excellency, by virtue of the implicit attributes of the Government of the great North American nation in its capacity as friendly Mediator, cause appropriate representations to be made to the Haitian Government in order to secure its abandonment of the territories it has occupied since November, 1911.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Santo Domingo, June 21, 1912.

I am informed by the Minister for Foreign Affairs that the Haitian Government proposes settlement of the question of neutrality on the frontier by a joint commission, on the following bases: (1) Maintenance of the status quo line subsequent to the Pedernales incident; (2) obligation on the part of the Dominican Republic not to aid the revolution against Haiti; (3) the same obligation on the part of Haiti in regard to the Dominican revolution. The Dominican Government positively refuses to consider the first point, because the boundary question is being settled at Washington and it can do nothing that might interfere with that settlement. Haiti insists that unless the Dominican Republic agrees to the first point, nothing will be done.

The Dominican Minister has handed the Department a note, with inclosures, from which it appears that soon after the assassination of President Cáceres, and under pretext of helping the Dominican Government to capture the assassins near the frontier, the Haitian authorities moved into territory east of the Pedernales River, theretofore in the peaceful possesion of the Dominican Government, and continue to occupy it. It also apears that the Dominican Minister to Haiti repeatedly protested against that occupation, but the Haitian Government has taken no steps to comply with its plain duty by witdrawing its troops and civil officers from the territory in question. You will consult the Dominican Minister as to this.

You will also immediately inform the President of Haiti that complaint as above has been made to this Government; that the complaint seems well founded; that any failure on the part of Haiti to observe, in compliance with its undertaking made to this Government and to the Dominican Government, the status quo that existed at the time the good offices of this Government were accepted, would be to the highest degree prejudicial to an amicable settlement, and would also be so contrary to Haiti's express agreement and therefore such a glaring disregard of the good faith that must obtain between nations in their dealings as to create a serious situation and make it hard for this Government to believe that the Haitian Government understands what that situation really is; that, furthermore, in order to avoid any untoward incident, this Government must request the Government of Haiti immediately to withdraw such of its military and civil authorities as may be in or occupying points east of the east bank of the Pedernales River between its headwaters and its mouth, as also points between its headwaters and Jimini, which were occupied by the Dominican authorities at the time of the acceptance of the good offices of this Government, if any such forces or authorities are in said localities. You will impress upon the Haitian Government the gravity of any violation of agreements relating to this matter.

Proposition by the Government of Haiti.

1. The Haitian and Dominican Governments bind themselves to observe the status quo throughout the whole length of their respective frontiers; that is to say, each party will remain in possession of the points actually occupied by it, and will not seek to disturb the other one, nor to remove the boundary marks. The two Governments bind themselves to further the negotiations concerning the frontier question and to submit themselves loyally to the arbitral decision which may be rendered.

2. The Dominican and Haitian Governments agree and bind themselves not to encourage any revolutionary enterprise which may be started against either one of them and to mutually lend effective aid to prevent the malcontents from occupying the territory of one of the two to disturb the peace with the other; consequently, at the demand of the one of these Governments, the other shall expel from its territory every individual whose presence shall be considered dangerous.

[Inclosure 2.—Translation.]

Counterproposition of the Dominican Republic to the Proposals of Haiti.

For the purpose of maintaining the most ample and sincere cordiality of relations between the two Republics, the Haitian and Dominican Governments bind themselves to further the negotiations for a delimitation of the frontier and to submit loyally to the arbitral decision that may be given in this matter. In the meanwhile, both Governments bind themselves to take no action whatever for the purpose of changing to the prejudice of the other the positions which both Governments respectively were occupying when arbitration was selected as a means of settling their differences; and particularly as regards that section of the frontier between the south bank of Lake Fondo and the mouth of the Pedernales River; to maintain the same positions which both parties were occupying in January, 1911, and with the Government of the United States of America as mediator to submit simultaneously with the question of frontier delimitation the solution of the recent conflict on the frontier section above-mentioned.

The American Minister to the Dominican Republic to the Secretary of State.

No. 171.]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Santo Domingo, July 3, 1912.

SIR: I have the honor to report that conditions in this Republic are far from assuring. Revolutionary groups in all sections of the country continue to make periodic attacks on the towns and villages, with no definite success, but greatly increasing the general feeling of alarm and anxiety. The land lines of the French Cable Company are cut daily, and for several weeks it has been impossible to rely on any sure cable communication. The revolution does not seem to be strong enough to overthrow the Government, and, on the other hand, it is impossible for the Government to dispose of sufficient military forces to invest all parts of the Republic. The prisons are full of political suspects, and many arrests are being made daily. The Government is disbursing enormous sums for military operations, and it is currently believed that the Government military chiefs themselves are prolonging the revolution, appropriating large amounts of the funds destined for the troops. Government salaries are in arrears for two months, and the budget for this year will declare a deficit of $600,000. The outcome is difficult to forecast, as there seems to be an absolute state of anarchy among the revolutionists, each group having a different candidate, and all against the present administration. The Government continues to offer and give guaranties, but this consists in buying off the leaders, who very frequently rise again and demand more cash.

Your June 29. The President of Haiti claims that no places east of the Pedernales River are occupied by Haitian forces; and that, with a view to the speedy settlement of the boundary dispute, he is willing to withdraw Haitian forces from any point now occupied on the boundary which the Department may designate, provided it is guaranteed that the same will not be occupied, pending settlement, by the Dominicans. He also suggests that I verify the actual conditions by visiting the points in dispute, and I will proceed to do so at once if the Department so orders.

No. 1096.] American Legation.
Port au Prince, July 6, 1912.

Sir: I have the honor to report that upon receipt of Department's June 29, I called upon President Leconte * * * and explained to him that the attitude of his Government in continuing to occupy territory to the east of the Pedernales River, notwithstanding the objections of the Santo Domingo Government, made it very difficult for the United States Government to proceed to arrange for the submission of the boundary question to arbitration; in fact, if his Government's attitude was continued there might result grave eventualities which it would be impossible to prevent. I explained to him that by the status quo was meant that the two Governments would peaceably hold the territory which they had at the time the good offices of the United States Government were accepted for the amicable arrangement of the affair.

President Leconte said that it was his recollection that there were no Haitian posts to the east of the Pedernales River. He thought that the best way to verify that would be for me to make a trip there and see just where are the Haitian posts. He acknowledged, however, that some three or four places which the Dominicans occupied by invasion in January, 1911, had been retaken by the Haitians upon the temporary withdrawal of the Dominican guard after the death of President Cáceres. He justified his occupation of these places on the ground that for many years prior to 1911 they had been occupied by Haitian posts and were considered Haitian territory. When I explained to him that their reoccupation under the circumstances constituted a violation of the status quo, he replied that he does not think that the Dominicans are serious and really desire to definitely settle the boundary question: that they always have some excuse for not acting; but if there were a chance that the matter could be speedily settled he would be willing to withdraw the Haitian guards from the places in question, provided it would be guaranteed that pending settlement the places would remain neutral, that is that the Dominican soldiers would not occupy them.

I told the President that in accord with my information Haitian troops have invaded territory around Jimani and Lake Limon, territory heretofore recognized as Dominican. He denied this and said that the only way to prove his statement would be for me to go to the region and see for myself.

Before leaving the President I had him again affirm that, with a view to the speedy settlement of the question, upon the request of the State Department, he would withdraw from the contested places provided their neutrality would be assured.

The following day Secretary Léger called at the Legation and during the course of our conversation * * * said it would be impossible for the Haitian Government to abandon, under any pretext, the points now held on the frontier, points which he considers belong to Haiti, notwithstanding that they were occupied by the Dominicans when the United States was requested to use its good offices for the peaceful settlement of the incident. * * * I stated that by the status quo on the frontier was meant the occupation by the two Governments of such territory as was in their possession when the good offices of the United States were invoked and had no reference to prior occupation. I stated that I could not see any danger of Haiti losing by arbitration any contested point just because Santo Domingo for a short time had taken possession of it. I could not convince him that there was no necessity for Haiti to occupy all of the territory claimed by it in order that an award might be favorable to Haiti. He considered occupation sine qua non to arbitral award. * * *

You will visit the Pedernales region, carefully investigate and report fully, bearing in mind the desirability of restoring the status quo at the time of acceptance of the good offices of this Government, which would imply occupation by the Dominican civil authorities of the section east of Pedernales as well as certain points between Lake Fondo and the headwaters.

Sir: I have the honor to state that, agreeable to the Department's cable instructions of the 9th instant directing me to proceed to the Pedernales district and make a careful investigation and fully report thereon with particular reference to desirability of restoring status quo in existence at the time when Haiti requested the good offices of the United States Government with a view to settling the questions then at issue, I left here on the morning of the 15th instant as stated in my cablegram of that date and after having visited the district returned here on the 23d instant. * * *

The night [of the 19th] was spent at Anse-à-Pitre and the report which I herewith enclose commences from there and works up to "Etang Saumatre" or "Assuey" (Dominican "Laguna del Fondo"). * * *

I have [etc.]

H. W. Furniss.

[Inclosure.—Extract.]

Report on tour of inspection of frontier posts from Anse-à-Pitre (Pedernales) to Lake Saumatre (Laguna del Fondo).

* * * In summing up I have to say that from investigation I am convinced that the Dominican Minister at Washington did not correctly inform the Department when he wrote that shortly after the assassination of the Dominican President the Haitian authorities, under pretext of assisting the Dominican Government to capture the assassins, crossed to the east side of the Pedernales River, which they continue to occupy. This is the substance of the Department's June 29.

The facts as I have ascertained them are these: the Dominicans voluntarily withdrew their guards from Bois d'Homme, Fuerte Victoria (Cabeza de Agua), Côte Espagnol and Bois Tombé in 1911, in order to have their troops nearer to the capital because of the assassination, and the Haitians, who were preparing to drive them from some of the places, did then take such as I have designated in this report. Haitian troops do not today occupy but one of the places, though the Haitian posts are so placed that it would be impossible for the Dominicans to have any advantage if the Dominicans occupied the places now deserted.

The Haitian Government promised to deliver the assassins if they crossed into Haiti, but even the Dominican Minister here and the Dominican guards with whom I have conversed do not allege what the Dominican Minister at Washington states as a fact: that the Haitian Government gained the places through a ruse.

In fact, taking it all in all, it appears to me that the Dominicans have resorted to exaggerations and misstatements with a view to obtaining the sympathy of the Department. They cannot help but know that the Haitians are not occupying the Dominican positions at Bois d'Homme, Corte Español and Bois Tombé, and their giving new Spanish names to places heretofore known under French names has done much to complicate matters when a question of occupancy has been discussed.

The line drawn on the Dominican map to show present Haitian occupancy is fantastic, and might just as well for effect been drawn further to the east to include a larger area. The facts are that the present Haitian occupancy is along the line indicated by Captain Young on his map of 1907. From the top of the mountain from which I had a bird's-eye view of Lakes Limon, Enriquillo and Sumatra, it appears to me that the Dominican map is wrong in that section.

In concluding I have to say that the only violation of the status quo which I found is the Haitian occupation of what the Dominicans style Fuerte Victoria, which is opposite Tête-á l'Eau Haitien, and under the conditions already explained as to the situation I do not think it advisable or prudent for the Domincans to occupy this place. Its surrender to the Dominicans would entail no loss whatever to the Haitians.

As to the Haitian posts near the lakes, I am convinced that the Haitians have not moved them further to the east than they were when the good offices of the United States were requested. In my opinion the right of the Haitians to maintain them in their present position will be a matter to be regulated by a definite settlement of the boundary, and is not a question to be discussed in the preparation of an agreement for submission of the boundary question to arbitration.

Sir: I have the honor to inform you that conditions in this Republic continue to be very bad. The revolutionists are no nearer to overthrowing the Government than they were eight months ago, and the Government is still expending enormous sums in military operations against the revolutionists. It is pretty generally admitted now that this condition of affairs is being purposely prolonged by the Government military chiefs, who are enriching themselves at the expense of the troops.

Reports from the northern frontier indicate a chaotic condition of affairs; the revolutionists are ravaging and plundering at will, and the Government is endeavoring to reconcentrate the country people and cattle in the towns.

In the Cibao, or northern part of the Republic, revolutionary bands are attacking the towns, and while nothing decisive is accomplished the general feeling of alarm and unrest continues. Horacio Vásquez is supposed to be somewhere in the vicinity of Moca, and apparently roams about at will, and it would seem as if the Government is making no determined effort to capture him, while all his relatives not actively engaged in the revolution are thrown into prison or exiled as suspects. The town of Puerto Plata is kept in a constant state of fear from an attack by the revolutionary party operating near there. The Government has two or three hundred men in the fort, but makes no active offensive campaign against the rebels, and the latter take to the woods after firing up the town.

A few weeks ago the Government sent a peace commission to the southwest, but nothing was accomplished. Luis Felipe Vidal, one of the assassins of President Cáreces, is operating in this section near the Haitian frontier, and the Governor of Macoris was sent after him with a large force, but Vidal is not looking for an encounter with a superior force and takes refuge in Haiti.

The Governor of this Province was sent on a peace mission a few days ago to the revolutionary chiefs operating in the east, between here and San Pedro de Macorís, and this mission seems to have been somewhat successful, as it is reported that these chiefs have accepted the guaranties of the Government and given up their arms, for how long is a question.

In a conference yesterday, the Minister for Foreign Affairs admitted to me that the Government was not satisfied with the conduct of the military chiefs in charge of the operations against the rebels, and that a new and energetic campaign would be immediately initiated. He told me that the chief of military operations in the Cibao, General Rubirosa, who is now acting Governor of Puerto Plata, would be succeeded as military chief by a man in whom the Government had perfect confidence, leaving Rubirosa as Governor of Puerto Plata for the reason that it was not deemed advisable to anger him, but that he would be watched and his powers as Governor gradually curtailed. This statement of the Minister for Foreign Affairs was made in response to representations from me in regard to the evident inactivity on the part of the Government in putting down the revolutionary movement.

Sir: I have the honor to report that since last mail the most important event that has taken place in connection with the present revolutionary movement has been the taking of Dajabon, and which was reported to you by cable. The revolutionary chiefs in this action were: Desiderio Arias, Zarzuela, and Dorsilien [sic]. The reports are that there was a bloody conflict of thirty-six hours, and the losses on both sides were considerable. The Government is making preparations to recapture Dajabon, and has sent a reenforcement of 300 men from here with 60,000 rounds of ammunition. The country is still in a most disturbed condition, and attacks on Monte Cristi and Puerto Plata are feared. From a financial point of view I do not see how this Government can last much longer, with the enormous outlays for military operations. On the southwest frontier the Government has a force of 1,000 men, but nothing decisive takes place. The troops cannot be patriotic, as the chiefs are pocketing their pay, and desertions are frequent. The most serious problem for the Government at present would be the continued success of the revolutionists in the north, who are now in possession of Dajabon, the key to the Cibao.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Santo Domingo, September 16, 1912.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that the revolution is apparently no nearer an end than it was when it started eleven months ago. Since last mail the capital of the Province of Seybo was captured by the rebels, but was retaken by the Government a few days later. Dajabon is still in possession of the Government, and there has been no attack on Puerto Plata or Monte Cristi. If the money holds out this state of affairs may continue for some time. The Government military chiefs are enriching themselves, and naturally there is no great activity displayed in the persecution of the revolutionists. The Government holds the towns and remains inside on the defensive; the revolutionists are in bands all over the country and come in and attack the towns at will. The fight at La Vega last week was a fierce one, with a loss of life of nearly 200 on both sides. The revolutionists were compelled to retire, and the Government held the town. As reported by cable, the revolution has nearly all the small towns on the southwest frontier.

The Government seems to think the new President of Haiti will adopt a firmer and more friendly attitude as regards frontier neutrality, and I have been shown correspondence to the effect that Dorsilien has had a rupture with Desiderio Arias, and has left the field.

It looks as if the situation here is rather hopeless. The present administration certainly cannot appease the country, and the triumph of the group now financing the revolution would be disastrous. The name and prestige of Horacio Vásquez are being used to give a show of respectability to the revolutionary movement, but in case of his triumph the men who are supposed to be aiding him would have to be recognized. Reform would certainly not come with the triumph of the revolution.

Replying to your September 14, I believe our Government should take immediate steps to occupy all the frontier customhouses, which were and are abandoned because the Dominican Government has not been able to maintain law and order. This would release troops for service elsewhere, whereupon the revolution would probably collapse. Such a result, however, would mean the complete supremacy of the Victoria administration, which is extremely unpopular and very detrimental to the country. Even some of Victoria's cabinet officers have intimated that an effective intervention by our Government would be good for the country and intelligent Dominicans in general feel that they had a right to expect that under the convention the existing conditions would not have arisen. To enter into relations with the present leaders of the revolution is absolutely useless, and their success would be disastrous. Only complete control by our Government would permanently insure order and justice, but any degree of control would be beneficial; indeed, without our effective control, one administration here would be just as good as another. Once having landed men for protection of the customhouses, in accordance with our rights under the convention, we might be able to dictate a policy beneficial to the country. The main evils to be remedied are: the absolute subservience of the courts; forced recruiting for the army; wholesale imprisonment without trial; peculation of public funds.

You are appointed Special Commissioners to proceed at your earliest convenience to Santo Domingo City, there to confer with the Legation and the General Receiver of Customs, to make adequate investigation of the whole situation, holding such conferences as may be advisable with officials of the Dominican Government, and to report with your recommendations as to the advisability of presenting the note to the Dominican Government as set forth in the enclosure herewith[1] and as to such other measures that you deem appropriate satisfactorily to put an end to the present difficulties.

The President has ordered that you proceed to Santo Domingo on the U. S. S. Prairie, on board of which will be some 750 marines together with a naval officer of appropriate rank. The President also directed that the movements of the Prairie, so far as affecting matters of policy, should be governed by your judgment. At such moment as you deem opportune, subsequent to your arrival at the capital of the Dominican Republic, the President's instructions are to the effect that the marines aboard the Prairie shall, in pursuance of the provisions of treaty, reestablish and protect Dominican customs houses at the proper points wherever interfered with from any cause.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 27, 1912.

MY DEAR MR. MINISTER: I have the honor to inform you that on September 24 the American Minister at Santo Domingo City was instructed to deliver the following note to the Minister for Foreign Affairs: [see the instruction of September 24, 3 p. m.]

The fact that all of the custom houses on the Dominican-Haitian frontier have had to be abandoned on account of the disturbed conditions there, and the necessity of assuring the observance of the status quo existing at the time this Government undertook, by its good offices, to assist the Governments of the Dominican Republic and of the Republic of Haiti to reach an amicable adjustment of their boundary dispute, have persuaded this Government that it is necessary that some definite de facto line should be fixed, which shall be observed until the ultimate settlement of the boundary controversy. As the line indicated on the War Department's map, referred to in the note to the Foreign Office, insofar as this Government is informed, practically coincides with the status quo existing in January, and as the map was made long prior to the controversy from wholly impartial information, this Government decided to respect the line therein indicated as the customs frontier and to have this line patrolled by the reestablished customs guard under the Receiver General of Customs of the Dominican Republic.

In this connection I desire to draw your attention to the advisability of meeting at the Department with the Minister of Haiti and the Acting Chief of the Division of Latin American Affairs, to formally sign the minutes of the proceedings at the various conferences held at the Department regarding the boundary dispute. For this purpose Mr. Janes will consult with you and with the Haitian Minister and arrange a definite appointment. In view of the fact that at the last session both yourself and the Minister of Haiti announced that you could not agree upon the terms of a protocol to submit the question to arbitration, the Department feels that perhaps the best course to follow will be to endeavor to make some friendly suggestion to both plenipotentiaries in regard to the terms of a submission, and will be glad to take up this question so soon as the customs houses shall have been reestablished and the customs guard replaced on the de facto line.

However, until the latter can let me know its feeling with regard to the effect of a convention to which it is a stranger, as well as of a mediation which it has always congratulated itself on having invoked, I feel persuaded that nothing will come to invalidate the formal assurance which was given it in 1905 by the Secretary of State, John Hay, with the full approval of the President of the United States.

MR. MINISTER: I have had the honor to receive your note No. 658 of September 26th [sic] last, by which you have kindly transmitted to me in the name of your Government the following communication: [quoting it]

In reply I can not but take note of the decision of which you have kindly informed me, and which the United States, in its laudable earnest desire to be useful, has taken without having had time to ascertain the sentiment of the Republic of Haiti on the subject. It is well understood that this measure, thus decided upon without our participation, can in no wise prejudice the rights of the Haitian people in their present possessions, particularly at such points in the south as La Hatte, Figuier, Roseau, Banane, Bois d'Orme, Tête á-l'Eau, Bois Tombé, not to mention those which they have always occupied and now occupy, and which have never ceased to form a portion of their territory.

And the patrol that is to be reestablished on the frontier can concern only the Dominicans who have authorized it, doubtless taking into account the provisions of Article 3 of the treaty that they signed with Haiti in 1874.[1] I am, however, happy to ascertain that this patrol will be instructed to respect the present limits of the two republics. My Government, proposing soon to establish interior custom houses, will hasten to give instructions in the same sense to the special police that will shortly be organized on the frontier.

Therefore, without desiring for the moment to examine whether or not the subject matter of your note enters into the powers of a mediator, I do not hesitate to acknowledge the generous motive that animates the United States, and I seize with pleasure this occasion to renew [etc.]

As to the expressed desire of the Dominican Government to communicate its reply to the note directly to the President, the cable service is most unsatisfactory and the Department is convinced that such a course would result merely in unnecessary delay, detrimental to the interests of both countries. You will say to the Dominican Government that the President directs me to reply that he would much prefer that all its communications be transmitted through the usual channel, in order to expedite in every possible way this matter, which is of such great urgency. By the next mail the Dominican Government will forward an order for the sale of $1,000,000 bonds, the proceeds therefrom to be expended as outlined in last cable in clear.[1] It is recommended that arrangement for sale of bonds be made by the Department immediately and cable information given as soon as funds are available. Trust company will be informed by cable by Dominican Government when the order is dispatched by mail. The Legation should be authorized to exchange notes with the Foreign Office covering disbursement and reimbursement of funds as previously outlined. As the Dominician Government will request withdrawal of the formal note presented by me covering this situation, I ask affirmative instructions.

The Commissioners and I believe that a formal declaration by the United States that no government attaining power through armed revolution will be recognized during the life of the convention of 1907 would be opportune at present and beneficial in the future. The matter was not, however, touched on in the negotiations.

When may additional naval vessels be expected here?

[Telegram sent from Santo Domingo November 13 to Bogotá; transmitted from Bogotá November 20 by the American Chargé d'Affaires there; received at Washington November 22.—Paraphrase.]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Bogotá, November 20, 1912.

The following telegram received today:

AMERICAN LEGATION, Santo Domingo, November 13, 1912. The Commissioners returned from the north November 10, and desire to lay before the Department the following report, in which I concur:

In regard to the possibility of obtaining a peaceable settlement, the Commissioners are convinced that it is unfortunately most remote, owing to the fact that the Government, now thoroughly discredited and wholly unable longer to withstand the rebels unless materially assisted, desires to hold on to its present lucrative position as long as possible at any cost. On the other hand, the revolution, now stronger than ever and confident of ultimate success, is disinclined to make any terms with the Government.

The Department has already been informed of the financial embarrassment of the Dominican Republic. Upon the arrival of the Commissioners, Michelena had been making daily advances, and he consulted the Commissioners as to the advisability of making further advances. The Commissioners assumed the responsibility of saying to him that if he desired to continue assisting the Government during these negotiations, they would recommend that such sums in excess of the Government's share of the customs receipts as he might advance be repaid to him upon final settlement, it being understood that previous advances were not included in the recommendation. But Michelena has now been notified that the Commissioners will not recommend any further advances. If he refuses to make any it is doubtful that the Government can obtain money elsewhere.

Subsequent to the note addressed to the Minister for Foreign Affairs, the first proposed solution was arrived at, which has been reported already to the Department. In exchange for the promise of this reform the Commissioners agreed to recommend the advances of money heretofore outlined, and had the reform been immediately and sincerely carried out the situation would probably have been cured. But the Government has not complied with its agreements nor, in the opinion of the Commissioners, even made any endeavor to do so, evidently satisfied that the announcement of the reforms, accompanied as they were by notorious public acts contradictory thereto, would be ineffective for producing peace. Therefore the President announced his willingness to resign and sent the Archbishop[1] with full powers to negotiate with Vásquez; to his proposals Vásquez made counterproposals, which the Government rejected. The Commissioners were not parties to these negotiations.

On November 12 the President informed the Commissioners that he would not consent to complete removal of Alfredo from office and authority, and there is reason to believe that Alfredo wrote his friends that his removal was but temporary.

Rebels now have possession of Sánchez and Samaná, and points along the railway from Sánchez to Salcedo Crossing near La Vega; they now permit the operation of trains. Their forces are estimated from 700 to 1,500 and are better armed than elsewhere. Rebels in large numbers are reported gathered near La Vega, Santiago and San Francisco Macorís. Puerto Plata and Monte Cristi are besieged, water and market supplies cut off, and the Government restricted to the city limits. The Government, in fact, exercises no functions except within the towns and forts. In the south the rebels are daily attacking Barahona, so actively that the Government can not maintain a customs official there. At Samaná Bay the Government can not prevent contraband from vessels there, for the rebels are not only in control of the neighborhood but have possession of the revenue cutter, which increases the possibility of contraband. At Puerto Plata and Sánchez the merchandise consigned to the larger inland cities, now cut off, fills to overflowing the customs warehouses. Merchants at these inland cities can not send money to pay the duty, representing many thousands of dollars to the receivership.

[1] The Archbishop of Santo Domingo, Monseñor Adolfo Nouel.

The revolutionary leaders are of such a character that their entrance into power would not in the least benefit conditions. Should the revolution succeed, an attempt would immediately be made to reimburse the amounts spent by its promoters in New York, and to repay advances made by merchants at Sánchez and elsewhere.

The efforts of the President through the Legation and the Commission to bring about peace has started every intelligent Dominican to cooperate. except those profiting by the disturbed conditions. This work is often at cross purposes and not wholly disinterested, but may possibly bring results. And a solution by efforts of the people is much to be preferred to suggestions from the outside. The Archbishop, the members of Congress in the city (a small majority) and private persons are working for peace.

The Commissioners told the Dominican President that they much regretted to conclude that they were unable to assist in the restoration of order owing to what they believed to be the Government's failure to keep its agreements. Whether the Government is absolutely faithless in its announced intention to resign (if paymasters require) should be certain by November 20th.

If the Government should resign and be succeeded, as it would be, apparently, by a good president, it is recommended:

1. That the Government be assisted to establish peace by placing it in possession of the customs houses in the hands of the rebels, and by preventing the rebels from operating within five miles of seaport customs houses;

2. That it should be assisted financially to the extent proffered to the present Government, money to be secured by a loan conditioned on approval of all disbursements by an auditor and a financial adviser designated by the United States;

3. That the rebels be formally notified that they will not be recognized if the Government is overturned by force.

It is believed that action would be necessary only under the second heading.

If on November 20 the present Government is still in power and the insurrection continues, it is recommended:

First. That the Government be advised that in view of its misappropriation of approximately $100,000 of public works funds obtained under the Convention, and in view of its contracting obligations in violation of the Convention to such an extent as to make impossible of execution any arrangement on its part to replace misapplied funds, the United States will direct the General Receiver no longer to pay the Government any part of the customs house receipts.

Second. That the Department of State announce that any money advanced the Government will be regarded as creating a condition of affairs in violation of the Convention.

Third. That any money advanced to rebels will be regarded as gifts to them.

Fourth. That rebels be formally notified that they will not be recognized if the Government is overturned by force.

On or before November 20 the Prairie, with the marines not transferred to other ships, should be withdrawn to Guantánamo, and at least three additional gunboats sent, so as to cover every seaport of entry.

The Commissioners believe that it is not worth while to reestablish the customs houses on the Haitien frontier until the restoration of peace, when it will be easy.

The Archbishop is in full possession but is facing a difficult situation although everything is quiet at present. The followers of Horacio Vásquez are importunately endeavoring to force the President to recognize them, in making appointments to office, as the only ones to be considered. Many are not willing to help reorganize the Government and the formation of the Cabinet is giving trouble.

On December 6 Congress will convene to authorize a temporary local loan of $300,000 and the sale of bonds now on deposit with the Guaranty Trust Company; the latter funds are to be replaced with interest by sequestrating from the Government share of customs receipts an amount not less than $30,000 monthly. The President says it is absolutely impossible to secure assent of Congress to another foreign loan, and that at present such a loan would be disastrous to the Government.

Referring to the Legation's cablegram of November 13 and the Department's reply of the 25th, I should like to be instructed as to how far I am authorized to go in carrying out the recommendations of the Commissioners in regard to the action to be taken by our Government in case of the election of the Archbishop. I strongly urge immediate announcement that during the life of the Convention our Government will recognize no government formed by any successful revolution.

It seems probable that Arias and Vidal will cease armed opposition to the Government. But I believe that although there will be quiet here for a few months the Archbishop will either resign in disgust or be forced out long before the expiration of the term.

I assure you that your efforts on behalf of the Dominican people will receive from the Government of the United States the sincerest and most earnest support.

When you hand this message to Archbishop Nouel, say that the President has ordered a battleship to proceed at once to Santo Domingo City; and you will do all you can during your conversation with the Archbishop to deter him from resigning. > Accept this expression of my gratitude for Your Excellency's message, received today. Like you, I hope that all good Dominicans will fulfill their patriotic duty to the Republic, which a long and cruel civil war has caused to suffer greatly. I must trust to the good faith of my fellow-citizens, who are well aware of the sentiment of the great American people, pioneers of liberty and justice, and of the desires of their Government.

The limit of my tenure will depend on circumstances, and it is my fixed intention to leave it as soon as the whole country is pacified.

In my name and that of the Dominican people receive, Mr. President, the expression of the most loyal recognition.

The Archbishop tells me that he intends to deal firmly with Horacio Vásquez, who will arrive here probably tomorrow, on the Nashville.

Congress has passed the bill authorizing a straight loan of $1,500,000, to be made by the President subject to the requirements of the Convention. The President is anxious to keep this money out of improper hands, and I suggest that our approval contain limitations whereby any part of the loan not expended by the Archbishop shall not be available for a government succeeding the Archbishop which is not constitutional and recognized by the United States; this would spoil the plans of the partisans of Horacio Vásquez, who fear the Archbishop may resign before the financial question is settled.

The Horacistas have been apparently quiet since the open proclamation of Horacio that he would retire. Luis Felipe Vidal called on me this morning and stated that he was in complete accord with the Archbishop; that he was sure that he could control Desiderio, and that he was sending to-morrow a commissioner to confer with him.

The Archbiship is doing his best to establish peace in the country by peaceful methods. Everything is quiet in the south and east.

The Government has expended up to date about three thousand dollars ($3,000) in the purchase of arms from various revolutionary groups.

In the Cibao, Desiderio is a menace and the state of affairs there is most unsatisfactory. Don Emiliano Tejera and his group are causing much trouble at the capital.

Federico Velásquez has returned and stated to the Archbishop that he is unqualifiedly a supporter of the present provisional government.

State the following to the Minister for Foreign Affairs: Reports have reached this Department that the Haitian authorities on the frontier are giving active support to the revolution led by Arias; that arms are being sent to Haitian ports for reshipment to Dominican territory for the use of the revolutionists; that Hiatian troops are advancing southward beyond the zone in dispute; and that the Government of the United States can not remain indifferent to such information, but must take a special interest in maintaining the status quo on the Haitian-Dominican frontier because of the position it holds as mediator in the question which both Governments have wisely resolved to submit to arbitration according to the terms of a compromise to be arranged at Washington through the good offices of this Government. If the Haitian Government should not take immediate vigorous steps to refute the above-mentioned rumors, this Government will regretfully have to conclude that the Haitian Government has modified its attitude in favor of the settlement of the boundary dispute by immediate arbitration, a conclusion which will appear the more unavoidable because of the apparently inexplicable failure of the Haitian Government to furnish the Haitian Minister here with unlimited full powers similar to those with which the Dominican Minister is provided, signed on January 18 by the Dominican Government, as follows:

I personally presented the Department's March 18th to the Minister for Foreign Affairs and subsequently to the President of Haiti, both of whom reiterate that their Government is assisting the Dominican Government in every possible way; they both allege that the Dominican Minister here personally acknowledges that the Haitian Government is aiding the present Dominican Government. The Dominican Minister, however, denies that he ever expressed himself satisfied with the Haitian Government's attitude, and declares that the Haitian Government is aiding the revolutionists. He asked me to test the good faith of the Haitian Government by requesting the immediate expulsion from Haiti of Vásquez, Rodríguez, Limardo, and others, and I agree to submit this proposition to the Department. I am unable to say which side is telling the truth.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs tells me he will send by the first mail to the Haitian Minister at Washington powers identic with those held by the Dominican representative. DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
DIVISION OF LATIN-AMERICAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, April 27, 1912.

DEAR MR. WILSON: In pursuance of the appointment made yesterday by the Secretary for the meeting of the Dominican and Haitian Ministers, and for negotiations regarding the boundary dispute, Messrs Menos and Peynado met the Secretary this morning at ten o'clock.

The Secretary, after referring to his recent visit to both countries and to the generous hospitality there enjoyed by him, pointed out the ideal location of these two Republics on what is regarded as the richest of the West India islands, close to a market, and beyond any real exterior peril; the desirability of their maintaining cordial relations with one another, and of the primary necessity, therefore, of settling all controversy regarding their boundary; that, this source of annoyance being removed, it would probably be possible for both countries to materially reduce their military establishments to what may merely be necessary for policing the countries. The Secretary further stated that he regarded these negotiations as of the utmost importance, and sincerely hoped that a speedy adjustment of the matter might be reached which would be both honorable and satisfactory to all parties.

The Secretary thereupon withdrew, and Messrs. Menos and Peynado exchanged their full powers, each reading the authorization of the other without comment. They thereupon adjourned the meeting until Tuesday at 10:30 a. m., when they will come prepared to exchange copies of their respective full powers and to proceed with the negotiations.

April 30, 1912.

Dear Mr. Wilson: Pursuant to the adjournment on Saturday, the Ministers of Haiti and Dominican Republic met this morning to continue the discussion of the boundary question. The Ministers exchanged their full powers, each declaring that he found the power of the other in due and proper form, and exchanging copies. The Dominican Minister first asked the Haitian Minister if he had any suggestions to offer regarding the procedure, to which Mr. Menos replied that he had, that he thought that the protocol of arbitration should provide that what seemed to him and his Government to be a previous question should be decided by the tribunal before it entered into a further examination of the case. This question arises out of the fact that the Dominican Republic and Haiti have heretofore entered into conventions which have endeavored to fix the boundary line, and it is alleged on the part of Haiti that money has been paid the Dominican Government pursuant to the arrangement in these conventions and accepted by that Government, and that the conventions are entirely valid and binding and in themselves settle the boundary question. This, I understand, the Dominican Republic is unwilling to admit, claiming that the conventions are invalid, as never having been executed with proper authority and therefore not binding. I told the Ministers that although I could see no intrinsic objection in having this question determined as a previous question, I thought that all difficulties might be evaded if the protocol was made general and both parties permitted to submit all evidence in their possession and to rely on all documents heretofore executed.

After this Mr. Peynado said that he had in his mind a question which seemed to him would have to be decided before the negotiations could be fully concluded by a convention, and that that question was that the status quo on the frontier at the time of the acceptance of the good offices of the United States should be restored, and he stated that Haiti had advanced up to Pedernales and other points which they had not occupied in January of last year, and that his Government felt that the Haitians must withdraw from these positions, and that such violation of the status quo which both Governments had promised the United States to preserve should cease, otherwise the negotiations that they were now trying to conduct would be futile. He said that this was a question that the Ministers must discuss and decide before proceeding to any further negotiations, and for a time seemed determined to press this point, to which the Haitian Minister would not in any degree assent. I told Mr. Peynado that I thought this was a very important and essential question, but that it might be disposed of if he would formally bring this question of status quo to the attention of this Government and submit whatever documents he had by way of proof, when we could make such representations to Haiti as we might deem wise in the premises, and that meantime the negotiations which all were so anxious to hasten could proceed to a conclusion. Mr. Peynado said that he did not care at this time to be understood as saying that the negotiations should not proceed unless and until the status quo was restored, but that he would put his complaint in the form of a memorandum and submit it to the Department, leaving a copy with the Haitian Minister if he desired it; as soon as he had time to prepare the minutes of today's and yesterday's meeting and get them into shape, and to prepare the memorandum to which he referred, he would notify the Haitian Minister and me and a subsequent meeting of the plenipotentiaries could be arranged.[1]

The Haitian Minister thereupon suggested that we continue, and submitted to Mr. Peynado for his study a draft in French of what he proposed to be the first article of the convention of arbitration, but of which he left me no copy. It has however been arranged that the Department shall have a copy of the minutes of the meetings from time to time, and this will undoubtedly be incorporated in them.

Pursuant to agreement, the plenipotentiaries of Haiti and the Dominican Republic met at the Department of State on July 1, 1912, at 11:00 a. m. The Dominican Minister thereupon stated that he had received a draft protocol prepared by the Minister of Haiti shortly after the last meeting, and having read it had certain observations which he desired to make regarding it. These he submitted in writing, in Spanish, saying that it would not be possible for him to express himself in English or French with sufficient accuracy with regard thereto.

Mr. Peynado thereupon submitted a draft protocol in Spanish, which he proposed should be agreed to.

[Memorandum of the fifth meeting.]

July 10, 1912.

On Saturday [July 6] at 11 o'clock the Haitian-Dominican plenipotentiaries met further to discuss their boundary question. After two hours' discussion of quite immaterial points they were able to make no progress and adjourned, with the understanding that they should be notified on Monday by the Department the date of the next meeting.

The fundamental difference between the plenipotentiaries seems to be that the Haitian Minister strongly contends that the protocol of arbitration should specifically define the issues between the parties and desires to have determined as a previous question the validity or invalidity of the conventions of '95 and '98, whereas the Dominican Minister seems to feel that a protocol on much broader lines should be drawn, merely referring the whole question to arbitration and at the same time providing for the appointment of an international commission of topographical engineers and experts, appointed either by the Hague Court or by the parties, which shall visit the disputed zone and by means of witnesses ascertain as precisely as possible the location of the three lines of the Treaty of Aranjuez, the line of 1856, and the line of 1874, and report its findings to the court, so that should the court decide the treaties of '95 and '98 to be valid, it will immediately have the information as to where the line of '74 ran. If its decision should be contrary, it will have information before it as to the other two lines. The Dominican Minister contends that, whereas it will be a matter of comparative ease for impartial investigators to ascertain those lines at present, it would probably be quite out of the question for them to do so should it become locally known what line was fixed by the court.

I believe that it would be well if the Secretary would meet the plenipotentiaries on Saturday next at 11 o'clock [July 13], when they have been notified the next meeting will be held, and take up with them urgently the necessity of coming to some conclusion and the possible desirability of the Department's endeavoring to draw a protocol that may reconcile the views of both.

HUNTINGTON WILSON.

Address of Mr. Knox to the President of the Dominican Republic, Santo Domingo, March 27, 1912.

Mr. President and Gentlemen: In fulfillment of the wish of the President of the United States that I should personally meet the eminent men to whom the people of the neighboring Caribbean countries have confided the reins of government and that I should enjoy the privilege of becoming better acquainted with the peoples of those countries, it is my good fortune to come among you bearing a cordial message of good will from the Government and people of the United States to their comrades in the community of American republics. I feel especial gratification in being enabled for the first time to breathe the air of the oldest city in all the Americas, identified for all time with the undying fame of Columbus, founded by the great Admiral's brother; the spot where first were planted the fertile seeds of civic order and of Christianity in the great western empire of the peoples; the scene of the untiring efforts of the discoverer to found an enduring civilization; and the home of Las Casas, that great and good man who, in the sixteenth century, stood forth as the advocate of the rights of man and who is justly revered by all liberty-loving Americans as one of the earliest apostles of democracy and freedom.

I stand, as it were, in the passing shadow of the bereavement your country has suffered in the loss of that humble, unselfish, and sincere patriot, Ramón Cáceres, slain at his post of duty; but I rejoice to see the passing of that dark cloud without disturbing the normal march of your people in the broad path of orderly self-control. It is an especial satisfaction to me that I can say this to you, men of Santo Domingo, who are in a position to bear witness to the unfeigned interest the United States takes in the welfare and stable progress of the peoples of the great American brotherhood; to the earnest sympathy we feel for all the younger commonwealths that, like your own, have passed through the fires of tribulation toward a higher and better national life; and to the unselfish spirit that prompts my countrymen and the Government of which I am a part to extend a ready helpfulness to all who are prepared and willing to help themselves to win stability and good order for themselves and for their posterity.

Santo Domingo stands to-day a bright example to all the Americas and to the world, teaching the lesson that all free peoples are fit for good self-government if they set about it in a way to do justice to themselves. That is what you Dominicans have done, and it is precisely because of this that my country was enabled to lend you a helping hand in order to strengthen and make durable the rehabilitation for which you strove. The rapid growth of national revenue and agricultural resources in the last five years is far beyond the most fervent expectations. I am convinced that this is but the beginning, and that your Republic is but on the threshold of still greater progress. Your position among the countries of the western seas is singularly advantageous. Lying on the avenues of approach to the Isthmian Canal, now on the eve of completion, your island can not fail to share in the prosperity that will attend the opening of a highway destined to change the old currents of international commerce.

I have had recent occasion to emphasize, in public addresses, the new and enlarged responsibilities to be assumed by the United States as the patron of the Isthmian Canal, and as the upholder of the time-honored doctrine which bears the name of Monroe. The maintenance of that doctrine and the effective carrying out of the policies that flow therefrom demand a peculiarly intimate coordination on the part of all the nations which are to reap far-reaching benefits of the canal. It behooves them to be cooperative, not obstructive. Each is concerned in uplifting itself; each is benefited by the uplifting of its neighbor. No more signal obstruction could be interposed in the path of general progress than for any of the affected countries to fall into disrepute through subversive disturbances or failure to discharge its international obligations. No greater aid can be given toward realizing that general welfare for which we all strive than the solid establishment of peaceful prosperity. You, men of Santo Domingo, have led the way toward realizing this high end through means whereby your country may continue to be prosperous, independent, self-respecting, and entitled to the respect of all.

The relations of friendship and cordial intercourse which have always existed between the United States and Santo Domingo are singularly close and have worked for the mutual advantage of both countries, thus fulfilling one of the highest duties of neighborliness. Flowing through natural channels, their reciprocal commerce has thriven and has kept afloat one of the few lines of steamers that have survived the competition of foreign shipping.

It is the earnest prayer of my country and of my countrymen that peace and freedom may be the abiding heritage of the people of Santo Domingo; that internal perturbations and external conflicts may be averted by wise and just counsels at home and in your foreign relations.

In conclusion, permit me to express how deeply I am touched by your cordial welcome; and, feeling that it is rather the people of the United States that you greet than my individual self, I thank you in the name of my fellow citizens.

Reply of President Victoria.

POLITICAL AFFAIRS.—INSURRECTION.—CLOSURE OF PORTS.—MEASURES TO PROTECT AMERICAN INTERESTS.—REQUESTS FOR ASYLUM AT AMERICAN LEGATION AND CONSULATE; ATTITUDE OF THE UNITED STATES.—SUCCESSION OF PROVISIONAL PRESIDENTS FREILE ZALDUMBIDE AND BAQUERIZO MORENO.—ELECTION AND INAUGURATION OF PRESIDENT PLAZA.

Introductory note. During an uprising against him, August 11, 1911, General Eloy Alfaro, President of Ecuador, took refuge in the Legation of Chile; from there he sent his resignation to Congress. (See For. Rel., 1911, pp. 186–187.) On August 31, 1911, in a letter to the Diplomatic Corps at Quito, he promised to depart at once for Panama, remain in exile "at least a year," and keep entirely aloof from Ecuador's affairs while absent. On this understanding the Government of Ecuador consented, September 13, 1911, to his departure.

His successor, Emilio Estrada, died December 21, 1911. On receipt of this news next day at Esmeraldas, a port near the Colombian border, the insurrectionists there organized a provisional government for the province of Esmeraldas, and also cabled General Flavio E. Alfaro, nephew of General Eloy, that they had elected him Supreme Chief of the Provisional Government of Ecuador. Both the Alfaros were at Balboa, Panama. Flavio sailed December 23, made landings at Tumaco, Limones and other points on December 26–28, and on the 29th at Esmeraldas, where he completed his military preparations for that region.

On the 30th Flavio's agents at Guayaquil notified him of the organization, on the 28th, of a rival provisional government of which the Supreme Chief was General Pedro J. Montero, who, ignoring Flavio, had sent for Eloy, under whom he had served during Eloy's presidency, and to whom he still deferred. Eloy Alfaro arrived January 2, 1912, and Flavio on the 5th, at Guayaquil. The two provisional governments were consolidated by the submission of Flavio, who on January 8 was made commanding general, Montero retaining his title of Supreme Chief; Eloy, the real leader, had no office, but, in a manifesto addressed to the people, gave himself the character of mediator, though without mentioning any question at issue.

Flavio left Guayaquil on January 11 to take the field and soon met the Esmeraldas troops, who had been defeated on January 9th at Huigras. Flavio was defeated at Yaguachi and at Naranjito, January 17–20, in the course of which engagements he was wounded, a circumstance that gave Montero a pretext for relieving him of the command, which he transferred to General Eloy, January 19. Flavio next day severed his connection with Montero's command. The Government forces under General Leonidas Plaza Gutiérrez and his second in command, General Julio Andrade, had defeated the rebels in every engagement, and on January 22 articles of capitulation were signed by Generals Plaza and Montero, and witnessed by the British and American Consuls General, whereby in exchange for surrender General Plaza granted safe conduct ("amplias garantías") to all persons, civil and military, who had directly or indirectly taken part, for any reason, in the "political movement of December 28, 1911," excepting common criminals.

But the populace, both at Guayaquil and Quito, demanded the persons of the rebel leaders with such fury that the Government overruled General Plaza and ordered them to be tried for treason. On the 25th the trials accordingly began, the Minister of War, Navarro, presiding; Montero was the first to be tried and he was sentenced to sixteen years in jail: the maximum penalty. This was immediately made known to the people, thousands of whom, demanding the delivery to them of the prisoners, had for hours been crowded before the court-room; they entered, overpowered the guards, and lynched Montero in the most brutal way.

General Plaza now received orders to transfer the other prisoners to Quito for trial, but he demurred because he believed he could prevent a recurrence of violence in Guayaquil, whereas at Quito not one of the prisoners would escape the mob. Again ordered to send them to Quito, he obeyed, vehemently protesting. On the 28th all the prisoners were lynched, immediately after arrival in Quito.

The Chargé d'Affaires of Ecuador to the Secretary of State.

[Not a translation.]

Legation of Ecuador,
Washington, January 18, 1912.

Honorable Secretary of State: I believe it is my duty to lay before your excellency some facts relating to the present political situation in my country and to relieve the United States Government of any unusual anxiety regarding the life and property of American citizens in Ecuador.

Your excellency is aware that on the 22nd of December last Mr. Emilio Estrada, Constitutional President of Ecuador, died at Guayaquil, and that, following the provisions of the Constitution, he was succeeded in the Executive functions by Dr. Carlos Freile Zaldumbide, President of the Chamber of Senate. Mr. Freile Zaldumbide, in accordance with the Constitution, called for elections that should have taken place on the 28th, 29th, 30th and 31st of this month.

On the 28th of December General Pedro Montero, Commander of the Third Military Zone, revolted against the Constitutional Government, at Guayaquil, and proclaimed himself Provisional Supreme Chief of Ecuador, pending the arrival of General Flavio Alfaro, in favor of whom, it is said, this political movement has been made.[1]

The action of General Montero is entirely unjustified. Barely thirty days were to elapse when he and his partisans could have had constitutionally elected General Flavio Alfaro, or anybody else. No reasons were given for such an outrage, that is costing and will cost the credit of the country and enormous losses involved in war expenses, damage of crops, paralysis of labor, and the sequel of indemnities that the nation will have to face eventually. It has been simply an assault which nobody could ever have expected. General Montero only a few months before, in August last, had given evidence of his respect for the Constitution by refusing support to the dictatorial tendencies of his intimate friend and mate General Eloy Alfaro, former President, in his attempt to proclaim himself Supreme Chief, and by standing with the army of his command by the people. The present Government could not suspect General Montero of treason, therefore continued him in the command of the Third Military Zone.

General Flavio Alfaro, who in August last acknowledged and advised his followers to acknowledge the legitimate Government of President Estrada and then voluntarily exiled himself, and General Eloy Alfaro, former President, who resigned in August also after promising the Diplomatic Corps in Quito, who had shielded him from the vengeance of the populace, not to take any further part in the politics of the country, are both back in Guayaquil, and it is said that both are taking active part in the work of the mutineers.

To show how far General Eloy Alfaro is a prime mover in the action of General Montero, I beg to refer to the request that my Government sent through the American Minister in Quito shortly after Mr. Estrada's death, to prevent any breach of neutrality in the Canal Zone. It was reported that he was planning to ship war materials to help the overthrowing of the Government of Ecuador.

As to General Flavio Alfaro, his appointment as Provisional President by General Montero[2] is quite sufficient to prove that he is greatly responsible for the actual conditions in my country.

The Province of Esmeraldas, probably the city of Esmeraldas only, far away from the port of Guayaquil and only accessible by sea, and where there was a very small garrison, proclaimed itself for General Flavio Alfaro a few days before the coup of General Montero; which fact shows conclusively that some understanding existed between them.

General Montero holds Guayaquil, where he revolted, and most likely the city of Babahoyo, capital of the Province of Los Rios, has also been "proclaimed." Outside of Guayaquil, Riobamba, Cuenca and Quito, no regular troops were stationed in any town, so that it is an easy matter to "pronounce" or to subdue a few other towns and villages. In all, General Montero may now control Guayaquil, Babahoyo, and Esmeraldas. Guayaquil and Babahoyo are in direct communication by the river Guayas, but Esmeraldas is so distant from Guayaquil that it is practically impossible for the revolutioneers to run any kind of Government in said town.

[1] This is a confusion of two rival movements; see introductory note.

[2] This is an error; the provisional president was Montero, who appointed Flavio to be "General-in-chief of the Army and Supreme Director of the War"; see introductory note.

The Constitutional Government is in full control of the Provinces of Carchi, Imbabura, Pichincha, Leon, Tungurahua, Chimborazo, Bolívar, Cana, Azuay, Loja, and probably of Manabí and Oro also, and in all probabilities they will all remain loyal under their constitutional rights. The Government has not expressed even sympathy for any candidate in the elections; in fact it did not even have time to do anything else than call for general and free elections according to the Constitution.

It is well to point out that in this revolution only soldiers have taken part. Not even a minimum portion of the people has joined the mutineers and no grievances of any kind have been put forth. The people of Guayaquil, Babahoyo, and Esmeraldas, at the mercy of the soldiers, have been obliged to accept whatever has happened.

I understand that your excellency is anxious about the conditions regarding the railway between Durán and the interior, property of an American company. I have no official news as to anything that might lead to understand that the property is in danger of damage. As to the part of the line that is within the portion of the country under the control of the Constitutional Government, I can assure your excellency that not only it is not exposed to any damage but that it is amply protected, and that all transportation services and others will be promptly paid. In regard to the line located in the part of the country where the troops of General Montero are stationed, I do not think that any damage will be done willingly.

I have been informed extra-officially of the destruction of a bridge, and this may have been done by the revolutionists. However outrageous the move of General Montero and Generals Alfaro may be, I do not believe that they will injure in any way the property of any foreign citizen or corporation.

Whatever legitimate claim the Company might eventually have against the country for loss or interruption of business, incidental damages or others, the country will pay, as it has always paid. As a consequence of the last revolution of 1906, promoted also by General Eloy Alfaro, the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Company filed a claim amounting to $85,000, and this was promptly paid. No action of your excellency's Government was necessary.

Ecuador has always made good any and all legitimate claims of foreigners, never having given cause [for] the intervention of any foreign power. The country well understands that it is directly responsible for the life and property of foreign citizens, and it has always been its policy to protect them and make good any and every justified claim.

The line between Durán and the interior affords the only practicable way of conveying troops. The Government will have to transport its troops on the line and will pay, in conformity with its contract with the company, the proper fares. It would greatly assist the action of the Government in repressing the revolution if General Montero and his soldiers were not permitted to use the line, its rolling material, etc.; but not even for that purpose would I ask your excellency's Government for any interference in the shape of a drastic action to put the property of the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Company under direct protection of a foreign force.

Personally I am a good and sincere friend of the United States and the Government that I represent has the same good feeling towards this country and its Government, and I know that any action on your excellency's part to intervene in this matter, other than in a moral way, might be looked upon, not only in Ecuador but in all South America, as contradictory to your excellency's policy of respecting and always having respected the autonomy of the sister Republics.

The Constitutional Government of Ecuador will, certainly, overpower the revolution. It is standing for no particular man or party, and it is only sustaining the constitutional rights against a military coup.

It is the policy of your excellency's Government to support in any case and at all events the constitutional rights of all countries, and I am positive that in this particular case all the sympathies of the United States are for the Constitutional Government of Ecuador, which has done nothing to justify, even in appearance, any revolt.

While I acknowledge the perfect right that your excellency has to be absolutely assured as to the protection that American citizens and their property should receive from any civilized country, I strongly appeal to your so well-known good feelings towards South America in general, begging you to instruct your representatives in Ecuador to avoid all drastic actions. These might be misunderstood and lead to a disagreeable state of affairs for the Constitutional Government. The revolutionists themselves might spread the false news that the Constitutional Government had sought for American intervention, and raise in the country an unjustified ill feeling against both the United States and the Constitutional Government, and cause an endless struggle the consequences of which can not be foreseen.

I am positive your excellency will approve of my frank exposition, and that the people and Government of Ecuador will have one more reason for appreciating the proceedings of the United States on behalf of closer and friendlier relations with one of the sister countries of the American continent.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

SIR: The Department refers to your telegram of the 13th instant reporting the probable outbreak at Guayaquil of a counter-revolution and in which you state that you had already advised the Consul General at that place and the commander of the Yorktown to receive no political refugees, and suggest that the Consul General and the Commander of the Yorktown, in view of the difficulties of communication between Quito and Guayaquil, be furnished by the Department with instructions in the above sense.

No attempt will be made to discuss the question of asylum in ships of war, which you will find fully treated in Moore's Digest, volume 2, pages 845 et seq. It is understood that this subject is covered by the standing instructions furnished by the Navy Department to all American naval officers.

As to the question of an instruction to the Consul General at Guayaquil, the Department is of the opinion that the instructions that were issued to him at the time of the local riots against the Peruvian citizens at Guayaquil during the spring of 1910 covered the case fully and adequately, and made any further direction unnecessary.

You are correct in assuming that what is technically known as "the right of asylum" in a strict sense is not claimed by this Government. However, there is an evident distinction between this case and that where temporary refuge is given within the residence of a consular or diplomatic representative in order to preserve innocent human life. The general practice of the Department on the subject of temporary refuge is embodied in an instruction to the Consul General at Guayaquil which you will find in the files of the Legation.[1]

In the case of temporary refuge, the Department finds it expedient to give a certain latitude to the judgment of the official who is called upon to determine, within his discretion, the course recommended by broad considerations of humanity in each individual case. It is accordingly the general rule of the Department to place all emphasis upon the responsibility of the consular or diplomatic officer in the matter and to permit him, within these limitations, at his discretion to afford temporary refuge where such is necessary to preserve innocent human life.

The Secretary of State to the Chargé d'Affaires of Ecuador.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 30, 1912.

SIR: I desire to acknowledge the receipt of your courteous note of the 18th instant, in which you give an account of the events which led up to the revolutionary movement that recently developed in Ecuador, and make comment on the political situation existing in your country, according to the information in your possession at the time of your writing. You point out that with the exception of a few outlying districts, the port of Guayaquil, and the city of Esmeraldas, the Government of Señor Carlos Freile Zaldumbide was recognized as the legitimate, constituted authority by the inhabitants of the entire Republic, who condemned the movement inaugurated by the proclamation of General Montero, in December last, at Guayaquil. You add that Ecuador understands its responsibility in guaranteeing protection of life and property and will satisfy any legitimate claim for damages growing out of the political disturbances upon Ecuadorian territory.

You state that any drastic action taken by the American forces at Guayaquil in order to afford protection to the interests of American citizens established in Ecuador would have had a most unfortunate political effect in your country and throughout South America.

In this acknowledgment of your communication I desire to assure you that the American Government would have sincerely regretted any necessity for such action in Ecuador as you refer to, but undoubtedly would have been delinquent in its clear duty if it had failed to make all adequate preparation for an emergency which might have arisen from the turbulent conditions then existing in Ecuador.

The expression of the friendly feeling of yourself and your Government, conveyed in your note, are cordially reciprocated; and it must be apparent that the Government of the United States has consistently pursued a course in its relations with Ecuador which has been dictated by its high esteem of the friendship it has always desired to cultivate with that country.

The assurances which you have given that the claims of the Guayaquil and Quito Railway Company, arising out of the past conflict, will be promptly and fully paid, have been received by me with satisfaction.

The Department has been gratified at the receipt of reports indicating that the revolutionary movement in Ecuador is at an end, and ventures to voice the hope that normal conditions will be completely and permanently restored in that Republic, in order that a new era of political and economic advance may be inaugurated which will assure to the country a development to which it has a right to aspire and enable the Republic to fulfill its obligations toward all legitimate enterprises within its borders—an object in the accomplishment of which all patriotic effort should unite in order to procure for the Ecuadorian nation the full benefits that should naturally flow from a continued maintenance of constitutional order.

Eloy, Flavio and Medardo Alfaro and Ulpiano Paez[1] were brought here the 28th, and had scarcely reached the penitentiary when a mob of civilians and soldiers perpetrated upon them the most monstrous and barbarous atrocities. While still living, their eyes were gouged out, * * * and they were dragged naked through the streets by ropes, while women carried the bloody garments, shouting; they were finally shot to death and their bodies burned.

No. 53.] American Legation,
Quito, February 2, 1912.

Sir: I have the honor to send the following report of the recent armed disturbances in Ecuador.

President Estrada left the capital for Guayaquil on November 27 in the hope that the change to the coast would improve his health. While many alarming rumors had been current about the President's health, no one knew that the President's state was as critical as later developed. It was therefore with considerable surprise that on the morning of December 22 news was received at the Legation that President Estrada had died suddenly the night before.

The death of the President was a great disappointment to this Legation, because after a great deal of work on the part of all the members of the staff, the Ecuadorian Government had resumed daily deposits, and 184,000 sucres were already on deposit in London, while arrangements had been made to secure locally the difference necessary to meet the January coupon, and negotiations were well under way to arrange a loan for the three coupons overdue. At one blow the entire work of this Legation since August was rendered null.

Immediately after the death of the President, General Leonidas Plaza G. was announced as the Government candidate, and his nomination was apparently received with great enthusiasm throughout the whole Republic.

It is here necessary to review the fact that General Plaza, during his previous incumbency of the presidency, during the years 1901 to 1905, had been noted for his strong anticlerical views and the stern manner in which he curbed the privileges of the Church. He was therefore very unpopular with the Conservative party, which is by far the most numerous in Ecuador, although as it does not as a rule take a very active part in politics and does not control many newspapers, its opposition to General Plaza did not become at once apparent.

[1] Also General Manuel Serrano and Colonel Luciano Coral.

One other factor of great importance entered into the situation. It will be remembered that the last Congress annulled the charter of the Compañía Nacional Comercial, a monopoly in which the great moneyed interests of Guayaquil were heavily interested. General Plaza, during his short incumbency as Minister of Hacienda, had shown himself the enemy of this monopoly and was therefore openly opposed in his candidacy for the presidency by the business interests of Guayaquil. These interests, while usually taking no part in politics, of course immediately begin to do so when a condition of affairs arises which interferes with their business.

The men behind the Compañía Nacional Comercial therefore desired some man for President, it did not matter who, whom they could control and who would not interfere with their privileges. General Plaza they could not control, and therefore they were opposed to him.

I believe that the opposition of these two elements, the Conservative party and the moneyed interests behind the Compañía Nacional Comercial, was responsible for the recent revolution.

It must be remembered that the Executive Power in this country rests entirely on armed force, that is, the Army. It was therefore the attempt of the forces opposing General Plaza to subvert a portion of the Army. This they found ready to their hands in the person of the opportunist commander of the Third Military Zone, General Pedro J. Montero, and the garrison of Guayaquil. General Pedro J. Montero is an old friend of General Eloy Alfaro and could therefore count on the support of the Alfarista party and other elements disaffected with the present Government.

[Military news.]

On the morning of December 30 news was received at the Legation of the destruction of the wooden trestle railroad bridge near Alausi. This was immediately made the subject of a note of protest to the Foreign Office.[1] The Government replied that the destruction of the bridge was the work of the revolutionists and requested that the railroad company immediately repair the bridge at the expense of the Government.

On the morning of January 7 the U. S. S. Yorktown reported her arrival in Guayaquil.

[Military news.]

Had the revolutionists so desired they could still have made the Government pay heavily for the taking of Guayaquil. This would however very probably have involved the destruction of the city, and the foreign business interests appealed to General Eloy Alfaro to surrender in order to save lives and property. Emissaries were therefore sent to Durán to confer with General Plaza, and, as I understand (I have as yet no definite information on this subject), the revolutionists agreed to surrender Guayaquil provided that they, the leaders, were permitted to leave the country. This agreement was signed by General Plaza and witnessed by the British and American Consuls.

---

The Government repudiated the action of General Plaza and ordered the leaders of the revolution to be tried for treason. General Plaza protested but was overruled.

SIR: I have the honor to advise the Department that the political situation, due to the election of a new President, has reached such a point of tension that it is very probable that further armed disturbances may occur. * * * The Conservatives are supporting Dr. Tobar[1] and the Church is exerting its influence in his favor. The members of the present Provisional Cabinet are also assisting him, whether from Conservative sympathies or personal antagoism to General Plaza. On the other hand the Army is strongly in favor of General Plaza, its commander in the successful campaign which has just closed, and may not permit a free election, thus introducing the danger of civil disturbances referred to above. * * *

American Legation,
Quito, March 8, 1912.

Sir: I have the honor to inform the Department that on the morning of the fifth instant there was a good deal of excitement in Quito on account of the proposal of the Government to change the commanding officers of certain of the battalions stationed in this city. During the afternoon it became evident that the Vice President, Dr. Carlos Freile Zaldumbide, had definitely decided to use the influence of the Government to oppose General Plaza. General Navarro, Minister of War, and Señor Intriago, Minister of Hacienda, who were supporters of General Plaza, resigned.

Having decided to support the candidacy of Dr. Tobar, the Government of Señor Freile Zaldumbide felt the need of strengthening its position with the Army. An agreement was reached by which General Julio Andrade consented to support the Government and oppose General Plaza.

Late in the afternoon General Andrade was appointed Minister of Public Instruction, and the tension became acute. It is stated that the Government had planned to seize the person of General Plaza that same night. To that end several hundred citizens were armed and held in readiness. In the evening the Vice President, accompanied by his Cabinet, went to the barracks of the police battalion, which they believed to be loyal. It happened, however, that the second in command of this battalion, the Subintendente of Police, was secretly supporting General Plaza. He informed the General of the proposed plot.

General Plaza immediately sent word to the troops on whom he could rely, and before the Government could carry out its intention his troops had seized the city.

This move took the Government entirely by surprise. Its supporters offered practically no resistance, and although shooting continued in the streets all night, most of it was in the air and there were very few casualties. General Andrade was shot and killed just as he was leaving the police barracks with the intention of rallying his men.

General Plaza arrested the Vice President and Cabinet. They were, however, released and escorted to their homes as soon as danger to their persons had ceased. The Government resigned immediately, and although General Plaza was practically dictator he preferred to go through the legal form of an election before actually assuming office. Therefore, following the letter of the Constitution, Señor Dr. Francisco Andrade Marin, President of the Chamber of Deputies and an ardent supporter of General Plaza, assumed the functions of the Executive ad interim, and reappointed General Navarro and Señor Intriago as Minister of War and Hacienda respectively.

The political situation is greatly simplified and the prospects for a prolonged period of peace are better than at any time since the overthrow of President Alfaro the eleventh of last August.

Quito, March 18, 1912.

SIR: I have the honor to inform the Department that there is much uncertainty in the present political condition in Ecuador. The events of the last few months have removed all the Liberal leaders with the exception of General Plaza. In the ordinary course of events this gentleman would be elected as there is now no candidate opposing him for the presidency of the Republic. General Plaza has very many enemies in the Conservative party, who are opposed to him on account of his Liberal attitude in regard to the Church during his last administration, and in his own party those who are against him for personal reasons. Some even accuse him of being responsible for the death of General Julio Andrade. Many threats of personal violence to General Plaza have been made and, considering the lawless condition of the country, it is not impossible that some such attempt may be made.

Should General Plaza be killed, the condition of affairs would be most grave. There would surely be much violence between the different factions who, being unable to agree on a leader, would fight among themselves, and the Conservative or Clerical party would seize the opportunity to attack the Liberals. A state of affairs closely resembling anarchy would result.

As a proof that much anxiety is felt by all classes, I have the honor to inform the Department that several individuals have requested asylum in this Legation in case of further disturbance in Quito. To everyone who has asked for asylum I have replied that the Department of State deprecates the granting of asylum except where it is absolutely necessary from the point of view of humanity, to save life; that I could not discuss a hypothetical question of future danger but must decide each case on its merits as it arose; and I strongly urged the individuals in question to adopt every other means of securing their safety in case of trouble instead of coming to this Legation, as I desired to hold absolutely aloof from all internal questions.

[Inclosure.—Extract.]

The Military Attaché of the American Legation to the American Minister.

AMERICAN LEGATION; ON BOARD U. S. S. "MARYLAND," Santa Elena, Ecuador, February 11, 1192.

SIR: In compliance with your letter of instructions dated January 19, 1912,[1] and in accordance with the cablegram from the Honorable the Secretary of State, dated January 17, 5 p. m., I departed from Quito on January 20th, taking the first south bound train for Guayaquil. [Here an account of several vexatious delays.] The train reached the Durán terminus at 9:40 p. m. [the 22d]. I had made arrangements by wire to use the railway tug, and was about to embark when General Plaza, then at Durán with some 2,000 Government troops, sent word that he desired to see me. I called at his quarters and met him and General Julio Andrade, his chief of staff. They were both most effusive in their greetings. After a few pleasantries General Plaza said that he hoped to have a talk with me on the following day. I then took the tug to the U. S. S. Yorktown, which was anchored in the Guayas river a little above the railway company's Guayaquil dock, going aboard at 10:30 p. m.

Lieutenant Edison Ernest Scranton, U. S. Navy, temporarily in command of the Yorktown, informed me of the state of affairs in Guayaquil and of the part taken by the ship in the local disturbances. Also of the attitude of the railway officials, of the wish expressed by the president of the railroad, Mr. E. H. Norton, for a landing party to protect property, and of the participation of our Consul General in the peace negotiations, then being carried on. We went over the entire situation and I explained to him your views and the action recommended, at the same time delivering your letter addressed to the "Commander United States Naval Forces in Ecuadorian Waters", copy of which is attached hereto, marked "B".[1] I found Lieutenant Scranton to be thoroughly familiar with and alive to the situation, and he cheerfully expressed a desire to carry out your wishes and instructions, and to confer and cooperate with me in all matters affecting the late political crisis. Lieutenant Scranton deserves a great deal of credit for the manner in which he comprehendingly met every emergency.

[1] See sub-inclosure 1.

The part taken by the Yorktown between January 7 and 27, 1912, in the late revolution is shown in the letter of Lieutenant E. E. Scranton, U. S. Navy, hereto attached and marked "C",[2] and also in the reports of operations of Commander Bertolette and Lieutenant Scranton, copies of which are marked "D"[1] and "E".[1] * * *

On January 19 General Plaza sent a demand to General Montero to surrender. Identic notes were addressed to the Dean of the Consular Corps at Guayaquil and to General Montero, and were brought on board the Yorktown at about 7:00 p. m. by an aide-de-camp of General Plaza, together with a note from the latter to the Commander of the Yorktown requesting him to forward the demand for surrender. The letters were sent ashore that night to the American Consul General, who transmitted them to the respective addresses.

On the same day, at about 2:30 in the afternoon, a Peace Commission consisting of the American Consul General, the British Consul, and five citizens of Guayaquil, had gone to Durán with the object of continuing on to Yaguachi for a conference with General Plaza, but was obliged to return to Guayaquil at 4:30 p. m. without accomplishing anything. * * *

Upon the request of the American Consul General the Yorktown's launch was placed at the service of the self-appointed commission consisting of the American Consul General, the British Consul and other members, who made a trip from Guayaquil to Durán for the purpose of conferring with General Plaza, on January 20.

The terms proposed by General Plaza, practically an unconditional surrender, had been revised and amended by General Montero. These peace terms were changed by General Plaza, and the commission then returned with the papers to Guayaquil.

On January 21 the peace commission made a second trip to Durán in the Yorktown's launch, with peace overtures from General Montero. General Plaza made further changes in these proposals and handed the papers to the commission, which returned to Guayaquil. * * *

General Montero's local government was being weakened daily by the retirement of his more prominent political supporters. On January 18 three of his five cabinet ministers resigned their portfolios, and within two days following several of his military commanders resigned, including General Flavio Alfaro, as Commanding General. General Eloy Alfaro was then appointed (January 19) Director of War, which practically gave him command of the rebel army.

Realizing that the de jure Government was ultimately bound to triumph, and fully appreciating the necessity for our non-interference in the political disturbances of Ecuador at this moment, I requested Lieutenant Scranton not to land any armed men nor other party, either on the Durán side of the river or at Guayaquil, and informed him that I would assume all responsibility, as your aide and the Department's representative, for any failure to protect American interests or the Consulate, which could be clearly seen from the Yorktown; intending, in accordance with your instructions, if the necessity arose, to land with an officer and a few unarmed men and to request our Consul General to come on board the Yorktown with his office records should the bombardment or the setting on fire of the city be imminent. Provisions were also made for receiving on board the American residents, for the protection of life. Lieutenant Scranton most willingly made arrangements for carrying out these requests. * * *

The peace terms that had been attested by General Montero were signed by General Plaza and handed back to the peace commission, which returned to Guayaquil about mid-day [January 22]. According to agreement, the peace commission was to have met General Montero at about 2:00 o'clock that afternoon for the purpose of informing him that the peace terms had been signed by General Plaza. A copy of the peace terms bearing the signature of the two generals was also to have been handed to General Montero. The latter, however, did not appear, but sought a hiding place where he thought he would be safe from any possible mob violence which might follow his surrender.

[1] See sub-inclosure 2. [2] Not printed.

General Flavio E. Alfaro, who has been serving as generalissimo of the revolutionary forces in Guayaquil, learning of the disappearance of General Montero, gave the order to his troops to carry out the provisions of the peace terms. While the revolutionary soldiers were in the act of giving up their arms heavy firing commenced in the streets of Guayaquil. * * * Several shots passed over the Yorktown, which lay about 500 yards away, and through the isolation ward on board, one bullet-hole being found in the awning stretched over the poop-deck. * * * The firing then became desultory. * * * No foreigner was injured as far as can be ascertained.

A great crowd of about 5,000 people, with many flags and banners, then [January 23] surged through the streets, breaking up into smaller groups. Speeches were made, flags waved and cheers given for the Government and General Plaza.

An officer was sent ashore by Lieutenant Scranton to investigate conditions, and found nothing to warrant any action on the part of the ship.

At about 4.45 p. m. the Government forces began to arrive from Durán on small steamers and other river craft. * * * Generals Plaza and Andrade were on one of the first steamers that reached the Guayaquil side. Here they were met by large crowds of civilians, some with arms and some without, carrying flags and shouting for the Constitutional Government. A great parade was formed and the triumphal march through the streets commenced. * * *

Lieutenant Scranton and I then called upon General Plaza, who was in command of Guayaquil. The General met us as we entered the Governor's palace and ushered us into the large room used by him as headquarters. I expressed the Legation's good wishes and congratulated the General upon the restoration of peace. I asked him if he would be prepared fully to protect American interests in event of further disturbances. He assured both Lieutenant Scranton and myself that he was in a position to guarantee ample protection to all foreign interests, and that he would take every measure possible to protect American life and property in case of trouble, which he assured us was not likely to occur. I requested the General to see that American life and property was not menaced; to prevent any anti-American demonstration, if practicable, and to guard the Consulate, if necessary, against annoyances or attacks of any kind; which he said he would do with pleasure, adding that there should be no fear of any trouble for Americans. * * * He said that he was very much pleased to learn that no armed landing party had been sent ashore during the stay of the Yorktown, as the landing of armed men had not been necessary and might have caused some ill feeling on the part of the people.

General Plaza was informed that the Yorktown would be only too glad to salute the port and country, inasmuch as the constituted Government had regained control of Guayaquil; but owing to the illness of Commander Bertolette, then on board, it was thought advisable to postpone the firing of the salute for a few days. General Plaza readily assented to this and said that he sincerely hoped that the Commander would speedily recover. He spoke highly of the officers and men and of what he regarded as the perfectly proper noninterference on the part of the Yorktown, whose action had been entirely within the bounds of international propriety. * * *

The coming of the Yorktown and the presence of our warships in Ecuadorian waters have had the desired moral effect, have minimized the damage to the railroad property, increased the respect for the established rights of foreigners and, possibly, prevented high-handed treatment and abuse of American residents in Ecuador. * * *

The first death from yellow fever among the crew of the Yorktown occurred at 9.30 a. m. January 23, when seaman C. W. Wood died in the ward improvised by Doctor Parker in his office at the Consulate.

Commander Bertolette, whose condition became worse on January 23, died on board the Yorktown at 2.14 a. m. the following day, from yellow fever. His death, which was deeply regretted, threw a pall over every one on the ship. It was deplorable that an officer and an enlisted man had to succumb to such a dreadful disease for, apparently, no other reason than the questionable necessity of protecting a little property. Both were sacrificed in the strict line of duty.

* * * There were in all eight yellow fever patients, two deaths, and a number of suspected cases between January 17 and 26. Few really expected to escape, and a sigh of relief went up when orders were received, on January 25, for the Yorktown to proceed to Santa Elena Bay. * * *

Everything is now quiet along the coast, and I hardly look for political disturbances of any consequence. * * *

The collier Prometheus arrived at Santa Elena on January 30, and the armored cruiser Maryland on February 1, 1912.

I have transferred to the U. S. S. Maryland, the ship of the senior officer present, and will continue to carry out your instructions.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

Messrs. Norton and Farr, officials of the railroad, in conference at the Department today, emphasize critical financial situation of the company which imperatively demands immediate relief.

A coal ship, it appears, has been ordered for the 25th instant, and unless 100,000 sucres are forthcoming within a week the order must be canceled and railroad operations suspended as soon as present Ecuador supply of coal is exhausted.

Since the Government of Ecuador is directly responsible for the railroad's present financial crisis, having failed to meet its just financial obligations to the railway, and as the railway has no other source of financial relief, you will immediately bring the foregoing to the attention of the competent officials of the Government of Ecuador, and say that you have been instructed to request a statement without delay as to what immediate action that Government is prepared to take.

General Plaza believes the railway's revolution bills are an imposition even if technically correct, but says that if their adjustment is made on a basis of average earnings of last six months of last year, plus fifty per cent, plus 65,000 sucres damages, he will use his utmost efforts to induce the Government to pay 100,000 sucres before April 25, and 50,000 more during May, and to approve all other accounts passed by Minister of Interior.

Department of State,
Washington, April 23, 1912.

Railway official statement shows there is now due railway company from the Government of Ecuador, on bills heretofore approved by the competent authorities of that Government, approximately 375,000 sucres, exclusive of approved bills of the company for services rendered and damages sustained during the recent revolution. As General Plaza apparently acknowledges that revolutionary bills are technically correct, the Department does not understand why payment of the 100,000 sucres so urgently needed should be made conditional upon compromise of bills of revolutionary period.

The railway officials are very anxious to work in harmony with the Government of Ecuador, and the Department believes they would be inclined to consider favorably an arrangement, if immediately accepted, on the following basis:

> The Government of Ecuador, having paid 100,000 sucres, to pay hereafter 50,000 sucres monthly in addition to its current account until such time as the Government of Ecuador shall have been placed by virtue of a loan in a position to extinguish all its indebtedness to the railway company; or, in the event of the loan not being negotiated, until such time as the total indebtedness of the Government to the railway company shall have been extinguished; and unqualifiedly to approve and accept all other accounts previously passed by the Director of Public Works; and to pay interest at the rate of six per cent on the unpaid balance of the railway accounts until such accounts shall have been fully discharged. The railway company on its part, on consideration of strict compliance with the foregoing, to adjust revolutionary bills on basis of average earnings last six months of last year, plus 50 per cent, plus 65,000 sucres damages.

Communicate the foregoing to the Government of Ecuador and press for immediate payment of 100,000 sucres, pointing out that, exclusive of revolutionary bills, more than three times this amount is due.

General Plaza states that the Government has 50,000 sucres cash on account of coal ship, and offers draft at 90 days sight to cover the other 50,000, which can be negotiated in Ecuador with discount of not more than 5 per cent. He now says payment of additional 50,000 sucres in May is impossible.

Arbitration of all bills prior to December 28, 1911, including all interest questions, is demanded by the Government.

Plaza also states that 100,000 shall be applied to revolutionary bills as compromised. He added that the utmost the Government can pay monthly until December is 10,000 sucres, to be applied to cancel the same account.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 3, 1912.

The greatest concessions that the railway company can make are embodied in Department's telegram of April 23. General Plaza's reply, which the Department must assume to represent the Government of Ecuador correctly, has been communicated to the railway officials here, who inform the Department that they are unable to accept the proposal as transmitted in your April 25. This proposal appears to be entirely at variance with General Plaza's previous statement, communicated in your April 21, which was essentially accepted by the railway company. The Government of the United States is therefore constrained to believe that a due regard for good faith in business dealings requires the Government of Ecuador immediately to meet its just obligations to the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Company.

The Government of the United States is compelled to inform the Government of Ecuador that, in view of the long-continued and fruitless efforts that have been made to secure for this American company due consideration, it cannot permit the destruction of this important and legitimate American enterprise, and that its duty to its citizens and their property requires that it secure for the railway company the full and adequate enjoyment of all its just rights and privileges.

The Government of the United States, in thus clearly making known its self-evident duty regarding the treatment of this American company, is mindful of the long-standing friendly relations which have existed between the two countries and would view with deep regret the continued failure on the part of the Government of Ecuador to provide the funds which it is apparent it has at its command, thus leaving to this Government no alternative but to take, on its own part, such action as to it may seem appropriate in order to assure this company that complete and ample protection to which it is so clearly entitled.

You will communicate this telegram textually to the Government of Ecuador, leave a copy with the Minister for Foreign Affairs, and request an immediate reply.

The Government of Ecuador now has 86,000 sucres toward payment of coal ship, and the other 14,000 can be obtained in about one month from the New York Consulate.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs says that his Government is so fully convinced of the rights and justice of its claims in the railway dispute that it stands ready to submit all questions to arbitration, and desires a full and impartial investigation of pending claims.

It cannot be denied that the Government of Ecuador has many just grounds for complaint against the railway which should be submitted to arbitration. I am convinced that Ecuador is sincerely desirous of meeting its financial obligations toward the railway.

MR. MINISTER: I have the honor to inform your excellency, that statements submitted by officials of the Guayaquil and Quito Railroad Co. to the Department of State in Washington show that there is now due and owing to the railroad company by the Government of Ecuador on bills heretofore approved by appropriate Ecuadorean officials, about 375,000 sucres, entirely exclusive of approved bills of the company for services rendered and damages sustained during the recent revolution.

In order, however, to facilitate an arrangement, I am informed that the railroad officials, who are extremely anxious to work in the most harmonious relations with the Government of Ecuador, would be inclined to consider favorably a compromise, if immediately accepted, on the following bases:

"The Government of Ecuador after having paid one hundred thousand sucres (S/.100,000), to pay hereafter fifty thousand sucres (S/.50,000) monthly, in addition to its current account until such time as the Government of Ecuador shall have been placed by virtue of a loan in a position to extinguish all its indebtedness to the railroad company, or in the event of the loan not being negotiated, until such time as the total indebtedness of the Government to the railroad company shall have been extinguished; and to unqualifiedly approve and accept all other accounts previously passed by the Director of Public Works, and to pay interest at the rate of six per cent (6%) on the unpaid balance of the railroad accounts until such accounts shall have been fully discharged.

"The railway company on its part, in consideration of the strict compliance with the foregoing, agrees to adjust the revolutionary bills on a basis of average earnings last six months last year plus fifty per cent (50%) plus sixty-five thousand sucres (S/.65,000) damages."

I desire once again, to invite the attention of your excellency to the critical financial condition that at present confronts the railroad and to urge that your excellency's Government make immediate payment of the one hundred thousand sucres (S/.100,000) for the coal ship. Your excellency will note that more than three times this amount is owed by the Government of Ecuador to the railway company exclusive of the revolutionary bills.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 11, 1912.

The Chargé d'Affaires of Ecuador, Mr. Wither, yesterday handed to the Department telegraphic instructions received by the Legation from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Ecuador. The instructions are as follows:

> Intervention rejected by the Chancellery. In proof of conciliatory spirit, the Government is ready to pay 100,000 sucres if a legal representative of the railway with full powers previously fixes the amount of the claim. The contracts speak of arbitration; never of intervention. Necessary to make formal protest. Ecuador claims what is owing to her.

The Department's telegram of May 3 makes the position of this Government sufficiently clear, and the Chargé d'Affaires was so informed.

You will emphasize the foregoing to the Ecuadorian Government and state forcefully that the matter will admit of no further delay, and that discussion of opposing claims against American company can be considered only at the proper time and after payment by Ecuador of the 100,000 sucres, which is only a small portion of the amount, regarding which there can be no dispute, owed to the railway company by the Government of Ecuador.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Quito, May 18, 1912.

Essential portions of note referred to in your May 16, my May 14:

I had the honor of pointing out to you, in my note No. 275 of the 6th instant (1), that the official intervention of your Government in these affairs seemed to me in every sense unnecessary, since, in the extreme case of not being able to arrive at a friendly settlement between the parties, there remained the arbitration stipulated in the contracts as an unavoidable and sure means of ending the controversy. Then I added that out of special deference to the Chargé d'Affaires of the United States, my Government felt bound to set to work to procure the means of giving to the company the help requested, while denying in principle, the strict obligation to do so.

Consistently with that idea I declare to you, respecting the definite settlement of the company's claim, that the documents it has submitted as the basis for its claim to the payment of evidently excessive amounts for services rendered and damages sustained during the late revolution, have not yet been accepted by my Government, and much less has the latter recognized a debt to the company of nearly 375,900 sucres in promissory notes viséed by employees of my Government having authorization therefor.

The examination of the aforesaid documents belongs solely to the Minister of Public Works, in whose Department the following obstacles have been encountered: that the company claims the indisputable approval and acceptance of all the accounts presented in previous years by the Director of Public Works; and that among the employees mentioned, there is not one in Quito who has the Company's authority to accept, in private conferences and in a definite manner, the just observations which there is room to make respecting the whole of the account, the extent of which in itself calls for serious examination.

With the earnest desire to end the whole controversy by means of a private agreement with the Company, and in order to avoid the presentation of fresh difficulties when the time comes to carry out the determined conditions of a later liquidation, my Government resolves today to offer officially to the Company the sum of 280,000 sucres for services rendered and damages sustained by the railway during the late revolution, as the net balance, and after deducting the value of the combustibles supplied by the Government and the amount of the items justly objected to in the account for the damages caused to the railway.

There are included in this amount of 280,000 sucres the equitable average of the receipts of the railway during a period of time immediately preceding the revolution, the 50% and the value of the damages. If the company accepts the offer, it may draw immediately for 86,000 sucres and receive a draft at ninety days sight for 14,000 sucres, the balance of the 280,000 sucres to be paid at the rate of 50,000 sucres monthly, until the total amount is cancelled. But if the company does not accept the proposal, my Government reserves the right to await the result of the arbitration respecting each and all of the company's charges and their total, that is to say: respecting the whole sum of 375,900 sucres which according to your statements the Company claims.

Notwithstanding this, and with the aforesaid reservation, my Government, with a view to make good the offer contained in my note of the 6th instant, will give to the company the 100,000 sucres, as the aid requested by it, and in the form above stated.

With reference to the previous bills, the greater part of which belong to the administration of President General Eloy Alfaro, which are at present deferred and which the company claims should be accepted in an indisputable manner, my Government, for that very reason, has resolved to examine them carefully, after which, in a short while, the company will be advised of the result; I, meanwhile, am bound to declare to you today that said accounts are not lacking in really incorrect items.

It appears from your October 28 and other correspondence[1] that Ecuador's expression of purpose to submit the railway protocol to the discussion of the tribunal shows an intention to provoke a reconsideration of matters already the subject of arbitral decision. You will textually communicate the following to the Government of Ecuador, also stating that the President will in the course of a few days appoint his representative on the tribunal:

> Matters involving the existence and validity of fundamental contractual agreements between the railway company and the Government of Ecuador cannot now be regarded by the Government of the United States as open for discussion. In a former controversy between the Government of Ecuador and the company these matters were discussed and were at that time passed upon and fixed by the arbitral tribunal of 1907–08 in an act equivalent to an arbitral award. Until the present time that act has not been questioned by the Government of Ecuador, but on the contrary has been fully recognized. Therefore the said matters must now be regarded as res judicata and not proper subjects for further controversy. Thus the matters of present dispute have solely to do with transactions between the Government and the railway since September 30, 1908, and the Government of Ecuador will perceive that the proposed arbitration can relate only to such transactions, and that the status as to the fundamental agreement must be accepted as the fundamental basis upon which to ground the determination of the controversy.

No. 56.]

American Legation,
Quito, February 6, 1912.

Sir: The first occasion on which the present Government of Ecuador seriously discussed the sanitation of Guayaquil with this Legation, was about two weeks ago when I had been to see the Minister for Foreign Affairs about another matter.

At this interview Dr. Tobar complained very strongly about the action of the Pacific Steam Navigation Company, an English line, in transporting revolutionary soldiers from Esmeraldas and Manabí to Guayaquil during the recent revolution. He went on to say that he desired very much to see an American line of steamers between Guayaquil and Panamá, and that the Ecuadorian Government would assist in every way possible the establishment of such a line.

I replied that I was much interested in his excellency's idea, and that possibly after the opening of the Panamá Canal, some arrangement could be made by which American steamships would extend their voyages down the west coast of South America, but I pointed out that one great objection to the establishment of an American steamship line between Panamá and Guayaquil was the extremely unsanitary condition of the latter city.

Another factor which has impressed the present Government with the necessity of taking some action in regard to sanitating Guayaquil, has been the large number of deaths in the Constitutional Army from yellow fever during the recent campaign.

The Coignet project for the construction of permanent public works having been approved by the Ecuadorian Congress, I suggested to Dr. Tobar that in order not [to] conflict with this contract a great deal could be done toward the sanitation of Guayaquil by the enforcement of suitable sanitary regulations in that city, and that Colonel Gorgas was the logical man to take charge of this work.

The result of these conversations was the receipt of note No. 167 dated February 5, 1912, from the Ecuadorian Foreign Office, copy and translation of which is enclosed herewith. From this note I prepared a memorandum which Dr. Tobar signed, the original of which is enclosed for the information of the Department.

MR. Proposed bases for a convention or protocol for the sanitation of Guayaquil.

The Governments of Ecuador and of the United States of America, animated by the desire that there be extinguished as soon as possible in the city of Guayaquil the two principal diseases that at present make that place dangerous, isolating it in a certain manner from universal commerce and preventing the flow to it of immigrants and travelers to increase its wealth, have agreed to celebrate a treaty, for which purpose they have named their plenipotentiaries, to wit: H. E. the President of the Senate, in charge of the Executive Power of Ecuador, Doctor Carlos R. Tobar, Minister of Foreign Relations; and H. E. the President of the United States of North America, Mr. ——————————————; who, after having exchanged their respective full powers which were found to be in proper form, have agreed to the following articles:

ARTICLE 1. The Government of the United States of North America agrees to take charge of all the works looking to the extinction in the city of Guayaquil of the two diseases yellow fever and bubonic plague, under the direction of Colonel William C. Gorgas, with which object the Ecuadorian Government authorizes it:

(a) To bring to Ecuador a corps of doctors, assistants, foremen of gangs, etc., who will take charge of all cases, without exception, of yellow fever and bubonic plague, of the prophylaxis, and of everything concerning the extinction of said diseases;

(b) To formulate, with reference to the two mentioned diseases, the regulations and ordinances concerning sanitation that must be obeyed by the inhabitants of Guayaquil and even by the authorities; which regulations and ordinances will be approved by the Executive Power of Ecuador;

(c) To exact proper compliance with the mentioned regulations and ordinances; and

(d) To construct two hospitals, one destined for cases of yellow fever and the other for bubonic plague; and to make the other expenditures necessary, as disinfectants, drugs, instruments, wire netting, tools, fixtures, materials, etc., appropriate for combating the diseases referred to.

In case of the disability of Colonel Gorgas, the Government of the United States will designate an equally competent person to replace him.

ARTICLE 2. The period of time that the Government of the United States shall have for the sanitation of Guayaquil within the terms of the previous article is three years.

ARTICLE 3. For the expenditures that the before mentioned works and constructions demand, the Government of Ecuador will put at the disposal of that of the United States the sum of five hundred thousand dollars; three hundred thousand dollars the first year and one hundred thousand dollars each of the two following years.

ARTICLE 4. This convention does not include the execution of any work concerning the increase of the water supply, the sewerage or the paving of the city of Guayaquil, but, as has been expressed in the previous articles, the extinction of yellow fever and the bubonic plague. The sanitation of the city with reference to other diseases that are not those mentioned will remain in charge of the Government of Ecuador.

ARTICLE 5. The present treaty will be ratified by the Governments of the two contracting powers in the form that their respective laws provide, and the exchange of ratifications will be effected in Quito or in Washington within the shortest possible time.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Quito, March 23, 1912.

Dr. Parker arrived Quito March 20 and reports as follows:

The essential measure for sanitation of Guayaquil include:

Six million gallons of water supply daily from a source sixty miles distant; destruction of storage tanks in dwellings.

Changes of construction of houses now building.

Driving out rats with light, air and cement.

Installation of drainage and sewerage systems.

Present water supply diverted to the infected towns of Durán, Milagro, Yaguachi, Bucay, and Naranjito. Independent treatment of Babahoyo.

Surveys, plans and specifications for the complete work to be made at once, accompanied by immediate campaign against the mosquito carrying the yellow fever, which can be financed out of the present monthly allowance of 20,000 sucres.

Control of sanitary police, with power to enforce the present sanitary laws through the local authorities.

Discontinuance of Coignet contract, which is inadequate.

PARKER.

The Coignet contract will expire on April 6 next.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Quito, March 23, 1912.

SIR: I have the honor, referring to the Department's telegram of March 12 [13], to report that Dr. Parker did not reach Quito until the morning of March 20. I immediately showed Dr. Parker the papers relating to the proposed convention for the sanitation of Guayaquil. His report was embodied in my telegram March 23.

General Plaza received Dr. Parker most cordially. They discussed the question of sanitation in all its phases and Dr. Parker gave the General a complete idea of what was necessary for the effective sanitation of Guayaquil.

General Plaza expressed himself most favorably toward the sanitation and sent his aide de camp, Captain Torres, to the Acting President, Dr. Andrade Marín, to request him to receive Dr. Parker and to take up seriously the matter of sanitation. Dr. Parker saw the Acting President immediately after leaving General Plaza. After a brief discussion, the Acting President requested Dr. Parker to prepare a memorandum, stating that he desired to take this up with him in the presence of the Cabinet Ministers.

In consultation therefore with Dr. Parker I prepared the enclosed memorandum, the contents of which I discussed with the Minister for Foreign Relations before meeting the Acting President and his Cabinet for the conference above referred to. The Minister for Foreign Affairs, Dr. Arcos, expressed himself as pleased with the contents of the memorandum.

In this connection I may state that I am reliably informed that the Coignet contract was to expire by February 6, 1912; the contract however contained a clause increasing the time during which it was to be effective by the time revolutions were in progress, plus one month. Assuming that the Alfaro revolution lasted one month, the Coignet contract should expire April 6, 1912. The Ecuadorian Government further has the option of granting Coignet more time, to secure the money needed, up to June 30, 1912.

[Memorandum.]

Quito, March 23, 1912.

In view of the existence of the epidemic diseases yellow fever and plague in the City of Guayaquil and vicinity, with the consequent great loss of life and damage to the commerce of the whole Republic of Ecuador, as well as foreign countries, particularly to the Panama Canal Zone, through which most of the commerce of Ecuador passes, and in view of the fact that the Panama Canal will shortly be completed and Guayaquil placed in direct communication with the principal ports of commerce of the world, it is essential that Guayaquil be free from the above mentioned epidemic diseases in order that the Republic of Ecuador may enjoy the privileges of commerce, unobstructed by quarantine, with the outside world.

On account of the present quarantines against Ecuador the Republic suffers an annual loss not accurately determined but certainly more than 1,000,000.00 sucres, a sum more than sufficient to pay the interest on the capital required for the necessary sanitation of the city, while the loss of life due to these diseases approaches 1000 annually, the great majority of whom are natives of the Republic.

It must be clearly understood that the Government of the United States has no interest in any individual or corporation by whom the sanitary work may be performed, its only interest being to insure the work being carried out in an efficient manner. In this connection it may be well to state that private contractors have never devised or carried out any great sanitary work without direct Government supervision, and there is no reason to believe that Guayaquil will prove an exception.

As the plans for the sanitation of Guayaquil must include in addition to the sanitary police and municipal regulations already discussed with the Government of Ecuador, the construction of certain public improvements, such as water supply, sewage disposal and drainage, it is suggested that the terms of the convention submitted by the Government of Ecuador to this Legation be enlarged to include the appointment of a commission, the personnel of which shall be agreed upon by the two Governments. This commission shall formulate a complete set of plans for the execution of the proposed sanitary work. The permanent public improvements shall be by contract, the terms of which shall be approved by the Government of Ecuador and by the commission, the work to be performed to the satisfaction of the commission, which will appoint inspectors to see that it conforms to specifications.

It is necessary that a preliminary survey by competent engineers be made before any complete set of plans can be devised. For physical reasons this survey must be conducted during the dry season, and in order to prevent the delay of a whole year this preliminary survey should be commenced not later than the first of June, 1912.

At present the Government of Ecuador appropriates a monthly sum for the eradication of yellow fever and plague. In order that this work may not be interfered with, it would be advisable that while the preliminary survey is in progress, this sum be placed at the disposal of the commission for the continuance of this work under its direction; that upon the eradication of yellow fever, quarantine against that disease be removed and ships permitted to anchor in front of the city for the purpose of discharging and loading cargoes, instead of two miles below the city as at present time.

[Memorandum.—Translation.]

In view of the memorandum presented by the Chargé d'Affaires of the United States on March 23rd of the present year, respecting the sanitation of the port of Guayaquil and its environs, the Government of Ecuador, recognizing the importance of the suggestions made, considers that the sanitary condition of Guayaquil implies very grave and permanent danger to the Panama Canal, and to the economic results that may accrue therefrom, as it also constitutes very serious injury to the commercial interests of the Republic of Ecuador, the loss of life among the natives of which is computed according to the estimates of the Chargé d'Affaires himself at a thousand per annum, while the quarantines imposed against Ecuador mean an annual loss of one million sucres on an average (although respecting this, there are no reliable statistics)—a sum more than sufficient to cover the interest on the amount that might be expended on sanitary works in Guayaquil and environs;

Regarding as true the remark that no sanitary works have been carried out without the direct supervision of the respective Governments; and

Considering it necessary that the sanitation of Guayaquil and its environs must be so far efficient as not to run counter to the sanitary convenience of the Canal—

It would be desirable that the Panama Canal Commission take charge of the work of the sanitation of Guayaquil and its environs at cost price, without handing it over to companies of speculators, whose intervention would increase or augment the price in proportion to the profits, apart from the possible and prejudicial economy in the quality and quantity of the materials employed, which would result in serious detriment to the efficiency of the sanitation.

Said work should consist of the provision of potable water in sufficient quantity, as, for example, a minimum of seventy million liters daily; complete drains with the necessary mains; receptacles and piping in the streets of the city; the paving of the latter and of the side-walks, etc.

For the specifications of the sanitary works, a mixed commission could be appointed, with members in equal numbers, one-half taken from the Sanitary Commission and the other half appointed by the Government of Ecuador.

The employees of the sanitation works and their number could be designated by said mixed commission, which would determine the quality and quantity of the materials employed, and undertake to contract the debts and credits for the purchase of the materials used in the work.

Should the Coignet contract of October 5th, 1911, published in the "Registro Oficial", No. 32, expire, the revenues set apart by said law for the work of sanitation could be handed over to the Panama Canal Commission on its direct responsibility, and said Commission should give account of the correct and honest disbursement of the funds, which, by virtue of said law, might be handed over to it. Said Canal Commission should hand in its accounts together with invoices and bills of the suppliers or manufacturers of materials, etc.

The amounts collected or to be collected under the law of October 5th, 1911, by which funds are set aside for the Sanitation of Guayaquil, shall be handed over as aforesaid, to the Panama Canal Commission, which shall give a receipt or receipts for same; and said Commission by virtue of that fact, would be held responsible for the loss, undue expenditure or embezzlement of said amounts.

If because of some unforeseen event not within the control of the Government of Ecuador the said funds should not be delivered to the Canal Commission, or if the Canal Commission should desire to hasten the work of sanitation out of proportion to the receipt of said funds, the Government of the United States might receive from the Government of Ecuador bonds at par, bearing interest at 5% with 1% of amortization, said bonds to be cancelled by the said funds.

The agreement herein contemplated should cover all the time necessary for paying off the obligations arising from the work of sanitation of Guayaquil and its environs, and for saving the Canal Commission from all financial responsibility.

The employes and agents of the proposed mixed commission should be removable by the Government of Ecuador, if they or any of them should justifiably become objectionable to that Government.

Whatever the total cost of the sanitation of Guayaquil and its environs (comprising, as already said, a sufficient provision of potable water, distributing system, reservoirs, main conduits, street paving, sidewalks, etc.) the Government of Ecuador cannot devote to the enterprise a greater amount than that specified in the law of October 5, 1911, embodying the Coignet contract.

In order to hasten the work the Panama Canal Commission might at once send its engineers to inspect the premises and draw up the plans; said engineers would be paid by the Canal Commission, the Government of Ecuador paying half of the amount thus expended at the time of the beginning of the work of sanitation.

The financial control of the work would be wholly in the hands of the mixed commission, and all accounts passed upon by courts of Cuentas Ecuatorianas in conformity with the laws of the Republic of Ecuador.

All the foregoing stipulations are without prejudice to the rights acquired by the contractor Edmundo Coignet by virtue of the said law of October 5, 1911, provided that the claims of said contractor in no case injure the interests of the Republic of Ecuador, whose responsibility in this respect should be completely guarded.

Regarding your despatch No. 97, the War Department finds that it is not expedient for the Canal Commission to undertake the whole work of sanitation of Guayaquil, but if that is the desire of Ecuador, and assuming that the Commission will be furnished with the Coignet surveys and that these are sufficient to insure accurate engineering estimates, the War Department will designate a board of five consisting of Gorgas, an engineer, a sanitary expert, an accountant and a clerk. Investigation by such a board would cost, according to Gorgas, about $5600; Goethals adds $2500 for preparation of costs of engineering works including sewers, water supply and pavements.

The War Department cannot entertain any proposal that it pay any part of such expenses; furthermore, Congressional authorization of payment thereof by the Government of Ecuador must be had.

Communicate the substance of the foregoing to the Government of Ecuador and, if that Government assent thereto, you will obtain its acceptance in such form as to assure the payments.

MR. MINISTER: I have the honor, referring to your excellency's memorandum dated May 6, 1912, in regard to the sanitation of Guayaquil, to inform your excellency that this memorandum has been referred by the Department of State to the War Department. The Panama Canal Commission is under the direction of the latter Department.

The War Department reports that it finds it inexpedient that the entire work of the sanitation of Guayaquil be undertaken by the Panama Canal Commission, but should the Government of Ecuador so desire, and assuming that the Commission will be furnished with the surveys made by Coignet and that these surveys are sufficiently detailed to ensure accurate estimates for engineering work, the War Department is willing to designate a board of five members, consisting of Colonel Gorgas, an engineer, a sanitary expert, an accountant, and a clerk, to proceed to Guayaquil for a thorough preliminary examination. This investigation, according to Colonel Gorgas will necessitate the expenditure of about fifty-six hundred dollars gold ($5600.00), as follows: transportation, $600.00; sustenance, $1,500.00; salaries, $2,500.00; incidentals, $1,000.00; total, $5,600.00.

Colonel Goethals, the Chairman of the Isthmian Canal Commission, however states that twenty-five hundred dollars ($2500.00) additional will be needed to prepare estimates of cost of engineering work, to include sewers, water supply and pavements. This makes a total altogether of eighty-one hundred dollars gold ($8100.00).

The War Department can not entertain the proposition that it defray any part of the expenses of the Board above mentioned, as Congressional authorization would be necessary.

Should, however the Government of Ecuador desire to have the Board make an examination of Guayaquil, with a view to the sanitation of that city, and if it will place the funds necessary, at the disposal of the Board it will give me pleasure to communicate this decision to my Government, in which case it will be possible for the Board to make its inspection and report without delay.

In reply to Department's telegram of July 25 I send the following translation of the note No. 357 from the Government of Ecuador, dated July 28, 1912:

> In reply to your note 81 dated the 27th, I have the honor to say:
>
> First. My Government desires that the complete work of the sanitation of the city of Guayaquil and its suburbs shall be carried out by the Government of the United States, without the intervention of any companies, contractors or private speculators whatsoever.
> Second. As the plans of Señor Coignet are limited to one part only of the city of Guayaquil, my Government considers them insufficient for the complete sanitation of Guayaquil. In consequence it will deposit in a bank in Guayaquil, to the order of the War Department of the United States, the amount of money which the said Department deems necessary for the immediate inspection and study of all the engineering works necessary, including sewers, water supply and pavements.
> Third. My Government deems it urgent to sign the proper convention with the Government of the United States of America in accordance with my memorandum of May 6, 1912, so that it may be approved by the next Ecuadorian Congress (August 10, 1912 to October 10, 1912).
> (Signed) A. E. ARCOS.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs says that nearly 1.000.000 sucres have already been accumulated for purposes of sanitation and 8100 dollars gold (amount estimated by Colonel Goethals) will be immediately available upon receipt of information that the Government of the United States is ready to negotiate a convention along the lines of the memorandum accompanying my 97.

[1] For. Rel. 1908, pp. 61–62.

In the month of April there was a renewal of anti-Chinese demonstration in the coast provinces of "Manabi," "Los Rios" and "El Oro." For the most part these were directed against individuals and were promptly reported to this Legation by the President of the Chinese Beneficent Society of Guayaquil. Each one of the complaints received I took personally to the Minister for Foreign Relations and thoroughly discussed the matter with him in an informal manner.

Dr. Arcos, the Minister for Foreign Relations, on every occasion took the utmost trouble to investigate the abuses reported and showed me the telegraphic correspondence which had passed between him and the local authorities, which on the part of the Minister for Foreign Relations contained instructions that the Chinese were to be given the full protection of the law, and reprimands to those officials who had failed to do their duty either through neglect or personal interest.

An attack of a much more serious nature occurred last month at Chone in the Province of Manabi. There are in Chone eleven Chinese stores. A demonstration was made by the natives against the Chinese, violence was attempted and some shooting took place. Fortunately however no Chinese were wounded. The result has been that the Chinese closed their stores and did no business, as I am informed, for a period of twenty-two days. At the present moment this Legation is awaiting documentary evidence of the failure of the local authorities in Chone to properly protect the Chinese in order to lay the matter before the central Government.

[Memorandum.]

The Department of State is in receipt of a despatch dated July 18, 1912, from the American Chargé d'Affaires at Quito, Ecuador, wherein he acknowledges the receipt of the Department's telegram of July 17th with reference to the protection of the persons and property of the Chinese subjects resident in Ecuador.

The Chargé d'Affaires reports that in the month of April there was a renewal of anti-Chinese demonstration in the coast provinces of Manabi, Los Rios and El Oro. For the most part these were directed against individuals and were promptly reported to the American Legation by the President of the Chinese Beneficent Society of Guayaquil. Each one of the complaints received was taken personally by the Chargé to the Minister for Foreign Relations and the matter was thoroughly discussed in an informal manner.

Dr. Arcos, the Minister for Foreign Relations, on every occasion took the utmost trouble to investigate the abuses reported and showed the Chargé the telegraphic correspondence which had passed between the Minister and the local authorities, which on the part of Dr. Arcos contained instructions that the Chinese were to be given the full protection of the law, and reprimands to those officials who had failed to do their duty either through neglect or personal interest.

An attack of a much more serious nature occurred last month at Chone in the Province of Manabi, where there are located eleven Chinese stores. A demonstration was made by the natives against the Chinese, violence was attempted and some shooting took place. Fortunately, however, no Chinese were wounded. The result has been that the Chinese closed their stores and did no business, as the Chargé states that he was informed, for a period of twenty-two days. At the present the Legation is awaiting documentary evidence of the failure of the local authorities in Chone to properly protect the Chinese in order to lay the matter before the Central Government.

Sir: Regarding the request of the Chinese Government that instructions be sent to the American Minister in Ecuador to use his good offices for the protection of Chinese and their interests in that country, I have the honor to enclose herewith a memorandum from the Foreign Office dated August 18, 1912, expressing the thanks of the Chinese Government for the prompt response to its request for the extension by the American Government of protection to Chinese citizens and their interests.

The Chinese Foreign Office to the American Legation.

We are in receipt of a memorandum stating that you had notified by cable the American Government of the ill-treatment accorded Chinese citizens in Ecuador from the natives of that country, and that you had received a reply stating that on July 17 the Department of State instructed by telegram the American Chargé d'Affaires at Quito, first to consult with the Government of Ecuador and with their consent to assist and protect the persons and interests of Chinese in Ecuador. In addition the telegram directed the American Chargé to communicate these instructions to all the American consuls in Ecuador. On the receipt of this you immediately notified the Foreign Office.

We sincerely thank your excellency for this aid and also the American Government for its regard for the friendly relations between the two countries in responding without discrimination to the distress of Chinese in Ecuador by telegraphing instructions for their protection.

The President of this Board specially sends this word of thanks to express his deep and grateful appreciation, with the request that it be transmitted to your Government.

FRANCE.

PRESENTATION BY FRANCE TO THE UNITED STATES OF A BUST OF "LA FRANCE" AT THE CHAMPLAIN CELEBRATION.

NOTE.—In 1908 the New York and Vermont commissions appointed for the purpose of investigating the ways and means of celebrating the tercentenary of the discovery of Lake Champlain, jointly reported in favor of collaborating with the Governments of the United States and the Dominion of Canada for the purposes of the celebration. These reports were submitted by the President on April 30, 1908 to Congress. A report from the House Committee on Foreign Affairs (Report No. 2169, 60th Cong., 2d sess., accompanying H. J. Resolution 257) was presented on February 15, 1909. In April, 1909, an invitation was extended to the Governments of France and Great Britain to participate in the proposed celebration, and both Governments accepted. The celebration was duly observed, July 5–9, 1909, in honor of the discovery in July, 1609, by the Frenchman Samuel Champlain of the lake named for him.

In 1731 France erected Fort St. Frédéric on the peninsula of the lake known as Crown Point; this fort, after two wars and several minor engagements, was finally captured in August, 1759, by the British, who held it until American troops under Seth Warner's command took it in May, 1775. On October 11, 1776, Benedict Arnold engaged the British in a naval battle on Lake Champlain which served to prevent British invasion of northern New York. Burgoyne took Crown Point in June, 1777, but the end of the Revolution restored it to the Americans. The naval battle on Lake Champlain in September, 1814, was an American victory decisive enough to terminate the war of 1812. Fort Ticonderoga, Plattsburg, Burlington, Isle La Motte, and many other points of historic interest are associated with that of Crown Point and Lake Champlain, and exercises were held at several of these during the tercentenary of July 5–9, 1909.

As a sequel to the tercentenary celebration the joint Vermont and New York Champlain Committee undertook the erection of a monumental lighthouse on Crown Point to commemorate the discovery and subsequent history of the lake and its environs. In view thereof, and while the monument was nearing completion, the French Ambassador, Mr. Jusserand, suggested to his Government the propriety of participation in the dedication. This suggestion was referred by the Foreign Office to the Comité France-Amérique, a society organized for the purpose of strengthening the social and business relations between France and the American States. The Comité France-Amérique conducted a collection of funds for carrying out its program of participation. This program consisted in the organization of a delegation of distinguished Frenchmen who should personally present to the Champlain Committee, in behalf of their country a bronze bust of a young woman representing "La France," executed by the French sculptor Rodin. Of this bust M. Hanotaux, who headed the delegation, said, in announcing to the French people the Comité's plan of participation:

> Que peut faire, que doit faire la France? Quelle pierre, digne d'elle, apportera-t-elle au monument? Il n'y a qu'une solution, c'est que cette pierre soit précieuse . . . Nous sommes allés chez Rodin. On sait à quel point son nom est populaire en Amérique. Le sculpteur magnifique dont la renommée rayonne sur le monde n'a nulle part de plus fervents admirateurs. Nous avons parcouru les salons de l'hotel de Biron . . . et, parmi tant d'oeuvres où l'admiration s'épuise, nous avions découvert (c'est le mot juste, car la fière modestie du maitre le signalait à peine) un buste en bronze: La France. Imaginez l'émotion de cette rencontre. Nous cherchions une image, un symbole, j'oserais dire une signature de notre pays pour l'envoyer là-bas, et nous trouvions la France elle-même, une mignonne France pleine de grâce, de vivacité et de courage, une jeune femme française aux narines frémissantes, aux joues pleines, au menton delicat et volontaire, au regard loyal, mutin et brave, une jeune femme où se résument nos Blanche, nos Henriette, nos Clotilde et nos Jeanne, coiffée de ses cheveux comme d'un casque, armée de sa parure comme d'une cuirasse. Nous cherchions une pensée française et nous trouvions l'image même de la France.[1]

> What can France do, what ought she to do? What stone, worthy of her, shall she set before the monument? There is but one answer: it must be a precious stone . . . [So] we went to consult Rodin. How popular Rodin is in America is well known; nowhere on earth has the great sculptor, whose renown so shines on the world, more fervent admirers. We visited the rooms of the Biron mansion . . . and, amid so many works that exhaust admiration we found (that is the word, for the modest pride of the master hardly pointed it out) a bust in bronze: La France. Imagine our emotion when we saw it. We had been searching for an image, a symbol, I will even say a signature of our country, to send yonder; and we found France herself—a lovely France full of grace, vivacity and courage, a young French women with quivering nostrils, rounded cheeks, delicately firm chin, and sprightly, brave and loyal eyes, a girl in whom are gathered in one all our Blanches and Henriettes and Clotildes and Jeannes, wearing her hair like a helmet and her gown like a cuirass. We had sought a French idea and we found the very image of France.

FRENCH EMBASSY,
Washington, April 6, 1912.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: A delegation presided over by Monsieur Hanotaux, member of the French Academy, former Minister for Foreign Affairs, and composed of some twenty persons, will soon arrive in America to offer to the Champlain Committee a bust by Rodin with which to ornament the monument now building at Crown Point.

This delegation, which comprises several members of the French Academy, two Generals, a Senator, the President of the Academy of Fine Arts, several members of the Institut, etc., will come to New York on board the S. S. La France arriving about the 26th instant.

I should be very grateful to your excellency if you would request the competent authorities to expedite the landing and examination of the baggage of the delegation as much as compatible with the regulations.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 17, 1912.

The Acting Secretary of State presents his compliments to the Ambassador of the French Republic and has the honor to inform him, in reply to the Ambassador's note of the 6th instant, that instructions were issued to the Collector of Customs at New York, on the 12th instant, directing him to expedite the landing and examination of the baggage of the French Delegates who are coming to this country for the purpose of delivering to the Champlain Committee a bust by Rodin destined to ornament the monument in course of construction at Crown Point, upon their arrival at New York City on or about the 26th instant, per the S. S. La France.

NOTE.—The delegation arrived at New York April 26 and in Washington April 28, where they were received by M. Peretti de la Rocca, Counselor of the French Embassy, and Mr. Chandler Hale, Acting Secretary of State. and the President's Aide. The President, who was absent from Washington, caused the Dolphin to be placed at the disposal of the delegation on April 29, on which day they visited Mount Vernon, M. Hanotaux placing a wreath on the tomb of Washington; accompanying the party on this occasion were the Acting Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, the Assistant Secretary of War, General Wood, and other officials. The President returned to Washington and entertained the delegates at luncheon on April 30 at the White House. On May 1 they were officially welcomed by State officials of New York and Vermont at dinner in New York City. On May 3 the delegation participated in the ceremonies at Lake Champlain, after visiting the various points of interest there. The bust of La France was fixed in its place at the base of the monument and the chief of the delegation. M. Hanotaux, delivered an address of presentation, to which responses were made by the Governors of New York and Vermont, and others.

On the bronze background of the high-relief bust thus presented is the following inscription:

> Le 20 juillet 1609 le français S. Champlain a découvert le lac qui porte son nom. Le 3 mai 1912, les États-Unis d'Amérique élevant ce monument, une délégation française a scellé cette figure de "La France."

SIR: I have the honor to report that the annual banquet of the "France-Amérique" which this year was given in honor of the French Champlain Delegation, was held yesterday evening, the President of the Council, Minister for Foreign Affairs, Monsieur Poincaré, presiding.

Monsieur Gabriel Hanotaux, President of the Society and also of the Champlain Delegation, in an eloquent speech expressed the thanks of the delegation for the cordial and hospitable reception it had received in the United States and particularly requested that I should transmit to the President the "grateful expressions of appreciation for his reception of the delegation." In terminating his speech he proposed the health of the United States and of President Taft.

Monsieur Louis Barthou, a member of the delegation, who since his return has become Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Chamber of Deputies, also delivered a speech, in which he spoke most appreciatively of the attention paid to the members of the delegation during their entire stay in the United States.

I therefore beg that there may be conveyed to the President the expressions of thanks which were pronounced by Monsieur Gabriel Hanotaux in the name of the members of the delegation.

WIRELESS TELEGRAPH CONVENTION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND OTHER POWERS.

Signed at Berlin, November 3, 1906; ratification advised by the Senate, April 3, 1912; ratified by the President, April 22, 1912; ratification of the United States deposited with the Government of Germany, May 17, 1912; proclaimed, May 25, 1912.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

A PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS a wireless telegraph convention, with service regulations, a suppplementary agreement, and a final protocol was concluded and signed by the plenipotentiaries of the United States of America, Germany, Argentine Republic, Austria, Hungary, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Chile, Denmark, Spain, France, Great Britain, Greece, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Monaco, Norway, Netherlands, Persia, Portugal, Roumania, Russia, Sweden, Turkey and Uruguay, at Berlin on November third, one thousand nine hundred and six, the original of which convention and annexes, being in the French language, is word for word as follows:

[Translation.]

International wireless telegraph convention concluded between Germany, the United States of America, Argentina, Austria, Hungary, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Chile, Denmark, Spain, France, Great Britain, Greece, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Monaco, Norway, the Netherlands, Persia, Portugal, Roumania, Russia, Sweden, Turkey, and Uruguay.

The undersigned, plenipotentiaries of the Governments of the countries enumerated above, having met in conference at Berlin, have agreed on the following Convention, subject to ratification:

ARTICLE 1.

The High Contracting Parties bind themselves to apply the provisions of the present Convention to all wireless telegraph stations open to public service between the coast and vessels at sea—both coastal stations and stations on shipboard—which are established or worked by the Contracting Parties.

They further bind themselves to make the observance of these provisions obligatory upon private enterprises authorized either to establish or work coastal stations for wireless telegraphy open to the service of public correspondence between the coast and vessels at sea, or to establish or work wireless telegraph stations, whether open to general public service or not, on board of vessels flying their flag.

By "coastal stations" is to be understood every wireless telegraph station established on shore or on board a permanently moored vessel used for the exchange of correspondence with ships at sea.

Every wireless telegraph station established on board any vessel not permanently moored is called a "station on shipboard."

ARTICLE 3.

The coastal stations and the stations on shipboard shall be bound to exchange wireless telegrams reciprocally without distinction of the wireless telegraph system adopted by such stations.

ARTICLE 4.

Notwithstanding the provisions of Article 3, a station may be reserved for a limited public service determined by the object of the correspondence or by other circumstances independent of the system employed.

ARTICLE 5.

Each of the High Contracting Parties undertakes to connect the coastal stations to the telegraph system by special wires, or, at least, to take other measures which will insure a rapid exchange between the coastal stations and the telegraph system.

ARTICLE 6.

The High Contracting Parties shall notify one another of the names of coastal stations and stations on shipboard referred to in Article 1, and also of all data, necessary to facilitate and accelerate the exchange of wireless telegrams, as specified in the Regulations.

ARTICLE 7.

Each of the High Contracting Parties reserves the right to prescribe or permit at the stations referred to in Article 1, apart from the installation the data of which are to be published in conformity with Article 6, the installation and working of other devices for the purpose of establishing special wireless communication without publishing the details of such devices.

ARTICLE 8.

The working of the wireless telegraph stations shall be organized as far as possible in such manner as not to disturb the service of other wireless stations.

ARTICLE 9.

Wireless telegraph stations are bound to give absolute priority to calls of distress from ships, to similarly answer such calls and to take such action with regard thereto as may be required.

ARTICLE 10.

The total charge for wireless telegrams shall comprise:

1. The charge for the maritime transmission, that is:

(a) The coastal rate, which shall fall to the coastal station;

(b) The shipboard rate, which shall fall to the shipboard station.

2. The charge for transmission over the lines of the telegraph system, to be computed according to the general regulations.

The coastal rate shall be subject to the approval of the Government of which the coastal station is dependent, and the shipboard rate to the approval of the Government whose flag the ship is flying.

Each of these rates shall be fixed in accordance with the tariff per word, pure and simple, with an optional minimum rate per wireless telegram, on the basis of an equitable remuneration for the wireless work. Neither rate shall exceed a maximum to be fixed by the High Contracting Parties.

However, each of the High Contracting Parties shall be at liberty to authorize higher rates than such maximum in the case of stations of ranges exceeding 800 km. or of stations whose work is exceptionally difficult owing to physical conditions in connection with the installation or working of the same.

For wireless telegrams proceeding from or destined for a country and exchanged directly with the coastal stations of such country, the High Contracting Parties shall advise one another of the rates applicable to the transmission over the lines of their telegraph system. Such rates shall be those resulting from the principle that the coastal station is to be considered as the station of origin or of destination.

ARTICLE 11.

The provisions of the present Convention are supplemented by Regulations, which shall have the same force and go into effect at the same time as the Convention.

The provisions of the present Convention and of the Regulations relating thereto may at any time be modified by the High Contracting Parties by common consent. Conferences of plenipotentiaries or simply administrative conferences, according as the Convention or the Regulations are affected, shall take place from time to time; each conference shall fix the time and place of the next meeting.

ARTICLE 12.

Such conferences shall be composed of delegates of the Governments of the contracting countries.

In the deliberations each country shall have but one vote.

If a Government adheres to the Convention for its colonies, possessions or protectorates, subsequent conferences may decide that such colonies, possessions or protectorates, or a part thereof, shall be considered as forming a country as regards the application of the preceding paragraph. But the number of votes at the disposal of one Government, including its colonies, possessions or protectorates, shall in no case exceed six.

ARTICLE 13.

An International Bureau shall be charged with collecting, coordinating and publishing information of every kind relating to wireless telegraphy, examining the applications for changes in the Convention or Regulations, promulgating the amendments adopted, and generally performing all administrative work referred to in the interest of international wireless telegraphy.

The expenses of such institution shall be borne by all the contracting countries.

ARTICLE 14.

Each of the High Contracting Parties reserves to itself the right of fixing the terms on which it will receive wireless telegrams proceeding from or intended for any station, whether on shipboard or coastal, which is not subject to the provisions of the present Convention.

If a wireless telegram is received the ordinary rates shall be applicable to it.

Any wireless telegram proceeding from a station on shipboard and received by a coastal station of a contracting country, or accepted in transit by the administration of a contracting country, shall be forwarded.

Any wireless telegram intended for a vessel shall also be forwarded if the administration of the contracting country has accepted it originally or in transit from a non-contracting country, the coastal station reserving the right to refuse transmission to a station on shipboard subject to a non-contracting country.

ARTICLE 15.

The provisions of Articles 8 and 9 of this Convention are also applicable to wireless telegraph installations other than those referred to in Article 1.

ARTICLE 16.

Governments which are not parties to the present Convention shall be permitted to adhere to it upon their request. Such adherence shall be communicated through diplomatic channels to the contracting Government in whose territory the last conference shall have been held, and by the latter to the remaining Governments.

The adherence shall carry with it to the fullest extent acceptance of all the clauses of this Convention and admission to all the advantages stipulated therein.

ARTICLE 17.[a]

The provisions of Articles 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 11, 12, and 17 of the International Telegraph Convention of St. Petersburg of July 10/22, 1875, shall be applicable to international wireless telegraphy.

---

[a] See translation of Articles of the International Telegraph Convention referred to in Article 17, affixed.

ARTICLE 18.

In case of disagreement between two or more contracting Governments regarding the interpretation or execution of the present Convention or of the Regulations referred to in Article 11, the question in dispute may, by mutual agreement, be submitted to arbitration. In such case each of the Governments concerned shall choose another Government not interested in the question at issue.

The decision of the arbiters shall be arrived at by the absolute majority of votes.

In case of a division of votes, the arbiters shall choose, for the purpose of settling the disagreement, another contracting Government which is likewise a stranger to the question at issue. In case of failure to agree on a choice, each arbiter shall propose a disinterested contracting Government, and lots shall be drawn between the Governments proposed. The drawing of the lots shall fall to the Government within whose territory the international bureau provided for in Article 13 shall be located.

ARTICLE 19.

The High Contracting Parties bind themselves to take, or propose to their respective legislatures, the necessary measures for insuring the execution of the present Convention.

ARTICLE 20.

The High Contracting Parties shall communicate to one another any laws already framed, or which may be framed, in their respective countries relative to the object of the present Convention.

ARTICLE 21.

The High Contracting Parties shall preserve their entire liberty as regards wireless telegraph installations other than provided for in Article 1, especially naval and military installations, which shall be subject only to the obligations provided for in Articles 8 and 9 of the present Convention.

However, when such installations are used for general public service they shall conform, in the execution of such service, to the provisions of the Regulations as regards the mode of transmission and rates.

ARTICLE 22.

The present Convention shall go into effect on the 1st day of July, 1908, and shall remain in force for an indefinite period or until the expiration of one year from the day when it shall be denounced by any of the contracting parties.

Such denunciation shall affect only the Government in whose name it shall have been made. As regards the other Contracting Powers, the Convention shall remain in force.

ARTICLE 23.

The present Convention shall be ratified and the ratifications exchanged at Berlin with the least possible delay.

In witness whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed one copy of the Convention, which shall be deposited in the archives of the Imperial Government of Germany, and a copy of which shall be transmitted to each Party.

The undersigned plenipotentiaries of the Governments of Germany, the United States of America, Argentina, Austria, Hungary, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Chile, Denmark, Spain, France, Greece, Monaco, Norway, the Netherlands, Roumania, Russia, Sweden, Turkey, and Uruguay bind themselves mutually, from the date of the going into effect of the Convention, to conform to the provisions of the following supplementary articles:

I.

Each station on shipboard referred to in Article 1 of the Convention shall be bound to correspond with any other station on shipboard without distinction of the wireless telegraph system adopted by such stations respectively.

II

The Governments which have not adhered to the foregoing article may at any time signify, by following the procedure prescribed by

Article 16 of the Convention, that they bind themselves to conform to its provisions.

Those which have adhered to the foregoing article may at any time, under the same conditions as provided for in Article 22, signify their intention to cease conforming to its provisions.

III.

This agreement shall be ratified and the ratifications exchanged at Berlin with the least possible delay.

Final protocol.

At the moment of signing the Convention adopted by the International Wireless Telegraph Conference of Berlin, the undersigned plenipotentiaries have agreed as follows:

I.

The High Contracting Parties agree that at the next Conference the number of votes to which each country is entitled (Article 12 of the Convention) shall be decided at the beginning of the deliberations, so that the colonies, possessions or protectorates admitted to the privilege of voting may exercise their right to vote during the entire course of the proceedings of such Conference.

This decision shall be of immediate effect and remain in force until amended by a subsequent Conference.

As regards the next Conference, applications for the admission of new votes in favor of colonies, possessions or protectorates which may have adhered to the Convention shall be addressed to the International Bureau at least six months prior to the date of the convening of such Conference. Notice of such applications shall at once be given to the remaining contracting Governments, which may, within the period of two months from the receipt of the notice, formulate similar applications.

II.

Each contracting Government may reserve the right to designate, according to circumstances, certain coastal stations to be exempted from the obligation imposed by Article 3 of the Convention, provided that, as soon as this measure goes into effect, there shall be opened within its territory one or several stations subject to the obligations of Article 3, insuring, within the region where the exempted stations are located, such wireless telegraph service as will satisfy the needs of the public service. The Governments desiring to reserve this right shall give notice thereof in the form provided for in the second paragraph of Article 16 of the Convention, not later than three months before the Convention goes into effect, or, in case of subsequent adhesion, at the time of such adhesion.

The countries whose names follow below declare now that they will not reserve such right:

Germany, United States, Argentina, Austria, Hungary, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Chile, Greece, Mexico, Monaco, Norway, Netherlands, Roumania, Russia, Sweden, Uruguay.

III.

The manner of carrying out the provisions of the foregoing article shall be at the discretion of the Government which takes advantage of the right of exemption; such Government shall be at liberty to decide from time to time, in its own judgment, how many stations and what stations shall be exempted. Such Government shall likewise be at liberty as regards the manner of carrying out the provision relative to the opening of other stations subject to the obligations of Article 3, insuring, within the region where the exempted stations are located, such wireless telegraph service as will satisfy the needs of the public service.

IV.

It is understood that, in order not to impede scientific progress, the provisions of Article 3 of the Convention shall not prevent the eventual employment of a wireless telegraph system incapable of communicating with other systems, provided, however, that such incapacity shall be due to the specific nature of such system and that it shall not be the result of devices adopted for the sole purpose of preventing intercommunication.

V.

The adherence to the Convention by the Government of a country having colonies, possessions or protectorates shall not carry with it the adherence of its colonies, possessions or protectorates, unless a declaration to that effect is made by such Government. Such colonies, possessions and protectorates as a whole, or each of them separately, may form the subject of a separate adherence or a separate denunciation within the provisions of Articles 16 and 22 of the Convention.

It is understood that the stations on board of vessels whose headquarters is a port in a colony, possession or protectorate may be deemed as subject to the authority of such colony, possession or protectorate.

VI.

Note is taken of the following declaration:

The Italian delegation in signing the Convention does so with the reservation that the Convention can not be ratified on the part of Italy until the date of the expiration of her contracts with Mr. Marconi and his Company, or at an earlier date if the Government of the King of Italy shall succeed in fixing such date by negotiations with Mr. Marconi and his Company.

VII.

In case one or several of the High Contracting Parties shall not ratify the Convention, it shall nevertheless be valid as to the parties which shall have ratified it.

In witness whereof the undersigned plenipotentiaries have drawn up the present Final Protocol, which shall be of the same force and effect as though the provisions thereof had been embodied in the text of the Convention itself to which it has reference, and they have signed one copy of the same, which shall be deposited in the archives of the Imperial Government of Germany, and a copy of which shall be transmitted to each of the Parties.

Service regulations annexed to the International Wireless Telegraph Convention.

1. Organization of Wireless Telegraph Stations.

I.

The choice of wireless apparatus and devices to be used by the coastal stations and stations on shipboard shall be unrestricted. The installation of such stations shall as far as possible keep pace with scientific and technical progress.

II.

Two wave lengths, one of 300 meters and the other of 600 meters, are authorized for general public service. Every coastal station opened to such service shall use one or the other of these two wave lengths. During the whole time that the station is open to service it shall be in condition to receive calls according to its wave length, and no other wave length shall be used by it for the service of general public correspondence. Each Government may, however, authorize in coastal stations the employment of other wave lengths designed to insure long-range service or any service other than for general public correspondence established in conformity with the provisions of the Convention, provided such wave lengths do not exceed 600 meters or that they do exceed 1,600 meters.

III.

1. The normal wave length for stations on shipboard shall be 300 meters. Every station on shipboard shall be installed in such manner as to be able to use this wave length. Other wave lengths may be employed by such stations provided they do not exceed 600 meters.

2. Vessels of small tonnage which are unable to have plants on board insuring a wave length of 300 meters may be authorized to use a shorter wave length.

IV.

1. The International Bureau shall be charged with drawing up a list of wireless telegraph stations of the class referred to in Article 1 of the Convention. Such list shall contain for each station the following data:

(1) Name, nationality, and geographical location in the case of coastal stations; name, nationality, distinguishing signal of the International Code and name of ship's home port in the case of stations on shipboard;

(2) Call letters (the calls shall be distinguishable from one another and each must be formed of a group of three letters);

(3) Normal range;

(4) Wireless telegraph system;

(5) Class of receiving apparatus (recording, acoustic, or other apparatus);

(6) Wave lengths used by the station (the normal wave length to be underscored);

(7) Nature of service carried on by the station:

General public correspondence;

Limited public correspondence (correspondence with vessels . . . ; correspondence with shipping lines . . . ; correspondence with ships fitted with apparatus of the . . . system, etc.);

Long range public correspondence;

Correspondence of private interest;

Special correspondence (exclusively official correspondence); etc.

(8) Hours during which the station is open;

(9) Coastal rate or shipboard rate.

2. The list shall also contain such data relating to wireless telegraph stations other than those specified in Article 1 of the Convention as may be communicated to the International Bureau by the Management of the Wireless Telegraph Service ("Administration") to which such stations are subject.

V.

The exchange of superfluous signals and words is prohibited to stations of the class referred to in Article 1 of the Convention. Experiments and practice will be permitted in such stations in so far as they do not interfere with the service of other stations.

VI.

1. No station on shipboard shall be established or worked by private enterprise without authority from the Government to which the vessel is subject. Such authority shall be in the nature of a license issued by said Government.

2. Every station on shipboard that has been so authorized shall comply with the following requirements:

(a) The system employed shall be a syntonized system;

(b) The rate of transmission and reception, under normal conditions, shall not be less than twelve words a minute, words to be counted at the rate of five letters each;

(c) The power transmitted to the wireless telegraph apparatus shall not, under normal conditions, exceed one kilowatt. Power exceeding one kilowatt may be employed when the vessel finds it necessary to correspond while more than 300 kilometers distant from the nearest coastal station, or when, owing to obstructions, communication can be established only by means of an increase of power.

3. The service of the station on shipboard shall be carried on by a telegraph operator holding a certificate issued by the Government to which the vessel is subject. Such certificate shall attest the professional efficiency of the operator as regards:

(a) Adjustment of the apparatus;

(b) Transmission and acoustic reception at the rate of not less than 20 words a minute;

(c) Knowledge of the regulations governing the exchange of wireless telegraph correspondence.

4. The certificate shall furthermore state that the Government has bound the operator to secrecy with regard to the correspondence.

VII.

If the management of the wireless telegraph service of a country has knowledge of any infraction of the Convention or of the Regulations committed in any of the stations authorized by it, it shall ascertain the facts and fix the responsibility.

In the case of stations on shipboard, if the operator is responsible for such infraction, the management of the wireless telegraph service shall take the necessary measures and, if the necessity should arise, withdraw the certificate. If it is ascertained that the infraction is the result of the condition of the apparatus or of instructions given the operator, the same method shall be pursued with regard to the license issued to the vessel.

2. In cases of repeated infractions chargeable to the same vessel, if the representations made to the wireless telegraph management of the country to which the vessel is subject by that of another country remain without effect, the latter shall be at liberty, after giving due notice, to authorize its coastal stations not to accept communications proceeding from the vessel at fault. In case of disagreement between the managements of the wireless telegraph service of two countries, the question shall be submitted to arbitration at the request of either of the two Governments at issue. The procedure in such case shall be the same as indicated in Article 18 of the Convention.

2. Hours of Service of Coastal Stations.

VIII.

1. The service of coastal stations shall, as far as possible, be constant, day and night, without interruption.

Certain coastal stations, however, may have a service of limited duration. The management of the wireless telegraph service of each country shall fix the hours of service.

2. The coastal stations whose service is not constant shall not close before having transmitted all their wireless telegrams to the vessels which are within their radius of action, nor before having received from such vessels all the wireless telegrams of which notice has been given. This provision is likewise applicable when vessels signal their presence before the actual cessation of work.

3. Form and Posting of Wireless Telegrams.

IX.

If the route of a wireless telegram is partly over telegraph lines, or through wireless telegraph stations subject to a noncontracting Government, such telegram may be transmitted provided the managements of the wireless telegraph service to which such lines or stations are subject have declared that, if the occasion should arise, they will comply with such provisions of the Convention and of the Regulations as are indispensable to the regular transmission of wireless telegrams and that the payment of charges is insured.

X.

1. Wireless telegrams shall show in the preamble that the service is "wireless" ("radio").

2. In the transmission of wireless telegrams of shipboard stations to coastal stations, the date and hour of posting may be omitted in the preamble.

Upon reforwarding a wireless telegram over the telegraph system, the coastal station shall show thereon its own name as the office of origin, followed by that of the vessel, and shall state, as the hour of posting, the hour when the telegram was received by it.

XI.

The address of wireless telegrams intended for ships at sea shall be as complete as possible. It shall embrace the following:

(a) The name of the addressee, with additional designations if any;

(b) The name of the vessel as it appears in the list, supplemented by her nationality and, if necessary, by her distinguishing signal of the International Code, in case there are several vessels of the same name;

(c) The name of the coastal station as it appears in the list.

4. Rates.

XII.

The coastal rate shall not exceed 60 centimes (11.6 cents) a word, and the shipboard rate shall not exceed 40 centimes (7.7 cents) a word.

A minimum rate per telegram, not to exceed the coastal rate or shipboard rate for a wireless telegram of ten words, may be imposed as coastal or shipboard rate.

XIII.

The country within whose territory a coastal station is established which serves as intermediary for the exchange of wireless telegrams between a station on board ship and another country shall be considered, so far as the application of telegraph rates is concerned, as the country of origin or of destination of such telegrams, and not as the country of transit.

5. Collection of Charges.

XIV.

The total charge for wireless telegrams shall be collected of the sender.

Stations on shipboard shall to that end have the necessary tariffs. They shall be at liberty, however, to obtain information from coastal stations on the subject of rates for wireless telegrams for which they do not possess all the necessary data.

6. Transmission of Wireless Telegrams.

a. SIGNALS OF TRANSMISSION.

XV.

The signals to be employed are those of the Morse International Code.

XVI.

Ships in distress shall use the following signal:

● ● ● ▬ ▬ ▬ ● ● ●

repeated at brief intervals.

As soon as a station perceives the signal of distress it shall cease all correspondence and not resume it until after it has made sure that the correspondence to which the call for assistance has given rise is terminated.

In case the ship in distress adds at the end of the series of her calls the call letters of a particular station the answer to the call shall be incumbent upon that station alone. If the call for assistance does not specify any particular station, every station perceiving such calls shall be bound to answer it.

XVII.

1. The call letters following the letters

● ▬ ▬ ●   ● ▬ ●   ▬ ● ● ●

"P R B" signify that the vessel or station making the call desires to communicate with the station called by means of the International Signal Code.

The combination of the letters P R B as a service signal for any other purpose than that specified above is prohibited.

2. Wireless telegrams may be framed with the aid of the International Signal Code.

Those addressed to a wireless telegraph station with a view to being forwarded by it are not to be translated by such station.

b. ORDER OF TRANSMISSION.

XVIII.

Between two stations wireless telegrams of the same order shall be transmitted one by one, by the two stations alternately, or in series of several telegrams, as the coastal station may indicate, provided the duration of the transmission of each series does not exceed twenty minutes.

c. METHOD OF CALLING WIRELESS STATIONS AND TRANSMISSION OF WIRELESS TELEGRAMS.

XIX.

1. As a general rule, it shall be the shipboard station that calls the coastal station.

2. The call should be made, as a general rule, only when the distance of the vessel from the coastal station is less than 75 per cent of the normal range of the latter.

3. Before proceeding to a call, the station on shipboard shall adjust its receiving apparatus to its maximum sensibility and make sure that the coastal station which it wishes to call up is not in correspondence with any other station. If it finds that any transmission is in progress, it shall wait for the first pause.

4. The shipboard station shall use for calling the normal wave of the coastal station.

5. If in spite of these precautions the public exchange of wireless telegrams is impeded at any place, the call shall cease upon the first request from a coastal station open to public correspondence. The latter station shall in such case indicate the approximate length of time it will be necessary to wait.

XX.

1. The call shall comprise the signal

▬ ● ▬ ● ▬,

the call letters of the station called repeated three times, the word "from" ("de") followed by the call letters of the sending station repeated three times.

2. The called station shall answer by making the signal

▬ ● ▬ ● ▬,

followed by the call letters of the corresponding station repeated three times, the word "from," its own call letters, and the signal

▬ ● ▬.

XXI.

If a station called does not answer the call (Article XX) repeated three times at intervals of two minutes, the call shall not be resumed until after an interval of half an hour, the station issuing the call having first made sure that no wireless telegraph correspondence is in progress.

XXII.

1. As soon as the coastal station has answered, the shipboard station shall make known to it:

(a) The distance of the vessel from the coastal station in nautical miles;

(b) Her true bearing in degrees counted from 0 to 360;

(c) Her true course in degrees counted from 0 to 360;

(d) Her speed in nautical miles;

(e) The number of words she has to transmit.

2. The coastal station shall answer, stating the number of words to be transmitted to the vessel.

3. If the transmission can not take place immediately, the coastal station shall inform the station on shipboard of the approximate length of time that it will be necessary to wait.

XXIII.

When a coastal station receives calls from several shipboard stations, the coastal station shall decide the order in which the shipboard stations shall be admitted to exchange their messages.

In fixing this order the coastal station shall be guided exclusively by the necessity of permitting each station concerned to exchange the greatest possible number of wireless telegrams.

XXIV.

Before beginning the exchange of correspondence the coastal station shall advise the shipboard station whether the transmission is to be effected in the alternate order or by series (Article XVIII); it shall then begin the transmission or follow up the preliminaries with the signal

(invitation to transmit).

XXV.

The transmission of the wireless telegram shall be preceded by the signal and terminated by the signal

▬ ● ▬ ● ▬

● ▬ ● ▬ ●

followed by the name of the sending station.

XXVI.

When a wireless telegram to be transmitted contains more than 40 words, the sending station shall interrupt the transmission after each series of about 20 words by an interrogation point and shall not resume it until after it has obtained from the receiving station a repetition of the last word duly received, followed by an interrogation point.

● ● ▬ ▬ ● ●

In the case of transmission by series, acknowledgment of receipt shall be made after each wireless telegram.

XXVII.

1. When the signals become doubtful every possible means shall be resorted to to finish the transmission. To this end the wireless telegram shall be repeated at the request of the receiving station, but not to exceed three times. If in spite of such triple repetition the signals are still unreadable the wireless telegram shall be canceled. If no acknowledgment of receipt is received the transmitting station shall again call up the receiving station. If no reply is made after three calls the transmission shall not be followed up any further.

2. If in the opinion of the receiving station the wireless telegram, although imperfectly received, is nevertheless capable of transmission, said station shall enter the words "reception doubtful" at the end of the preamble and let the wireless telegram follow.

XXVIII.

All stations are bound to carry on the service with as little expense of energy as may be necessary to insure safe communication.

d. ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF RECEIPT AND CONCLUSION OF WORK.

XXIX.

1. Receipt shall be acknowledged in the form prescribed by the International Telegraph Regulations, preceded by the call letters of the transmitting station and followed by those of the receiving station.

2. The conclusion of a correspondence between two stations shall be indicated by each station by means of the signal followed by its call letters.

● ● ● ▬ ● ▬

e. DIRECTIONS TO BE FOLLOWED IN SENDING WIRELESS TELEGRAMS.

XXX.

1. In general, the shipboard stations shall transmit their wireless telegrams to the nearest coastal station.

2. A sender on board a vessel shall, however, have the right to designate the coastal station through which he desires to have his wireless telegram transmitted.

3. The station on shipboard shall then wait until such coastal station shall be the nearest. If this can not be done, the wishes of the sender are to be complied with only if the transmission can be effected without interfering with the service of other stations.

7. DELIVERY OF WIRELESS TELEGRAMS AT THEIR DESTINITION.

XXXI.

When for any cause whatever a wireless telegram proceeding from a vessel at sea can not be delivered to the addressee, a notice of non-delivery shall be issued. Such notice shall be transmitted to the vessel if possible. When a wireless telegram received by a shipboard station can not be delivered, the station shall notify the office of origin by official notice. Such notice shall be transmitted, whenever practicable, to the coastal station through which the wireless telegram has passed in transit; otherwise, to the nearest coastal station.

XXXII.

If the ship for which a wireless telegram is intended has not signalled her presence to the coastal station within the period designated by the sender, or, in the absence of such designation, by the morning of the 29th day following, the coastal station shall notify the sender.

The latter shall have the right to ask, by a paid official notice, sent by either telegraph or mail and addressed to the coastal station, that his wireless telegram be held for a further period of 30 days for transmission to the vessel, and so on. In the absence of such request the wireless telegram shall be put aside as not transmissible at the end of the 30th day (exclusive of the day of posting).

If, however, the coastal station has positive information that the vessel has left its radius of action before it has been able to transmit to her the wireless message, such station shall so notify the sender.

8. Special Telegrams.

XXXIII.

The following telegrams shall not be accepted for transmission:

(a) Telegrams with answer prepaid;

(b) Money order telegrams;

(c) Telegrams calling for repetition of message (for purposes of verification);

(d) Telegrams calling for acknowledgment of receipt;

(e) Telegrams to be forwarded (if addressee is not found at the address given);

(f) Paid service telegrams, except in so far as transmission over the lines of the telegraph system is concerned;

(g) Urgent telegrams, except in so far as transmission over the lines of the telegraph system is concerned, subject to the application of the provisions of the International Telegraph Regulations;

(h) Telegrams to be delivered by express or mail.

9. Files.

XXXIV.

The originals of wireless telegrams and the documents relating thereto retained by the managements of the wireless telegraph service or by private enterprises shall be kept for a period of at least twelve months beginning with the month following that of the posting of the wireless telegram, with all the necessary precautions as regards secrecy.

Such originals and documents shall, as far as practicable, be sent at least once a month by the shipboard stations to the management of the wireless telegraph service to which they are subject.

10. Rebates and Reimbursements.

XXXV.

1. With regard to rebates and reimbursements, the provisions of the International Telegraph Regulations shall be applicable, taking into account the restrictions specified in Article XXXIII of the present Regulations and subject to the following reservations:

The time employed in the transmission of wireless telegrams and the time that wireless telegrams remain in a coastal station or station on shipboard shall not be counted as delays as regards rebates or reimbursements.

Reimbursements shall be borne by the different managements of the wireless telegraph service or private enterprises which have taken part in the transmission of the wireless telegram, each management or private enterprise relinquishing its share of the rate. Wireless telegrams to which articles 7 and 8 of the Convention of St. Petersburg are applicable shall remain subject, however, to the provisions of the International Telegraph Regulations, except when the acceptance of such telegrams is the result of an error made by the telegraph service.

2. When the acknowledgment of receipt of a wireless telegram has not reached the station which has transmitted the telegram, the charges shall be refunded only if the fact has been established that the wireless telegram is entitled to reimbursement.

11. Accounts and Payment of Charges.

XXXVI.

1. The coastal and shipboard charges shall not enter into the accounts provided for by the International Telegraph Regulations.

The accounts regarding such charges shall be liquidated by the managements of the wireless telegraph service of the countries concerned. They shall be drawn up by the wireless telegraph management to which the coastal stations are subject, and communicated by them to the wireless telegraph managements concerned.

2. For transmission over the lines of the telegraph system wireless telegrams shall be treated, so far as the payment of rates is concerned, in conformity with the International Telegraph Regulations.

3. For wireless telegrams proceeding from ships, the wireless telegraph management to which the shipboard station is subject shall be charged by the wireless telegraph management to which the coastal station is subject with the coastal and ordinary telegraph rates charged on board of vessels.

For wireless telegrams intended for ships, the wireless telegraph management which has collected the fees shall be charged directly by the wireless telegraph management to which the coastal station is subject with the coastal and shipboard rates. The latter shall credit the wireless telegraph management to which the vessel is subject with the shipboard rate.

In case the wireless telegraph management which has collected the charges is the same, however, as the one to which the shipboard station is subject, the shipboard rate shall not be charged by the wireless telegraph management to which the coastal station is subject.

4. The monthly accounts serving as a basis for the special accounts of wireless telegrams shall be made out for each telegram separately with all the necessary data within a period of six months from the month to which they refer.

5. The Governments reserve the right to enter into special agreements among themselves and with private enterprises (parties operating wireless telegraph stations, shipping companies, etc.) with a view of adopting other provisions with regard to accounts.

12. INTERNATIONAL BUREAU.

XXXVII.

The International Bureau of Telegraphs shall be entrusted with the duties specified in Article 13 of the Convention, subject to the consent of the Government of the Swiss Federation and the approval of the Telegraph Union.

The additional expenses resulting from the work of the International Bureau so far as wireless telegraphy is concerned shall not exceed 40,000 francs a year, exclusive of the special expenses arising from the convening of the International Conference.

These expenses shall form the subject of a special account, and the provisions of the International Telegraph Regulations shall be applicable to them. Before the convening of the next Conference, however, each contracting Government shall notify the International Bureau of the class in which it desires to be entered.

XXXVIII.

The management of the wireless telegraph service of the different countries shall forward to the International Bureau a table in conformity with the annexed blank, containing the data enumerated in said table for stations such as referred to in Article IV of the regulations. Changes occurring and additional data shall be forwarded by the wireless telegraph managements to the International Bureau between the 1st and 10th day of each month. With the aid of such data the International Bureau shall draw up a list which it shall keep up to date. The list and the supplements thereto shall be printed and distributed to the wireless telegraph managements of the countries concerned; they may also be sold to the public at the cost price.

The International Bureau shall see to it that the same call letters for several wireless telegraph stations shall not be adopted.

13. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

XXXIX.

The managements of the wireless telegraph service shall give to agencies of maritime information such data regarding losses and casualties at sea or other information of general interest to navigation, as the coastal stations may properly report.

XL.

The exchange of correspondence between shipboard stations such as referred to in Article 1 of the Convention shall be carried on in such a manner as not to interfere with the service of the coastal stations, the latter, as a general rule, being accorded the right of priority for the public service.

XLI.

1. In the absence of special agreements between the parties concerned, the provisions of the present Regulations shall be applicable analogously to the exchange of wireless telegrams between two vessels at sea, subject to the following exceptions:

(a) To Article XIV. The shipboard rate falling to the transmitting ship shall be collected from the sender, and that falling to the receiving ship shall be collected from the addressee;

(b) To Article XVIII. The order of transmission shall be regulated in each case by mutual agreement between the corresponding stations.

(c) To Article XXXVI. The rates for the wireless telegrams in question shall not enter into the accounts provided for in that article, such charges falling to the wireless telegraph managements which have collected them.

2. Retransmission of wireless telegrams exchanged between vessels at sea shall be subject to special agreements between the parties concerned.

XLII.

The provisions of the International Telegraph Regulations shall be applicable analogously to wireless telegraph correspondence in so far as they are not contrary to the provisions of the present regulations.

In conformity with Article 11 of the Convention of Berlin, these Regulations shall go into effect on the first day of July, 1908.

In witness whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed one copy of the present Regulations, which shall be deposited in the archives of the Imperial Government of Germany, and a copy of which shall be transmitted to each of the Parties.

Extract from the International Telegraph Convention, signed at St. Petersburg, July 10/22, 1875.

[See Article 17 of the convention.]

ARTICLE 1.

The High Contracting Parties concede to all persons the right to correspond by means of the international telegraphs.

ARTICLE 2.

They bind themselves to take all the necessary measures for the purpose of insuring the secrecy of the correspondence and its safe transmission.

ARTICLE 3.

They declare, nevertheless, that they accept no responsibility as regards the international telegraph service.

ARTICLE 5.

Telegrams are classed in three categories:

1. State telegrams: those emanating from the Head of the Nation, the Ministers, the Commanders-in-Chief of the Army and Naval forces, and the Diplomatic or Consular Agents of the Contracting Governments, as well as the answers to such telegrams.

2. Service telegrams: those which emanate from the Managements of the Telegraph Service of the Contracting States and which relate either to the international telegraph service or to subjects of public interest determined jointly by such Managements.

3. Private telegrams.

In the transmission, the State telegrams shall have precedence over other telegrams.

ARTICLE 6.

State telegrams and service telegrams may be issued in secret language, in any communications.

Private telegrams may be exchanged in secret language between two States which admit of this mode of correspondence.

The States which do not admit of private telegrams in secret language upon the expedition or arrival of the same, shall allow them to pass in transit, except in the case of suspension defined in article 8.

ARTICLE 7.

The High Contracting Parties reserve the right to stop the transmission of any private telegram which may appear dangerous to the safety of the State, or which may be contrary to the laws of the country, to public order or good morals.

ARTICLE 8.

Each Government also reserves the right to suspend the international telegraph service for an indefinite period, if deemed necessary by it, either generally, or only over certain lines and for certain classes of correspondence, of which such Government shall immediately notify all the other Contracting Governments.

ARTICLE 11.

Telegrams relating to the international telegraph service of the Contracting States shall be transmitted free of charge over the entire systems of such States.

ARTICLE 12.

PANAMA CANAL TOLLS. EXEMPTION OF VESSELS IN THE COASTWISE TRADE OF THE UNITED STATES FROM PAYMENT OF TOLLS, AND OTHER FEATURES OF THE PANAMA CANAL ACT OF AUGUST 24, 1912. OBJECTIONS THERETO OF THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT.

File No. 811f.812/296.

The President to Congress.

[Extract from the Message on the financial condition of the Treasury, needed banking and currency reforms, and departmental questions; communicated to Congress December 21, 1911; committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, December 21, 1911; printed as House Document No. 343, 62d Congress, 2d Session.]

THE PANAMA CANAL.

The very satisfactory progress made on the Panama Canal last year has continued, and there is every reason to believe that the canal will be completed as early as the 1st of July, 1913, unless something unforeseen occurs. This is about 18 months before the time promised by the engineers.

We are now near enough the completion of the canal to make it imperatively necessary that legislation should be enacted to fix the method by which the canal shall be maintained and controlled and the zone governed. The fact is that to-day there is no statutory law by authority of which the President is maintaining the government of the zone. Such authority was given in an amendment to the Spooner Act, which expired by the terms of its own limitation some years ago. Since that time the government has continued, under the advice of the Attorney General that in the absence of action by Congress there is necessarily an implied authority on the part of the Executive to maintain a government in a territory in which he has to see that the laws are executed. The fact that we have been able thus to get along during the important days of construction without legislation expressly formulating the government of the zone, or delegating the creation of it to the President, is not a reason for supposing that we may continue the same kind of a government after the construction is finished. The implied authority of the President to maintain a civil government in the zone may be derived from the mandatory direction given him in the original Spooner Act, by which he was commanded to build the canal; but certainly, now that the canal is about to be completed and to be put under a permanent management, there ought to be specific statutory authority for its regulation and control and for the government of the zone, which we hold for the chief and main purpose of operating the canal.

I fully concur with the Secretary of War that the problem is simply the management of a great public work, and not the government of a local republic; that every provision must be directed toward the successful maintenance of the canal as an avenue of commerce, and that all-provisions for the government of those who live within the zone should be subordinate to the main purpose.

The zone is 40 miles long and 10 miles wide. Now, it has a population of 50,000 or 60,000, but as soon as the work of construction is completed, the towns which make up this population will be deserted, and only comparatively few natives will continue their residence there. The control of them ought to approximate a military government. One judge and two justices of the peace will be sufficient to attend to all the judicial and litigated business there is. With a few fundamental laws of Congress, the zone should be governed by the orders of the President, issued through the War Department, as it is to-day. Provisions can be made for the guaranties of life, liberty, and property, but beyond those, the government should be that of a military reservation, managed in connection with this great highway of trade.

FURNISHING SUPPLIES AND REPAIRS.

In my last annual message I discussed at length the reasons for the Government's assuming the task of furnishing to all ships that use the canal, whether our own naval vessels or others, the supplies of coal and oil and other necessities with which they must be replenished either before or after passing through the canal, together with the dock facilities and repairs of every character. This it is thought wise to do through the Government, because the Government must establish for itself, for its own naval vessels, large depots and dry docks and warehouses, and these may easily be enlarged so as to secure to the world public using the canal reasonable prices and a certainty that there will be no discrimination between those who wish to avail themselves of such facilities.

TOLLS.

I renew my recommendation with respect to the tolls of the canal that, within limits which shall seem wise to Congress, the power of fixing tolls be given to the President. In order to arrive at a proper conclusion, there must be some experimenting, and this can not be done if Congress does not delegate the power to one who can act expeditiously.

POWER EXISTS TO RELIEVE AMERICAN SHIPPING.

I am very confident that the United States has the power to relieve from the payment of tolls any part of our shipping that Congress deems wise. We own the canal. It was our money that built it. We have the right to charge tolls for its use. Those tolls must be the same to everyone; but when we are dealing with our own ships, the practice of many Governments of subsidizing their own merchant vessels is so well established in general that a subsidy equal to the tolls, an equivalent remission of tolls, can not be held to be a discrimination in the use of the canal. The practice in the Suez Canal makes this clear. The experiment in tolls to be made by the President would doubtless disclose how great a burden of tolls the coastwise trade between the Atlantic and the Pacific coast could bear without preventing its usefulness in competition with the transcontinental railroads. One of the chief reasons for building the canal was to set up this competition and to bring the two shores closer together as a practical trade problem. It may be that the tolls will have to be wholly remitted. I do not think this is the best principle, because I believe that the cost of such a Government work as the Panama Canal ought to be imposed gradually but certainly upon the trade which it creates and makes possible. So far as we can, consistent with the development of the world's trade through the canal, and the benefit which it was intended to secure to the east and west coastwise trade, we ought to labor to secure from the canal tolls a sufficient amount ultimately to meet the debt which we have assumed and to pay the interest.

The British Chargé d'Affaires to the Secretary of State.

British Embassy,
Kineo, Maine, July 8, 1912.

Sir: The attention of His Majesty's Government has been called to the various proposals that have from time to time been made for the purpose of relieving American shipping from the burden of the tolls to be levied on vessels passing through the Panama Canal, and these proposals together with the arguments that have been used to support them have been carefully considered with a view to the bearing on them of the provisions of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain of November 18th, 1901.

The proposals may be summed up as follows:—

(1). To exempt all American shipping from the tolls.

(2). To refund to all American ships the tolls which they may have paid.

(3). To exempt American ships engaged in the coastwise trade.

(4). To repay the tolls to American ships engaged in the coastwise trade.

The proposal to exempt all American shipping from the payment of the tolls, would, in the opinion of His Majesty's Government, involve an infraction of the treaty, nor is there, in their opinion any difference in principle between charging tolls only to refund them and remitting tolls altogether. The result is the same in either case, and the adoption of the alternative method of refunding the tolls in preference to that of remitting them, while perhaps complying with the letter of the treaty, would still contravene its spirit.

It has been argued that a refund of the tolls would merely be equivalent to a subsidy and that there is nothing in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty which limits the right of the United States to subsidise its shipping. It is true that there is nothing in that treaty to prevent the United States from subsidising its shipping and if it granted a subsidy His Majesty's Government could not be in a position to complain. But there is a great distinction between a general subsidy, either to shipping at large or to shipping engaged in any given trade, and a subsidy calculated particularly with reference to the amount of user of the Canal by the subsidised lines or vessels. If such a subsidy were granted it would not, in the opinion of His Majesty's Government, be in accordance with the obligations of the treaty.

As to the proposal that exemption shall be given to vessels engaged in the coastwise trade, a more difficult question arises. If the trade should be so regulated as to make it certain that only bona-fide coastwise traffic which is reserved for United States vessels would be benefited by this exemption, it may be that no objection could be taken. But it appears to my Government that it would be impossible to frame regulations which would prevent the exemption from resulting, in fact, in a preference to United States shipping and consequently in an infraction of the treaty.

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
No. 1032. London, July 15, 1912.

At Sir Edward Grey's request I called at the Foreign Office today to converse with him about the Panama Canal. Sir Edward presented three points as follows:

In helping to get the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty out of the way, and in negotiating the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty, Great Britain has shown the friendliest feeling toward the United States.

Later on, by assenting to our fortification of the canal, she tried to render us a genuine service.

Great Britain, in doing this, was relying entirely upon what she considered to be the unequivocal pledge of the United States to manage the canal without discrimination in favor of any nation, not even of itself.

But the reported action seemed to Sir Edward to propose a distinct violation of that treaty pledge.

Furthermore, he called my attention to what he termed an invidious discrimination against important Canadian interests involved in the proposal to exclude from the privileges of the canal the steamships owned by railway companies.

The British Government, he said, did not wish to seem premature, but were unwilling to give ground for an assertion that their silence had been taken for consent.

After explaining that I was without instructions on the subject, and derived all I knew about it from cable despatches, I said that there were a few points worthy to be considered, it seemed to me, before taking definite position.

First, there was no probability that, if the United States had not taken up the construction of the Panama Canal, any other nation would have taken it up. The French effort to construct the canal had been a failure, and if an effort by any other nation had been made with seeming promise of success, invocation of the Monroe Doctrine against it would probably have been insisted on by the people of the United States. The United States, having practically no merchant marine, was the one great commercial nation which had no immediate means of using the canal to its profit.

I also thought that in view of the changes in sovereignty and the subsequent perpetual lease by the United States of the whole canal zone, there were publicists who questioned whether the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty could now be equitably, or even legally, applied to the full extent of its language.

Finally I observed that the investment already made and sure to be made before the canal could be opened was too colossal to justify any nation in supposing that the United States was making it from purely philanthropic motives; thus from the outset it must have been assumed that the United States saw some means of deriving from the investment a benefit for itself.

Sir Edward replied to these remarks that,

If great commercial nations other than the United States were the only ones to make much use of the canal, they would consequently be the only ones paying the tolls that would give us the interest on our investments;

The United States would surely derive a direct advantage from the facility with which we could transfer our naval supremacy from one coast to the other, even if we had no merchant ships whatever.

I made it perfectly clear that my remarks were purely personal and unofficial, but that I should report to you our conversation.

REID.

Panama Canal Act: "An Act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone." (Signed by the President August 24, 1912.)[1]

[Sections 5 and 11.]

SEC. 5. That the President is hereby authorized to prescribe and from time to time change the tolls that shall be levied by the Government of the United States for the use of the Panama Canal: Provided, That no tolls, when prescribed as above, shall be changed, unless six months' notice thereof shall have been given by the President by proclamation. No tolls shall be levied upon vessels engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States. That section forty-one hundred and thirty-two of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4132. Vessels built within the United States and belonging wholly to citizens thereof; and vessels which may be captured in war by citizens of the United States and lawfully condemned as prize, or which may be adjudged to be forfeited for a breach of the laws of the United States; and seagoing vessels, whether steam or sail, which have been certified by the Steamboat-Inspection Service as safe to carry dry and perishable cargo, not more than five years old at the time they apply for registry, wherever built, which are to engage only in trade with foreign countries or with the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila, being wholly owned by citizens of the United States or corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof, the president and managing directors of which shall be citizens of the United States or corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof, the president and managing directors of which shall be citizens of the United States, and no others, may be registered as directed in this title. Foreign-built vessels registered pursuant to this Act shall not engage in the coastwise trade: Provided, That a foreign-built yacht, pleasure boat, or vessel not used or intended to be used for trade admitted to American registry pursuant to this section shall not be exempt from the collection of ad valorem duty provided in section thirty-seven of the Act approved August fifth, nineteen hundred and nine, entitled 'An Act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.' That all materials of foreign production which may be necessary for the construction or repair of vessels built in the United States and all such materials necessary for the building or repair of their machinery and all articles necessary for their outfit and equipment may be imported into the United States free of duty under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided further, That such vessels so admitted under the provisions of this section may contract with the Postmaster General under the Act of March third, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, entitled 'An Act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce,' so long as such vessels shall in all respects comply with the provisions and requirements of said Act."

Tolls may be based upon gross or net registered tonnage, displacement tonnage, or otherwise, and may be based on one form of tonnage for warships and another for ships of commerce. The rate of tolls may be lower upon vessels in ballast than upon vessels carrying passengers or cargo. When based upon net registered tonnage for ships of commerce the tolls shall not exceed one dollar and twenty-five cents per net registered ton, nor be less, other than for vessels of the United States and its citizens, than the estimated proportionate cost of the actual maintenance and operation of the canal subject, however, to the provisions of article nineteen of the convention between the United States and the Republic of Panama, entered into November eighteenth, nineteen hundred and three. If the tolls shall not be based upon net registered tonnage, they shall not exceed the equivalent of one dollar and twenty-five cents per net registered ton as nearly as the same may be determined, nor be less than the equivalent of seventy-five cents per net registered ton. The toll for each passenger shall not be more than one dollar and fifty cents. The President is authorized to make and from time to time amend regulations governing the operation of the Panama Canal, and the passage and control of vessels through the same or any part thereof, including the locks and approaches thereto, and all rules and regulations affecting pilots and pilotage in the canal or the approaches thereto through the adjacent waters.

[The remainder of this section concerns the payment of claims for damages for injury to vessels, cargo or passengers from passage through the canal.]

SEC. 11. That section five of the Act to regulate commerce, approved February fourth, eighteen hundred and eighty-seven, as heretofore amended, is hereby amended by adding thereto a new paragraph at the end thereof, as follows:

"From and after the first day of July, nineteen hundred and fourteen, it shall be unlawful for any railroad company or other common carrier subject to the Act to regulate commerce to own, lease, operate, control, or have any interest whatsoever (by stock ownership or otherwise, either directly, indirectly, through any holding company or by stockholders or directors in common, or in any other manner) in any common carrier by water operated through the Panama Canal or elsewhere with which said railroad or other carrier aforesaid does or may compete for traffic or any vessel carrying freight or passengers upon said water route or elsewhere with which said railroad or other carrier aforesaid does or may compete for traffic; and in case of the violation of this provision each day in which such violation continues shall be deemed a separate offense."

Jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine questions of fact as to the competition or possibility of competition, after full hearing, on the application of any railroad company or other carrier. Such application may be filed for the purpose of determining whether any existing service is in violation of this section and pray for an order permitting the continuance of any vessel or vessels already in operation, or for the purpose of asking an order to install new service not in conflict with the provisions of this paragraph. The commission may on its own motion or the application of any shipper institute proceedings to inquire into the operation of any vessel in use by any railroad or other carrier which has not applied to the commission and had the question of competition or the possibility of competition determined as herein provided. In all such cases the order of said commission shall be final.

If the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be of the opinion that any such existing specified service by water other than through the Panama Canal is being operated in the interest of the public and is of advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people, and that such extension will neither exclude, prevent, nor reduce competition on the route by water under consideration, the Interstate Commerce Commission may, by order, extend the time during which such service by water may continue to be operated beyond July first, nineteen hundred and fourteen. In every case of such extension the rates, schedules, and practices of such water carrier shall be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission and shall be subject to the act to regulate commerce and all amendments thereto in the same manner and to the same extent as is the railroad or other common carrier controlling such water carrier or interested in any manner in its operation: Provided, Any application for extension under the terms of this provision filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission prior to July first, nineteen hundred and fourteen, but for any reason not heard and disposed of before said date, may be considered and granted thereafter.

No vessel permitted to engage in the coastwise or foreign trade of the United States shall be permitted to enter or pass through said canal if such ship is owned, chartered, operated, or controlled by any person or company which is doing business in violation of the provisions of the Act of Congress approved July second, eighteen hundred and ninety, entitled "An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," or the provisions of sections seventy-three to seventy-seven, both inclusive, of an Act approved August twenty-seventh, eighteen hundred and ninety-four, entitled "An Act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," or the provisions of any other Act of Congress amending or supplementing the said Act of July second, eighteen hundred and ninety, commonly known as the Sherman Antitrust Act, and amendments thereto, or said sections of the Act of August twenty-seventh, eighteen hundred and ninety-four. The question of fact may be determined by the judgment of any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction in any cause pending before it to which the owners or operators of such ship are parties. Suit may be brought by any shipper or by the Attorney General of the United States.

That section six of said Act to regulate commerce, as heretofore amended, is hereby amended by adding a new paragraph at the end thereof, as follows:

"When property may be or is transported from point to point in the United States by rail and water through the Panama Canal or otherwise, the transportation being by a common carrier or carriers, and not entirely within the limits of a single State, the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have jurisdiction of such transportation and of the carriers, both by rail and by water, which may or do engage in the same, in the following particulars, in addition to the jurisdiction given by the Act to regulate commerce, as amended June eighteenth, nineteen hundred and ten:

"(a) To establish physical connection between the lines of the rail carrier and the dock of the water carrier by directing the rail carrier to make suitable connection between its line and a track or tracks which have been constructed from the dock to the limits of its right of way, or by directing either or both the rail and water carrier, individually or in connection with one another, to construct and connect with the lines of the rail carrier a spur track or tracks to the dock. This provision shall only apply where such connection is reasonably practicable, can be made with safety to the public, and where the amount of business to be handled is sufficient to justify the outlay.

"The commission shall have full authority to determine the terms and conditions upon which these connecting tracks, when constructed, shall be operated, and it may, either in the construction or the operation of such tracks, determine what sum shall be paid to or by either carrier. The provisions of this paragraph shall extend to cases where the dock is owned by other parties than the carrier involved.

"(b) To establish through routes and maximum joint rates between and over such rail and water lines, and to determine all the terms and conditions under which such lines shall be operated in the handling of the traffic embraced.

"(c) To establish maximum proportional rates by rail to and from the ports to which the traffic is brought, or from which it is taken by the water carrier, and to determine to what traffic and in connection with what vessels and upon what terms and conditions such rates shall apply. By proportional rates are meant those which differ from the corresponding local rates to and from the port and which apply only to traffic which has been brought to the port or is carried from the port by a common carrier by water.

"(d) If any rail carrier subject to the Act to regulate commerce enters into arrangements with any water carrier operating from a port in the United States to a foreign country, through the Panama Canal or otherwise, for the handling of through business between interior points of the United States and such foreign country, the Interstate Commerce Commission may require such railway to enter into similar arrangements with any or all other lines of steamships operating from said port to the same foreign country."

The orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission relating to this section shall only be made upon formal complaint or in proceedings instituted by the commission of its own motion and after full hearing. The orders provided for in the two amendments to the Act to regulate commerce enacted in this section shall be served in the same manner and enforced by the same penalties and proceedings as are the orders of the commission made under the provisions of section fifteen of the Act to regulate commerce, as amended June eighteenth, nineteen hundred and ten, and they may be conditioned for the payment of any sum or the giving of security for the payment of any sum or the discharge of any obligation which may be required by the terms of said order.

The President to Congress.

[Memorandum to accompany the Panama Canal Act.]

In signing the Panama Canal Bill, I wish to leave this memorandum. The bill is admirably drawn for the purpose of securing the proper maintenance, operation and control of the Canal, and the government of the Canal Zone, and for the furnishing to all the patrons of the canal, through the Government, of the requisite docking facilities and the supply of coal and other shipping necessities. It is absolutely necessary to have the bill passed at this session in order that the capital of the world engaged in the preparation of ships to use the canal may know in advance the conditions under which the traffic is to be carried on through this waterway.

I wish to consider the objections to the bill in the order of their importance.

1. The bill is objected to because it is said to violate the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty in discriminating in favor of the coastwise trade of the United States by providing that no tolls shall be charged to vessels engaged in that trade passing through the canal. This is the subject of a protest by the British Government.[1]

The British protest involves the right of the Congress of the United States to regulate its domestic and foreign commerce in such manner as to the Congress may seem wise, and specifically the protest challenges the right of the Congress to exempt American shipping from the payment of tolls for the use of the Panama Canal or to refund to such American ships the tolls which they may have paid, and this without regard to the trade in which such ships are employed, whether coastwise or foreign. The protest states "the proposal to exempt all American shipping from the payment of the tolls would, in the opinion of His Majesty's Government, involve an infraction of the treaty (Hay-Pauncefote), nor is there, in their opinion, any difference in principle between charging tolls only to refund them and remitting tolls altogether. The result is the same in either case, and the adoption of the alternative method of refunding tolls in preference of remitting them, while perhaps complying with the letter of the treaty, would still controvert[1] its spirit." The provision of the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty involved is contained in article 3, which provides:

[1] See the British note of July 8.

> The United States adopts, as the basis of the neutralisation of such ship canal, the following rules, substantially as embodied in the convention of Constantinople, signed the 28th October, 1888, for the free navigation of the Suez Canal, that is to say:
> 1. The canal shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations observing these rules, on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any such nation, or its citizens or subjects. In respect of the conditions or charges of traffic, or otherwise. Such conditions and charges of traffic shall be just and equitable.

Then follows five other rules to be observed by other nations to make neutralisation effective, the observance of which is the condition for the privilege of using the canal.

In view of the fact that the Panama Canal is being constructed by the United States wholly at its own cost, upon territory ceded to it by the Republic of Panama for that purpose, and that unless it has restricted itself the United States enjoys absolute rights of ownership and control, including the right to allow its own commerce the use of the canal upon such terms as it sees fit, the sole question is, Has the United States in the language above quoted from the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty deprived itself of the exercise of the right to pass its own commerce free or to remit tolls collected for the use of the canal?

It will be observed that the rules specified in Article 3 of the treaty were adopted by the United States for a specific purpose, namely, as the basis of the neutralization of the canal and for no other purpose. The Article is a declaration of the policy by the United States that the canal shall be neutral, that the attitude of this Government towards the commerce of the world is that all nations will be treated alike and no discrimination made by the United States against any one of them observing the rules adopted by the United States. The right to the use of the canal and to equality of treatment in the use depends upon the observance of the conditions of the use by the nations to whom we extended that privilege. The privileges of all nations to whom we extended the use upon the observance of these conditions were to be equal to that extended to any one of them which observed the conditions. In other words, it was a conditional favored nation treatment, the measure of which in the absence of express stipulation to that effect, is not what the country gives to its own nationals, but the treatment it exends to other nations.

Thus it is seen that the rules are but a basis of neutralization, intended to effect the neutrality which the United States was willing should be the character of the canal and not intended to limit or hamper the United States in the exercise of its sovereign power to deal with its own commerce using its own canal in whatsoever manner it saw fit.

[1] The copy on file says "contravene."

If there is no "difference in principle between the United States charging tolls to its own shipping only to refund them and remitting tolls altogether," as the British protest declares, then the irresistible conclusion is that the United States, although it owns, controls and has paid for the canal is restricted by treaty from aiding its own commerce in the way that all the other nations of the world may freely do. It would scarcely be claimed that the setting out in a treaty between the United States and Great Britain of certain rules adopted by the United States as the basis of the neutralization of the canal would bind any government to do or refrain from doing anything other than the things required by the rules to insure the privilege of use and freedom from discrimination. Since the rules do not provide as a condition for the privilege of use upon equal terms with other nations that other nations desiring to build up a particular trade involving the use of the canal shall not either directly agree to pay the tolls or to refund to its ships the tolls collected for the use of the canal, it is evident that the treaty does not affect that inherent, sovereign right, unless, which is not likely, it be claimed that the promulgation by the United States of these rules insuring all nations against its discrimination, would authorize the United States to pass upon the action of other nations and require that no one of them should grant to its shipping larger subsidies or more liberal inducement for the use of the canal than were granted by others. In other words, that the United States has the power to equalize the practice of other nations in this regard.

If it is correct then to assume that there is nothing in the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty preventing Great Britain and the other nations from extending such favors as they may see fit to their shipping using the canal, and doing it in the way they see fit, and if it is also right to assume that there is nothing in the treaty that gives the United States any supervision over, or right to complain of such action, then the British protest leads to the absurd conclusion that this Government in constructing the canal, maintaining the canal, and defending the canal, finds itself shorn of its right to deal with its own commerce in its own way, while all other nations using the canal in competition with American commerce enjoys that right and power unimpaired.

The British protest, therefore, is a proposal to read into the treaty a surrender by the United States of its right to regulate its own commerce in its own way and by its own methods, a right which neither Great Britain herself, nor any other nation that may use the canal, has surrendered or proposes to surrender. The surrender of this right is not claimed to be in terms. It is only to be inferred from the fact that the United States has conditionally granted to all the nations the use of the canal without discrimination by the United States between the grantees; but as the treaty leaves all nations desiring to use the canal with full right to deal with their own vessels as they see fit, the United States would only be discriminating against itself if it were to recognize the soundness of the British contention.

The bill here in question does not positively do more than to discriminate in favor of the coastwise trade, and the British protest seems to recognize a distinction between such exemption and the exemption of American vessels engaged in foreign trade. In effect, of course, there is a substantial and practical difference. The American vessels in foreign trade come into competition with vessels of other nations in that same trade, while foreign vessels are forbidden to engage in the American coastwise trade. While the bill here in question seems to vest the President with discretion to discriminate in fixing tolls in favor of American ships and against foreign ships engaged in foreign trade, within the limitation of the range from 50 cents a ton to $1.25 a net ton, there is nothing in the act to compel the President to make such a discrimination. It is not, therefore, necessary to discuss the policy of such discrimination until the question may arise in the exercise of the President's discretion.

The policy of exempting the coastwise trade from all tolls really involves the question of granting a Government subsidy for the purpose of encouraging that trade in competition with the trade of the transcontinental railroads. I approve this policy. It is in accord with the historical course of the Government in giving Government aid to the construction of the transcontinental roads. It is now merely giving Government aid to a means of transportation that competes with those transcontinental roads.

2. The bill permits the registry of foreign-built vessels as vessels of the United States for foreign trade, and it also permits the admission without duty of materials for the construction and repair of vessels in the United States. This is objected to on the ground that it will interfere with the shipbuilding interests of the United States. I cannot concur in this view. The number of vessels of the United States engaged in foreign trade is so small that the work done by the present shipyards is almost wholly that of constructing vessels for the coastwise trade or Government vessels. In other words, there is substantially no business for building ships in the foreign trade in the shipyards of the United States which will be injured by this new provision. It is hoped that this registry of foreign-built ships in American foreign trades will prove to be a method of increasing our foreign shipping. The experiment will hurt no interest of ours, and we can observe its operation. If it proves to extend our commercial flag to the high seas, it will supply a long-felt want.

3. Section 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act is amended by forbidding railroad companies to own, lease, operate, control, or have any interest in any common carrier by water operated through the Panama Canal with which such railroad or other carrier does or may compete for traffic. I have twice recommended such restriction as to the Panama Canal. It was urged upon me that the Interstate Commerce Commission might control the trade so as to prevent an abuse from the joint ownership of railroads and of Panama steamships competing with each other, and therefore that this radical provision was not necessary. Conference with the Interstate Commerce Commission, however, satisfied me that such control would not be as effective as this restriction. The difficulty is that the interest of the railroad company is so much larger in its railroad and in the maintenance of its railroad rates than in making a profit out of the steamship line that it can afford temporarily to run its vessels for nearly nothing in order to drive out of the business independent steamship lines, and thus obtain complete control of the shipping in the trade through the canal and regulate the rates according to the interest of the railroad company. Jurisdiction is conferred on the Interstate Commerce Commission finally to determine the question of fact as to the competition or possibility of competition of the water carrier with the railroad, and this may be done in advance of any investment of capital.

4. The effect of the amendment of section 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act also is extended so as to make it unlawful for railroad companies owning or controlling lines of steamships in any other part of the jurisdiction of the United States to continue to do so, and as to such railroad companies and such water carriers the Interstate Commerce Commission is given the duty and power not only finally to determine the question of competition or possibility of competition, but also to determine "that the specified service by water is being operated in the interest of the public and is of advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people, and that such extension will neither exclude, prevent, nor reduce competition on the route by water under consideration"; and, if it finds this to be the case, to extend the time during which such service by water may continue beyond the date fixed in the act for its first operation— to wit, July 1, 1914. Whenever the time is extended, then the water carrier, its rates and schedules and practices are brought within the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission. How far it is within the power of Congress to delegate to the Interstate Commerce Commission such wide discretion it is unnecessary now to discuss. There is ample time between now and the time of this provision of the act's going into effect to have the matter examined by the Supreme Court, or to change the form of the legislation, should it be deemed necessary. Certainly the suggested invalidity of this section, if true, would not invalidate the entire act, the remainder of which may well stand without regard to this provision.

5. The final objection is to a provision which prevents the owner of any steamship who is guilty of violating the anti-trust law from using the canal. It is quite evident that this section applies only to those vessels engaged in the trade in which there is a monopoly contrary to our Federal statute, and it is a mere injunctive process against the continuance of such monopolistic trade. It adds the penalty of denying the use of the canal to a person or corporation violating the anti-trust law. It may have some practical operation where the business monopolized is transportation by ships, but it does not become operative to prevent the use of the canal until the decree of the court shall have established the fact of the guilt of the owner of the vessel. While the penalties of the anti-trust law seem to me to be quite sufficient already, I do not know that this new remedy against a particular kind of a trust may not sometimes prove useful.

In a message[1] sent to Congress after this bill had passed both Houses I ventured to suggest a possible amendment by which all persons, and especially all British subjects who felt aggrieved by the provisions of the bill on the ground that they are in violation of the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty, might try that question in the Supreme Court of the United States. I think this would have satisfied those who oppose the view which Congress evidently entertains of the treaty and might avoid the necessity for either diplomatic negotiation or further decision by an arbitral tribunal. Congress, however, has not thought it wise to accept the suggestion, and therefore I must proceed in the view which I have expressed, and am convinced is the correct one, as to the proper construction of the treaty and the limitations which it imposes upon the United States. I do not find that the bill here in question violates those limitations.

On the whole, I believe the bill to be one of the most beneficial that has passed this or any other Congress, and I find no reason in the objections made to the bill which would lead me to delay, until another session of Congress, provisions that are imperatively needed now in order that due preparation by the world may be made for the opening of the canal.

Sir: On the 8th July I had the honour to present to the Government of the United States the views of His Majesty's Government on certain proposals which had been formulated with the object of relieving United States ships using the Panama Canal from the payment of tolls, while levying such tolls on foreign ships.

In view of the bill which has now been passed, and of the memorandum issued by the President on signing it, I am instructed to inform you that His Majesty's Government adhere to the views expressed in that note, and that when His Majesty's Government have had time to consider fully the act and the memorandum a further communication will be made to you on the subject.

I am instructed to add at the same time that should there eventually be a difference between the two countries as to the correct interpretation of the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty which cannot be settled by other means, His Majesty's Government would then ask that it should be referred to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of the existing arbitration treaty concluded in 1908.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 27th instant in further expression of the views of His Britannic Majesty's Government concerning the relieving of American vessels using the Panama Canal from the payment of tolls.

Due note has been taken of the information which you communicate by instruction of your Government that His Majesty's Government adhere to the views expressed in your note of the 8th ultimo and that when His Majesty's Government has had time to consider fully the Act and the memorandum issued by the President upon signing the Act a further communication will be made to this Government on the subject.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

A PROCLAMATION.

I, WILLIAM HOWARD TAFT, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the power and authority vested in me by the Act of Congress, approved August twenty-fourth, nineteen hundred and twelve, to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection and operation of the Panama Canal and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone, do hereby prescribe and proclaim the following rates of toll to be paid by vessels using the Panama Canal:

1. On merchant vessels carrying passengers or cargo one dollar and twenty cents ($1.20) per net vessel ton—each one hundred (100) cubic feet—of actual earning capacity.

2. On vessels in ballast without passengers or cargo forty (40) percent less than the rate of tolls for vessels with passengers or cargo.

3. Upon naval vessels, other than transports, colliers, hospital ships and supply ships, fifty (50) cents per displacement ton.

4. Upon army and navy transports, colliers, hospital ships and supply ships one dollar and twenty cents ($1.20) per net ton, the vessels to be measured by the same rules as are employed in determining the net tonnage of merchant vessels.

The Secretary of War will prepare and prescribe such rules for the measurement of vessels and such regulations as may be necessary and proper to carry this proclamation into full force and effect.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

DONE at the City of Washington this thirteenth day of November in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and [SEAL.] twelve and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and thirty-seventh.

[Handed to the Secretary of State by the British Ambassador December 9, 1912.]

FOREIGN OFFICE, November 14, 1912.

SIR: Your excellency will remember that on the 8th July, 1912, Mr. Mitchell Innes communicated to the Secretary of State the objections which His Majesty's Government entertained to the legislation relating to the Panama Canal, which was then under discussion in Congress, and that on the 27th August, after the passing of the Panama Canal Act and the issue of the President's memorandum on signing it, he informed Mr. Knox that when His Majesty's Government had had time to consider fully the Act and the memorandum a further communication would be made to him.

Since that date the text of the Act and the memorandum of the President have received attentive consideration at the hands of His Majesty's Government. A careful study of the President's memorandum has convinced me that he has not fully appreciated the British point of view, and has misunderstood Mr. Michell Innes' note of the 8th July. The President argues upon the assumption that it is the intention of His Majesty's Government to place upon the Hay-Pauncefote treaty an interpretation which would prevent the United States from granting subsidies to their own shipping passing through the Canal, and which would place them at a disadvantage as compared with other nations. This is not the case; His Majesty's Government regard equality of all nations as the fundamental principle underlying the treaty of 1901 in the same way that it was the basis of the Suez Canal Convention of 1888, and they do not seek to deprive the United States of any liberty which is open either to themselves or to any other nation; nor do they find either in the letter or in the spirit of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty any surrender by either of the contracting Powers of the right to encourage its shipping or its commerce by such subsidies as it may deem expedient.

The terms of the President's memorandum render it essential that I should explain in some detail the view which His Majesty's Government take as to what is the proper interpretation of the treaty, so as to indicate the limitations which they consider it imposes upon the freedom of action of the United States, and the points in which the Panama Canal Act, as enacted, infringes what His Majesty's Government hold to be their treaty rights.

The Hay-Pauncefote Treaty does not stand alone; it was the corollary of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty of 1850. The earlier treaty was, no doubt, superseded by it, but its general principle, as embodied in article 8, was not to be impaired. The object of the later treaty is clearly shown by its preamble; it was "to facilitate the construction of a ship canal to connect the Atlantic and Pacific oceans by whatever route may be deemed expedient, and to that end to remove any objection which may arise out of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty to the construction of such canal under the auspices of the Government of the United States, without impairing the general principle of neutralisation established in article 8 of that convention." It was upon that footing, and upon that footing alone, that the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty was superseded.

Under that treaty both parties had agreed not to obtain any exclusive control over the contemplated ship canal, but the importance of the great project was fully recognised, and therefore the construction of the canal by others was to be encouraged, and the canal when completed was to enjoy a special measure of protection on the part of both the contracting parties.

Under article 8 the two Powers declared their desire, in entering into the Convention, not only to accomplish a particular object, but also to establish a general principle, and therefore agreed to extend their protection to any practicable trans-isthmian communication, either by canal or railway, and either at Tehuantepec or Panama, provided that those who constructed it should impose no other charges or conditions of traffic than the two Governments should consider just and equitable, and that the canal or railway, "being open to the subjects and citizens of Great Britain and the United States on equal terms, should also be open to the subjects of any other State which was willing to join in the guarantee of joint protection."

So long as the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty was in force, therefore, the position was that both parties to it had given up their power of independent action, because neither was at liberty itself to construct the Canal and thereby obtain the exclusive control which such construction would confer. It is also clear that if the Canal had been constructed while the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty was in force, it would have been open, in accordance with article 8, to British and United States ships on equal terms, and equally clear, therefore, that the tolls leviable on such ships would have been identical.

The purpose of the United States in negotiating the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty was to recover their freedom of action, and obtain the right, which they had surrendered, to construct the Canal themselves; this is expressed in the preamble to the treaty, but the complete liberty of action consequential upon such construction was to be limited by the maintenance of the general principle embodied in article 8 of the earlier treaty. That principle, as shown above, was one of equal treatment for both British and United States ships, and a study of the language of article 8 shows that the word "neutralisation", in the preamble of the later treaty, is not there confined to belligerent operations, but refers to the system of equal rights for which article 8 provides.

If the wording of the article is examined, it will be seen that there is no mention of belligerent action in it at all. Joint protection and equal treatment are the only matters alluded to, and it is to one, or both, of these that neutralisation must refer. Such joint protection has always been understood by His Majesty's Government to be one of the results of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty of which the United States was most anxious to get rid, and they can scarcely therefore believe that it was such joint protection that the United States were willing to keep alive, and to which they referred in the preamble of the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty. It certainly was not the intention of His Majesty's Government that any responsibility for the protection of the Canal should attach to them in the future. Neutralisation must therefore refer to the system of equal rights.

It thus appears from the preamble that the intention of the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty was that the United States was to recover the right to construct the trans-isthmian canal upon the terms that, when constructed, the canal was to be open to British and United States ships on equal terms.

The situation created was in fact identical with that resulting from the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909 between Great Britain and the United States, which provided as follows:—

"The high contracting parties agree that the navigation of all navigable boundary waters shall for ever continue free and open for the purposes of commerce to the inhabitants and to the ships, vessels, and boats of both countries equally, subject, however, to any laws and regulations of either country, within its own territory, not inconsistent with such privilege of free navigation, and applying equally and without discrimination to the inhabitants, ships, vessels, and boats of both countries.

"It is further agreed that so long as this treaty shall remain in force this same right of navigation shall extend to the waters of Lake Michigan and to all canals connecting boundary waters and now existing, or which may hereafter be constructed on either side of the line. Either of the high contracting parties may adopt rules and regulations governing the use of such canals within its own territory, and may charge tolls for the use thereof; but all such rules and regulations and all tolls charged shall apply alike to the subjects or citizens of the high contracting parties, and they * * * shall be placed on terms of equality in the use thereof."

A similar provision, though more restricted in its scope, appears in article 27 of the Treaty of Washington, 1871, and your excellency will no doubt remember how strenuously the United States protested, as a violation of equal rights, against a system which Canada had introduced of a rebate of a large portion of the tolls on certain freight on the Welland Canal, provided that such freight was taken as far as Montreal, and how in the face of that protest the system was abandoned.

The principle of equality is repeated in article 3 of the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty, which provides that the United States adopts, as the basis of the neutralisation of the Canal, certain rules, substantially as embodied in the Suez Canal Convention. The first of these rules is that the Canal shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and war of all nations observing the rules on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any such nation.

The word "neutralisation" is no doubt used in article 3 in the same sense as in the preamble, and implies subjection to the system of equal rights. The effect of the first rule is therefore to establish the provision, foreshadowed by the preamble and consequent on the maintenance of the principle of article 8 of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, that the Canal is to be open to British and United States vessels on terms of entire equality. It also embodies a promise on the part of the United States that the ships of all nations which observe the rules will be admitted to similar privileges.

The President in his memorandum treats the words "all nations" as excluding the United States. He argues that, as the United States is constructing the Canal at its own cost on territory ceded to it, it has, unless it has restricted itself, an absolute right of ownership and control, including the right to allow its own commerce the use of the Canal upon such terms as it sees fit, and that the only question is whether it has by the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty deprived itself of the exercise of the right to pass its own commerce free or remit tolls collected for the use of the Canal. He argues that article 3 of the treaty is nothing more than a declaration of policy by the United States that the Canal shall be neutral and all nations treated alike and no discrimination made against any one of them observing the rules adopted by the United States. "In other words, it was a conditional favoured-nation treatment, the measure of which, in the absence of express stipulations to that effect, is not what the country gives to its own nationals, but the treatment it extends to other nations."

For the reasons they have given above His Majesty's Government believe this statement of the case to be wholly at variance with the real position. They consider that by the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty the United States had surrendered the right to construct the Canal, and that by the Hay-Pauncefote treaty they recovered that right upon the footing that the Canal should be open to British and United States vessels upon terms of equal treatment.

The case cannot be put more clearly than it was put by Mr. Hay himself, who, as Secretary of State, negotiated the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty, in the full account of the negotiations which he sent to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations (see Senate Document No. 746, 61st Congress, 3rd session) :—

> These rules are adopted in the treaty with Great Britain as a consideration for getting rid of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty.

If the rules set out in the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty secure to Great Britain no more than most-favoured-nation treatment, the value of the consideration given for superseding the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty is not apparent to His Majesty's Government. Nor is it easy to see in what way the principle of article 8 of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, which provides for equal treatment of British and United States ships, has been maintained.

I notice that in the course of the debate in the Senate on the Panama Canal Bill the argument was used by one of the speakers that the third, fourth, and fifth rules embodied in article 3 of the treaty show that the words "all nations" cannot include the United States, because, if the United States were at war, it is impossible to believe that it could be intended to be debarred by the treaty from using its own territory for revictualing its war-ships or landing troops.

The same point may strike others who read nothing but the text of the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty itself, and I think it is therefore worth while that I should briefly show that this argument is not well founded.

The Hay-Pauncefote Treaty of 1901 aimed at carrying out the principle of the neutralisation of the Panama Canal by subjecting it to the same régime as the Suez Canal. Rules 3, 4, and 5 of article 3 of the treaty are taken almost textually from articles 4, 5, and 6 of the Suez Canal Convention of 1888. At the date of the signature of the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty the territory on which the Isthmian Canal was to be constructed did not belong to the United States, consequently there was no need to insert in the draft treaty provisions corresponding to those in articles 10 and 13 of the Suez Canal Convention, which preserve the sovereign rights of Turkey and of Egypt, and stipulate that articles 4 and 5 shall not effect the right of Turkey, as the local sovereign, and of Egypt, within the measure of her autonomy, to take such measures as may be necessary for securing the defence of Egypt and the maintenance of public order, and, in the case of Turkey, the defence of her possessions on the Red Sea.

Now that the United States has become the practical sovereign of the Canal, His Majesty's Government do not question its title to exercise belligerent rights for its protection.

For these reasons, His Majesty's Government maintain that the words "all nations" in rule 1 of article 3 of the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty include the United States, and that, in consequence, British vessels using the Canal are entitled to equal treatment with those of the United States, and that the same tolls are chargeable on each.

This rule also provides that the tolls should be "just and equitable." The purpose of these words was to limit the tolls to the amount representing the fair value of the services rendered, i. e., to the interest on the capital expended and the cost of operation and maintenance of the Canal. Unless the whole volume of shipping which passes through the Canal, and which all benefits equally by its services, is taken into account, there are no means of determining whether the tolls chargeable upon a vessel represent that vessel's fair proportion of the current expenditure properly chargeable against the Canal, that is to say, interest on the capital expended in construction, and the cost of operation and maintenance. If any classes of vessels are exempted from tolls in such a way that no receipts from such ships are taken into account in the income of the Canal, there is no guarantee that the vessels upon which tolls are being levied are not being made to bear more than their fair share of the upkeep. Apart altogether, therefore, from the provision in rule 1 about equality of treatment for all nations, the stipulation that the tolls shall be just and equitable, when rightly understood, entitles His Majesty's Government to demand, on behalf of British shipping, that all vessels passing through the Canal, whatever their flag or their character, shall be taken into account in fixing the amount of the tolls.

The result is that any system by which particular vessels or classes of vessels were exempted from the payment of tolls would not comply with the stipulations of the treaty that the Canal should be open on terms of entire equality, and that the charges should be just and equitable.

The President, in his memorandum, argues that if there is no difference, as stated in Mr. Mitchell Innes' note of the 8th July, between charging tolls only to refund them and remitting tolls altogether, the effect is to prevent the United States from aiding its own commerce in the way that all other nations may freely do. This is not so. His Majesty's Government have no desire to place upon the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty an interpretation which would impose upon the United States any restriction from which other nations are free, or reserve to such other nation any privilege which is denied to the United States. Equal treatment, as specified in the treaty, is all they claim.

His Majesty's Government do not question the right of the United States to grant subsidies to United States shipping generally, or to any particular branches of that shipping, but it does not follow therefore that the United States may not be debarred by the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty from granting a subsidy to certain shipping in a particular way, if the effect of the method chosen for granting such subsidy would be to impose upon British or other foreign shipping an unfair share of the burden of the upkeep of the Canal, or to create a discrimination in respect of the conditions or charges of traffic, or otherwise to prejudice rights secured to British shipping by this Treaty.

If the United States exempt certain classes of ships from the payment of tolls the result would be a form of subsidy to those vessels which His Majesty's Government consider the United States are debarred by the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty from making.

It remains to consider whether the Panama Canal Act, in its present form, conflicts with the treaty rights to which His Majesty's Government maintain they are entitled.

Under section 5 of the Act the President is given, within certain defined limits, the right to fix the tolls, but no tolls are to be levied upon ships engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States, and the tolls, when based upon net registered tonnage for ships of commerce, are not to exceed 1 dollar 25 c. per net registered ton, nor be less, other than for vessels of the United States and its citizens, than the estimated proportionate cost of the actual maintenance and operation of the Canal. There is also an exception for the exemptions granted by article 19 of the Convention with Panama of 1903.

The effect of these provisions is that vessels engaged in the coastwise trade will contribute nothing to the upkeep of the Canal. Similarly vessels belonging to the Government of the Republic of Panama will, in pursuance of the treaty of 1903, contribute nothing to the upkeep of the Canal. Again, in the cases where tolls are levied, the tolls in the case of ships belonging to the United States and its citizens may be fixed at a lower rate than in the case of foreign ships, and may be less than the estimated proportionate cost of the actual maintenance and operation of the Canal.

These provisions (1) clearly conflict with the rule embodied in the principle established in article 8 of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty of equal treatment for British and United States ships, and (2) would enable tolls to be fixed which would not be just and equitable, and would therefore not comply with rule 1 of article 3 of the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty.

It has been argued that as the coastwise trade of the United States is confined by law to United States vessels, the exemption of vessels engaged in it from the payment of tolls cannot injure the interests of foreign nations. It is clear, however, that the interests of foreign nations will be seriously injured in two material respects.

In the first place, the exemption will result in the cost of the working of the Canal being borne wholly by foreign-going vessels, and on such vessels, therefore, will fall the whole burden of raising the revenue necessary to cover the cost of working and maintaining the Canal. The possibility, therefore, of fixing the toll on such vessels at a lower figure than 1 dol. 25 c. per ton, or of reducing the rate below that figure at some future time, will be considerably lessened by the exemption.

In the second place, the exemption will, in the opinion of His Majesty's Government, be a violation of the equal treatment secured by the treaty, as it will put the "coastwise trade" in a preferential position as regards other shipping. Coastwise trade cannot be circumscribed so completely that benefits conferred upon it will not affect vessels engaged in the foreign trade. To take an example, if cargo intended for an United States port beyond the Canal, either from east or west, and shipped on board a foreign ship could be sent to its destination more cheaply, through the operation of the proposed exemption, by being landed at an United States port before reaching the Canal, and then sent on as coastwise trade, shippers would benefit by adopting this course in preference to sending the goods direct to their destination through the Canal on board the foreign ship.

Again, although certain privileges are granted to vessels engaged in an exclusively coastwise trade, His Majesty's Government are given to understand that there is nothing in the laws of the United States which prevents any United States ship from combining foreign commerce with coastwise trade, and consequently from entering into direct competition with foreign vessels while remaining "prima facie" entitled to the privilege of free passage through the Canal. Moreover any restriction which may be deemed to be now applicable might at any time be removed by legislation or even perhaps by mere changes in the regulations.

In these and in other ways foreign shipping would be seriously handicapped, and any adverse result would fall more severely on British shipping than on that of any other nationality.

The volume of British shipping which will use the Canal will in all probability be very large. Its opening will shorten by many thousands of miles the waterways between England and other portions of the British Empire, and if on the one hand it is important to the United States to encourage its mercantile marine and establish competition between coastwise traffic and transcontinental railways, it is equally important to Great Britain to secure to its shipping that just and impartial treatment to which it is entitled by treaty, and in return for a promise of which it surrendered the rights which it held under the earlier convention.

There are other provisions of the Panama Canal Act to which the attention of His Majesty's Government has been directed. These are contained in section 11, part of which enacts that a railway company, subject to the Inter-State Commerce Act 1887, is prohibited from having any interest in vessels operated through the Canal with which such railways may compete, and another part provides that a vessel permitted to engage in the coastwise or foreign trade of the United States is not allowed to use the Canal if its owner is guilty of violating the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

His Majesty's Government do not read this section of the Act as applying to, or affecting, British ships, and they therefore do not feel justified in making any observations upon it. They assume that it applies only to vessels flying the flag of the United States, and that it is aimed at practices which concern only the internal trade of the United States. If this view is mistaken and the provisions are intended to apply under any circumstances to British ships, they must reserve their right to examine the matter further and to raise such contentions as may seem justified.

His Majesty's Government feel no doubt as to the correctness of their interpretation of the treaties of 1850 and 1901, and as to the validity of the rights they claim under them for British shipping; nor does there seem to them to be any room for doubt that the provisions of the Panama Canal Act as to tolls conflict with the rights secured to their shipping by the treaty. But they recognise that many persons of note in the United States, whose opinions are entitled to great weight, hold that the provisions of the Act do not infringe the conventional obligations by which the United States is bound, and under these circumstances they desire to state their perfect readiness to submit the question to arbitration if the Government of the United States would prefer to take this course. A reference to arbitration would be rendered unnecessary if the Government of the United States should be prepared to take such steps as would remove the objections to the Act which His Majesty's Government have stated.

Knowing as I do full well the interest which this great undertaking has aroused in the New World and the emotion with which its opening is looked forward to by United States citizens, I wish to add before closing this despatch that it is only with great reluctance that His Majesty's Government have felt bound to raise objection on the ground of treaty rights to the provisions of the Act. Animated by an earnest desire to avoid points which might in any way prove embarrassing to the United States, His Majesty's Government have confined their objections within the narrowest possible limits, and have recognised in the fullest manner the right of the United States to control the Canal. They feel convinced that they may look with confidence to the Government of the United States to ensure that in promoting the interests of United States shipping, nothing will be done to impair the safeguards guaranteed to British shipping by treaty.

Your Excellency will read this despatch to the Secretary of State and will leave with him a copy.

THE NORTH ATLANTIC COAST FISHERIES ARBITRATION.[1] AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN ADOPTING WITH CERTAIN MODIFICATIONS THE RULES AND METHOD OF PROCEDURE RECOMMENDED IN THE AWARD OF SEPTEMBER 7, 1910.[2]

Signed at Washington, July 20, 1912; ratification advised by the Senate, August 1, 1912; ratified by the President, August 7, 1912; ratified by Great Britain, August 19, 1912; ratifications exchanged at Washington, November 15, 1912; proclaimed, November 16, 1912.

By the President of the United States of America.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas an Agreement between the United States of America and Great Britain, adopting with certain modifications therein, the rules and method of procedure recommended in the award of The Hague Tribunal of September 7, 1910, for the settlement hereafter, in accordance with the principles laid down in the award, of questions regarding the exercise of the fishing liberties referred to in Article I of the treaty of October 20, 1818, between the United States and Great Britain, was concluded and signed by their respective Plenipotentiaries at Washington on the twentieth day of July, one thousand nine hundred and twelve, the original of which Agreement is word for word as follows:

---

[1] Treaty Series, No. 572.

[2] See For. Rel. 1910, p. 544; For. Rel. 1911, p. 272.

The United States of America and His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, Emperor of India, being desirous of concluding an agreement regarding the exercise of the liberties referred to in Article I of the Treaty of October 20, 1818, have for this purpose named as their Plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America:

Chandler P. Anderson, Counselor for the Department of State of the United States;

His Britannic Majesty:

Alfred Mitchell Innes, Chargé d'Affaires of His Majesty's Embassy at Washington;

Who, having communicated to each other their respective full powers, which were found to be in due and proper form, have agreed to and concluded the following articles:

Article I.

Whereas the award of The Hague Tribunal of September 7, 1910, recommended for the consideration of the Parties certain rules and a method of procedure under which all questions which may arise in the future regarding the exercise of the liberties referred to in Article I of the Treaty of October 20, 1818, may be determined in accordance with the principles laid down in the award, and the Parties having agreed to make certain modifications therein, the rules and method of procedure so modified are hereby accepted by the Parties in the following form:

1. All future municipal laws, ordinances, or rules for the regulation of the fisheries by Great Britain, Canada, or Newfoundland in respect of (1) the hours, days, or seasons when fish may be taken on the treaty coasts; (2) the method, means, and implements used in the taking of fish or in carrying on fishing operations; (3) any other regulations of a similar character; and all alterations or amendments of such laws, ordinances, or rules shall be promulgated and come into operation within the first fifteen days of November in each year; provided, however, in so far as any such law, ordinance, or rule shall apply to a fishery conducted between the 1st day of November and the 1st day of February, the same shall be promulgated at least six months before the 1st day of November in each year.

Such laws, ordinances, or rules by Great Britain shall be promulgated by publication in the London Gazette, by Canada in the Canada Gazette, and by Newfoundland in the Newfoundland Gazette.

After the expiration of ten years from the date of this Agreement, and so on at intervals of ten years thereafter, either Party may propose to the other that the dates fixed for promulgation be revised in consequence of the varying conditions due to changes in the habits of the fish or other natural causes; and if there shall be a difference of opinion as to whether the conditions have so varied as to render a revision desirable, such difference shall be referred for decision to a commission possessing expert knowledge, such as the Permanent Mixed Fishery Commission hereinafter mentioned.

2. If the Government of the United States considers any such laws or regulations inconsistent with the Treaty of 1818, it is entitled so to notify the Government of Great Britain within forty-five days after the publication above referred to, and may require that the same be submitted to and their reasonableness, within the meaning of the award, be determined by the Permanent Mixed Fishery Commission constituted as hereinafter provided.

3. Any law or regulation not so notified within the said period of forty-five days, or which, having been so notified, has been declared reasonable and consistent with the Treaty of 1818 (as interpreted by the said award) by the Permanent Mixed Fishery Commission, shall be held to be reasonable within the meaning of the award; but if declared by the said Commission to be unreasonable and inconsistent with the Treaty of 1818, it shall not be applicable to the inhabitants of the United States exercising their fishing liberties under the Treaty of 1818.

4. Permanent Mixed Fishery Commissions for Canada and Newfoundland, respectively, shall be established for the decision of such questions as to the reasonableness of future regulations, as contemplated by Article IV of the Special Agreement of January 27, 1909. These Commissions shall consist of an expert national, appointed by each Party for five years; the third member shall not be a national of either Party. He shall be nominated for five years by agreement of the Parties, or, failing such agreement, within two months from the date, when either of the Parties to this Agreement shall call upon the other to agree upon such third member, he shall be nominated by Her Majesty the Queen of the Netherlands.

5. The two national members shall be summoned by the Government of Great Britain, and shall convene within thirty days from the date of notification by the Government of the United States. These two members having failed to agree on any or all of the questions submitted within thirty days after they have convened, or having before the expiration of that period notified the Government of Great Britain that they are unable to agree, the full Commission, under the presidency of the Umpire, is to be summoned by the Government of Great Britain, and shall convene within thirty days thereafter to decide all questions upon which the two national members had disagreed. The Commission must deliver its decision, if the two Governments do not agree otherwise, within forty-five days after it has convened. The Umpire shall conduct the procedure in accordance with that provided in Chapter IV of the Convention for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes, of October 18, 1907, except in so far as herein otherwise provided.

6. The form of convocation of the Commission, including the terms of reference of the question at issue, shall be as follows:

"The provision hereinafter fully set forth of an act dated ------, published in the ------ Gazette, has been notified to the Government of Great Britain by the Government of the United States under date of ----, as provided by the agreement entered into on July 20, 1912, pursuant to the award of the Hague Tribunal of September 7, 1910.

"Pursuant to the provisions of that Agreement the Government of Great Britain hereby summons the Permanent Mixed Fishery Commission for (Canada) (Newfoundland) composed of -------- Commissioner for the United States of America, and of ------- Commissioner for (Canada) (Newfoundland) who shall meet at Halifax, Nova Scotia, with power to hold subsequent meetings at such other place or places as they may determine, and render a decision within thirty days as to whether the provision so notified is reasonable and consistent with the Treaty of 1818, as interpreted by the award of the Hague Tribunal of September 7, 1910, and if not, in what respect it is unreasonable and inconsistent therewith.

"Failing an agreement on this question within thirty days, the Commission shall so notify the Government of Great Britain in order that the further action required by that award shall be taken for the decision of the above question.

"The provision is as follows---------------------------------"

7. The unanimous decision of the two national Commissioners, or the majority decision of the Umpire and one Commission, shall be final and binding.

8. Any difference in regard to the regulations specified in Protocol XXX of the arbitration proceedings, which shall not have been disposed of by diplomatic methods, shall be referred not to the Commission of expert specialists mentioned in the award but to the Permanent Mixed Fishery Commissions, to be constituted as hereinbefore provided, in the same manner as a difference in regard to future regulations would be so referred.

Article II.

And whereas the Tribunal of Arbitration in its award decided that—

> In case of bays the 3 marine miles are to be measured from a straight line drawn across the body of water at the place where it ceases to have the configuration and characteristics of a bay. At all other places the 3 marine miles are to be measured following the sinuosities of the coast.

And whereas the Tribunal made certain recommendations for the determination of the limits of the bays enumerated in the award;

Now, therefore, it is agreed that the recommendations, in so far as the same relate to bays contiguous to the territory of the Dominion of Canada, to which Question V of the Special Agreement is applicable, are hereby adopted, to wit:

> In every bay not hereinafter specifically provided for, the limits of exclusion shall be drawn three miles seaward from a straight line across the bay in the part nearest the entrance at the first point where the width does not exceed ten miles.

For the Baie des Chaleurs the limits of exclusion shall be drawn from the line from the Light at Birch Point on Miscou Island to Macquereau Point Light; for the bay of Miramichi, the line from the Light at Point Escuminac to the Light on the eastern point of Tabisintac Gully; for Egmont Bay, in Prince Edward Island, the line from the Light at Cape Egmont to the Light at West Point; and off St. Ann's Bay, in the Province of Nova Scotia, the line from the Light at Point Anconi to the nearest point on the opposite shore of the mainland.

For or near the following bays the limits of exclusion shall be three marine miles seawards from the following lines, namely:

For or near Barrington Bay, in Nova Scotia, the line from the Light on Stoddard Island to the Light on the south point of Cape Sable, thence to the Light at Baccaro Point; at Chedabucto and St. Peter's Bays, the line from Cranberry Island Light to Green Island Light, thence to Point Rouge; for Mira Bay, the line from the Light on the east point of Scatary Island to the northeasterly point of Cape Morien.

Long Island and Bryer Island, on St. Mary's Bay, in Nova Scotia, shall, for the purpose of delimitation, be taken as the coasts of such bays.

It is understood that the award does not cover Hudson Bay.

Article III.

It is further agreed that the delimitation of all or any of the bays on the coast of Newfoundland, whether mentioned in the recommendations or not, does not require consideration at present.

Article IV.

The present Agreement shall be ratified by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and by His Britannic Majesty, and the ratifications shall be exchanged in Washington as soon as practicable.

In faith whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed this Agreement in duplicate and have hereunto affixed their seals.

Done at Washington on the 20th day of July, one thousand nine hundred and twelve.

Chandler P. Anderson [seal.]
Alfred Mitchell Innes [seal.]

And Whereas the said agreement has been duly ratified on both parts, and the ratifications of the two Governments were exchanged in the City of Washington, on the fifteenth day of November, one thousand nine hundred and twelve;

Now, therefore, be it known that I, William Howard Taft, President of the United States of America, have caused the said Agreement to be made public, to the end that the same and every article and clause thereof may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by the United States and the citizens thereof.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this sixteenth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and [SEAL.] twelve, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-seventh.

WRECK OF THE BRITISH VESSEL "TITANIC." CONSULAR DISPOSITION OF EFFECTS OF THE DECEASED. RECOGNITION OF THE SERVICES OF CAPTAIN ROSTRON.[1]

NOTE.—At 10.13 p. m. (New York time) April 14, 1912, the White Star liner Titanic, west bound, with 2,201 persons aboard, struck an iceberg while steaming at from 22 to 24 miles per hour, at latitude North 41.46, longitude West 50.14, near Cape Race, and foundered two hours and forty minutes later.

The President and the Secretary of State received on April 15 and 16 expressions of condolence from the Governments of Argentina, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Cuba, Dominican Republic, France, Great Britain (and the British Colonies), Guatemala, Honduras, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Persia, Peru, Portugal (and Lourenço Marquez), Russia, Salvador, Siam, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, Uruguay and Venezuela.

Certain correspondence ensued relating to the jurisdiction of American consuls in regard to the transportation of bodies, as follows.

No. 139. Halifax, Nova Scotia, April 30, 1912.

Sir: I have the honor to confirm my telegram of April 29th and the Department's reply of same date. In this connection I may say that I made no demand on the authorities here that the effects found on the bodies of American citizens should be turned over to me. Up to the 27th instant it was understood that the parties representing the White Star Company would forward all such effects to their New York office, where the same could be had on proper application, and against this proposition the Provincial authorities offered no remonstrance so far as I have been able to learn, but emphatic protest against this method was offered by numerous relatives and friends.

Finally the matter was taken up by the Provincial authorities and both the Lieutenant Governor and the Premier called and offered to take any action that might result in peace and harmony. A meeting of the authorities was called at the Attorney General's office on Monday to consider the matter, and I was advised to be present. After mature deliberation the Premier advised that the statutes of the Province be complied with by having the Provincial Secretary receive all the effects, inventory the same, and after their use as means of identification by the Coroner they should be turned over to the American Consul General for such disposition as the law might require.

This arrangement, it seemed to me, would be in accordance with section 392 of the regulations and would not conflict with section 389 inasmuch as the authorities were willing to waive all formalities and have it that way.

In the meantime I cabled the Department for instructions. On receipt of reply I advised the authorities here and have taken no further part in the matter.

NOTE.—At the time of the disaster the Cunarder Carpathia was 58 miles distant, the Leyland liner Californian 5 to 10 miles (various estimates), the Canadian Pacific's Mount Temple 49 miles; others at greater distances. The Carpathia was east bound, the two others named west bound. The Senate committee's conclusion, and that of the British court of inquiry, was that the Californian, which made no attempt to give aid, could have rescued those aboard the Titanic (probably all of them, according to the British findings) had it promptly offered such assistance as came, at the earliest possible moment, from the Carpathia, commanded by Captain Arthur Henry Rostron, who saved thirty-three per cent of those on board.

MY DEAR MR. AMBASSADOR: In recognition of the services rendered by Captain Rostron of the steamship Carpathia in saving so many of the passengers and crew of the Titanic, Congress, as you are aware, at its last session provided by Joint Resolution as follows:

> That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to cause to be made and presented to Captain Rostron a suitable gold medal appropriately inscribed, which shall express the high estimation in which Congress holds the services of this officer, to whose promptness and vigilance was due the rescue of three hundred and seventy-four women and children and three hundred and thirty men.

The President has asked me to say to you that he has determined to present this medal to Captain Rostron and has selected Saturday the first of March at three p. m. as the date on which he will make the presentation. I beg that you will bring the President's determination in this matter to the knowledge of Captain Rostron, asking him to make his arrangements to be in Washington at the time above indicated.

Your Majesty's sad news of the death of Mr. Whitelaw Reid has just reached me. Mr. Reid's death is a loss to both countries, for his service as Ambassador was exceptional in the closer friendship that he secured between them through his own personality. His intimate knowledge of both countries, his profound respect and love for England, entirely consistent with the highest loyalty on his part to this country, gave him peculiar influence for good in his great station. I sincerely thank Your Majesty for your message and your expressions of sympathy and respect.

Washington, May 23, 1912.

Sir: The Government of the United States, as you well know, has long been impressed by the necessity for the rehabilitation of the finances of Guatemala as being evidently indispensable to the discharge of its international obligations as it is also essential to the adequate development of its resources and its participation in the commercial progress of Central America.

In view of the assurance of the President of Guatemala, renewed in April last to the American Minister, that it was His Excellency's purpose to conclude arrangements to that end before the adjournment of the present session of the National Assembly, the Government of the United States considers that its sincere friendship toward Guatemala demands that it inform the Government of Guatemala that since January last the Government of Great Britain has assumed a firm attitude regarding a settlement of the claims of the British bondholders, and that unless steps be taken toward such financial reorganization within the period mentioned by the President of Guatemala this Government may find it impossible further to endeavor to dissuade the Government of Great Britain from adopting such means for the enforcement of its claims as under all the circumstances may be justifiable.

Sir: Immediately upon receipt of your excellency's note of the 23d instant relative to the financial affairs of Guatemala I informed my Government thereof by cable, and I can now give you the satisfactory responses telegraphed to me by the President and the Minister for Foreign Affairs.

Permit me, in the first place, to express the high appreciation of the Government of Guatemala for the friendly interest which you have manifested in behalf of the Government of the United States, and which shows anew the noble spirit that it displays toward the peoples of the New World, for which we are sincerely grateful and which in my country we fully reciprocate.

The President charges me to say to your excellency that he firmly intends to lose no time in the matter of economic arrangements with American firms, and has practically concluded his examination of the several propositions submitted. The most acceptable of these requires sixty days for the determination of the changes considered necessary, especially as to the form of redeeming the English loan, and as he can not, on the other hand, constitutionally prolong the sessions of Congress, the Government will call an extraordinary session of the Legislative Assembly, as already announced by the Department of Hacienda and Public Credit, as soon as the said American firms return their respective contracts.

Everything therefore depends exclusively on the activity of the bankers, and the President hopes that what for so many years has not been attained will soon be accomplished by his Administration, realizing in deeds his most constant desire for an arrangement which, as your excellency says, will produce the best results for the development and welfare of Guatemala.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 14, 1912.

The Minister of Guatemala on September 13 handed the Department the following instruction from his Government, dated September 10:

> The British Legation, declaring itself to be in accord with Washington, requests arbitration of English loan matter. You will inform the Department of State that a financial arrangement is on the point of completion, and this British request will greatly embarrass it.

The Minister of Guatemala continuing to insist on the further exercise of the friendly good offices of this Government in order to procure additional delay by the British Government, the Department handed the Minister the following aide-mémoire, dated September 13, 1912:

> In deference to the friendship existing between the United States and Guatemala, and as a further evidence of the good will of the Government of the United States toward that of Guatemala and its earnest desire to serve that Government by assisting it to negotiate through American bankers some satisfactory financial rehabilitation including provision for an equitable settlement of just British and other claims, the Department of State will once more informally address the British Government and urge that it withhold for twenty days its demand for arbitration, in order to enable the Government of Guatemala to effect the settlement as above indicated. But if the Government of Guatemala shall not have completed an arrangement as hereinbefore outlined at the expiration of that delay, the Government of the United States will be obliged to believe that the Government of Guatemala does not really intend to comply with its repeated promises, and under the circumstances will regret to find itself absolutely unwilling to intervene further.
> The Government of the United States in this connection invites the attention of the Government of Guatemala to the latter part of Article 1 of The Hague Convention of 1907 respecting the recovery of contract debts.
>
> If the Government of Guatemala desires that the suggested action be taken by the Government of the United States, it will be necessary that the reply be received on September 16, 1912.

LEGATION OF GUATEMALA,
Washington, September 18, 1912.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Immediately upon the receipt of the aide-mémoire of the 13th instant handed me by your excellency, I transmitted it by cable to my Government, requesting appropriate reply; and on Monday the 15th I called at the State Department to state that, doubtless on account of the Independence festivities in Guatemala, the answer would come immediately thereafter. In fact, this morning I left with Mr. Janes in the Latin-American Division, to be brought to your excellency's knowledge, an extract from the said reply, and have the honor of addressing to your excellency the following communication:

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Guatemala has sent me the following cablegram:

> Guatemala, September 17, 1912.—Méndez, Minister of Guatemala, Washington, D. C.—As a direct consequence of the great importance of the negotiation which we are undertaking to carry out, it is to be feared that notwithstanding our good intentions, it may not be possible to terminate it in the short period indicated to us. Nevertheless we will do everything in human power to arrive at a solution within the period fixed. Inform the State Department of the most hearty appreciation of the Government of Guatemala for the admirable disposition, so cordially expressed, of the American Government to assist us in the financial adjustment; and at the same time state that our Government is giving its most earnest consideration to everything relating to the matter in order to be able to reach a speedy settlement of so important an affair; but that by the very nature of the proposal of adjustment made by the British Minister to the President of the Republic, as representative of the bondholders, such proposition is still under examination, and it is dependent upon the adjustment made with the bankers of the United States of America, to which adjustment the proposition continues subordinated, thus rendering premature and inexplicable any other action in the same sense.[1]
> On the other hand, the Government of Guatemala is glad to acknowledge that arbitration is the most civilized and just manner of settling international difficulties, but as I have already stated to the British Chargé d'Affaires, we see nothing whatsoever in the present case which should be submitted to doubt or discussion, and we have therefore asked that the British Government specify the points which in its judgment might afford a basis for arbitration.
>
> Specifically stated, the Chargé d'Affaires has made proposals to us which are yet to be acted upon, and we are awaiting a reply in order to decide upon appropriate action.
>
> TOLEDO.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

MY DEAR MR. CHARGÉ: I refer to your communication of the 28th ultimo, in which you state that His Majesty's Government has instructed the British Chargé d'Affaires at Guatemala to demand that the claims of the British holders of the bonds of the Government of Guatemala be submitted to arbitration. You say that His Majesty's Government, having exhausted all possible methods of negotiation, has been obliged to make appeal to arbitration to arrive at a settlement. In pursuance of instructions you request that this Government use its good offices in support of the representations of His Majesty's Government to the end that the matter may be submitted to arbitration.

[1] The original: "a cuyo arreglo ella [dicha proposición] permanece subordinada, lo cual hace prematura e inexplicable cualquiera otra acción en el mismo sentido."

In accordance with the desires of your Government I took occasion on the 13th instant to call to the attention of the Guatemalan Government, through its representative in this city, the situation which was rapidly developing because of the long continued refusal of the Government of Guatemala to make any serious effort to comply with its just obligations. The promise which the Guatemalan Government had made last May to enter into some arrangement to place the finances of Guatemala upon a firm economic basis within sixty days was recalled to the Minister, and it was pointed out that the time had arrived when the Government of the United States must inform the Government of Guatemala that it could no longer interpose its counsel to influence Great Britain to desist in demanding the immediate arbitration of just British claims.

Upon the Minister's repeated and insistent request that an additional period of time be granted for the consummation of the general arrangement required, I finally consented informally to communicate with the British Government to the end that the Guatemalan Government might have an additional period of twenty days in order to enable it to effect a settlement which the Department was informed by Señor Méndez was then on the point of being attained.

Copies of the Department's aide-mémoire which was handed Señor Méndez on the 13th instant, and of his reply dated the 18th instant, are transmitted for the information of your Government.

Accordingly I would ask you, my dear Mr. Chargé, to ascertain whether your Government would be willing to accord to the Government of Guatemala the period of twenty days (which it is understood should begin to run on the 17th instant) within which it will be expected that the general financial arrangement demanded by the situation will have been satisfactorily consummated.

British Embassy,
Kineo, Maine, September 29, 1912.

I communicated substance of your letter of September 21st to my Government and in reply I am instructed to point out that while His Majesty's Government has no objections granting of a delay of twenty days from seventeenth instant, they do not desire a settlement of any kind but the restitution to the bondholders of the revenue through [sic] which they are undoubtedly entitled under loan contract.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: With reference to the subject of the Guatemalan debt, as to which I telegraphed to you on September 29th giving you the views of my Government, I must thank you for the action taken by you in accordance with the wishes of my Government, as set forth in your note to Mr. Mitchell Innes of September 21st. I need not say that my Government deeply appreciates any assistance from the Government of the United States looking to the satisfaction of British claims of this nature.

MY DEAR MR. WILSON: I beg to refer to the letter which you addressed to Mr. Mitchell Innes on the 21st ultimo, in which you informed him that the Guatemalan Government had asked for a delay of twenty days, to run from the 17th ultimo, in order to enable them to effect a settlement which, according to the statement of Señor Méndez, was then on the point of being attained, and further with reference to Mr. Mitchell Innes' telegram to you of the 29th ultimo,[1] in which he informed you that His Majesty's Government had no objection to granting the desired delay.

This period of twenty days accorded to the Guatemalan Government at your request has elapsed without any communication having been received from them. In view of the urgency of the matter and of the extreme importance which my Government attach to the immediate restitution of the revenue pledged to the bondholders, I shall be much obliged if you will let me know whether you have received any further communication from the Guatemalan Government, or can give me any indication of their attitude in a matter which has already been too long delayed.

The Legation of Guatemala to the Department of State.

[Memorandum.]

The Legation of Guatemala this morning received from the Guatemalan Government a cablegram, as follows:

> I reply to your cablegram of Tuesday relative to a settlement with the English bondholders and to a solution of the economic arrangement with the American bankers by stating that we are giving consideration to this immediate solution above everything else; but as the bankers modified their proposals almost fundamentally when we asked elucidation on three points we are at present endeavoring to reach an understanding of these modifications only, by cable and mail communication with you and with the bankers' representative in this city. I believe that in order to obtain the most favorable results, you should earnestly solicit the moral support of the Honorable Department of State, as has been proffered us and which it has vouchsafed to exercise in our behalf, restraining the British demands which we regard as premature inasmuch as a solution satisfactory to the bondholders was on the eve of being reached. You may also give assurance that such solution will not be delayed beyond a few days—only the time necessary to permit the official opinion of the bankers to reach here.

Wherefore, most respectfully, and expressing anew the profound gratitude of the Guatemalan Government for the friendly courtesies of the State Department in this as in all other affairs in which it has exercised a concilatory and amiable mediation, the Legation of Guatemala urges that the Department of State will not find it inexpedient to kindly accede to the wishes expressed in the foregoing cablegram of the Government of Guatemala in the belief that this powerful aid will greatly facilitate an adjustment with the British bondholders within a few days through a general adjustment of Guatemalan finances by means of a contract with the American bankers.

In so doing the Legation has the honor to again offer its respectful saluations to the Honorable Department of State.

Department of State,
Washington, October 29, 1912.

My dear Mr. Ambassador: I write to acknowledge your letter of the 19th, received at the Department during my absence from the city, in which you inquire whether any further communication has been received by the Department from the Guatemalan Government relative to the proposed settlement of its foreign financial obligations or indicating its attitude in the matter.

As officials of the Latin-American Division had the pleasure of an interview with Mr. Kerr on the 26th instant and were thus able, I trust, to explain the present status of the matter, permit me to add that we now await with interest an expression of the opinion of your Government as to the proposed settlement with American bankers who, as the Department learned by telephone yesterday, are again conferring with the Minister of Guatemala in this country.

File No. 814.51/192.

The British Ambassador to the Secretary of State.

BRITISH EMBASSY,
Washington, November 13, 1912.

SIR: Some days ago Mr. Kerr of this Embassy called at the State Department for the purpose of putting unofficially before the State Department the views of His Majesty's Government with reference to the persistent procrastination of the Guatemalan Government in the matter of the security pledged to the bondholders.

Your note of September 25th[1] to the British Chargé d'Affaires had encouraged His Majesty's Government to hope that the United States Government would now give their active support to the representations made on behalf of the bondholders that the security pledged to them should be restored, and a situation now grown intolerable should be once for all ended.

It was, therefore, with a feeling of disappointment that His Majesty's Government learnt that, in reply to the request for support which Mr. Kerr was instructed to make, a proposal was made that His Majesty's Government should suspend action for an unlimited period to permit the Guatemalan Government to negotiate a general settlement with a group of American bankers.

His Majesty's Government have carefully considered this proposal and regret that it does not appear to them to offer a fair prospect of a satisfactory solution of the present difficulty. This is not the first time that the Guatemalan Government have stated that they were on the point of coming to an agreement with American financiers; and though nothing came of the negotiations, it was subsequently learnt that the terms which it was proposed to put before the British bondholders were most unfair.

Recent experience as regards attempts to negotiate general settlements in cases similar to the present have given no grounds for hoping that any such endeavour in this instance would lead to an early settlement on terms which would be satisfactory to British bondholders, and I am instructed by my Government to inform you that they must continue to press for the restitution to the bondholders of the security solely pledged to them or for arbitration if the Guatemalan Government continues to refuse to comply with this reasonable demand.

His Majesty's Government therefore earnestly hope that the United States Government will reconsider the question and will afford them their hearty and immediate co-operation.

File No. 814.51/196.

The Secretary of State to the American Ambassador to Great Britain.

Department of State,
Washington, December 6, 1912.

Sir: The Department encloses herewith for your careful study a copy of a signed memorandum regarding the financial situation of Guatemala, which was delivered to the British Ambassador on December 3rd.

The Department is most anxious that the program proposed therein should be accepted by the British Government. You are accordingly instructed to avail of the first opportunity to explain the matter to Sir Edward Grey. In so doing you should emphasize the following points:

First. The fact that we have to deal with a general situation involving to a great extent the policy of this Government towards a portion of the world where the influence of the United States must naturally be pre-eminent.

Secondly. The fact that the restitution of the coffee revenues offers no guarantee of permanency. The revenues might again be diverted and a situation similar to the present one which we wish definitely to cure would then result.

Thirdly. The security of the new bonds is made doubly effective by the mode of collecting the customs revenues.

Fourthly. The fact that the American bankers have endeavored to consult the bondholders as to what terms they would find satisfactory before concluding negotiations with Guatemala.

And finally, the importance of cooperation between Great Britain and the United States, which cooperation is arranged for by the definite limitations contained in the memorandum as to the time in which the American plan may be completed.

The British Government may feel inclined to press the bankers for even more favorable terms for the bondholders, arguing that the back interest on the debt amounts to almost as much as the principal thereof. When the British Embassy raised that point at the Department it was pointed out that no matter what steps might be taken there seemed no way for the bondholders to recover the back interest, whereas the carrying out of the American plan should definitely assure to the bondholders the payment of the future interest.

When the American bankers telegraphed to the Secretary of the Council of Foreign Bondholders some weeks ago the only reply they received was to the effect that as the matter had been placed in the hands of the British Foreign Office the Council could entertain no outside proposals.

I am [etc.]

P. C. Knox.

The Secretary of State to the British Ambassador.

[Inclosure.—Memorandum.]

While the Government of the United States recognizes that the grievances of the British bondholders against the Government of Guatemala are just, it feels that the interests of the bondholders, of Guatemala, and of the United States, will be best served not by the restitution of the coffee revenues to the service of the debt but by the early conclusion of the loan negotiations into which reputable American bankers have entered with the Government of Guatemala.

The present situation is unsatisfactory for both Great Britain and the United States, and while the Federal Government desires to aid the Government of Great Britain to safeguard the interests of the British bondholders, it wishes to do so in a manner promising the permanent satisfaction of the bondholders and calculated to effect a definite cure of a troublesome situation to the benefit of all the parties concerned, namely the bondholders, the large foreign commercial interests, the people of Guatemala and the interests of the United States rather than to the benefit of the bondholders alone. In the light of past experience it is felt that merely to secure the restoration of the revenues in question would offer no guaranties of permanency or the non-recurrence of the present situation, which has arisen through a disregard on the part of Guatemala of pledges exactly similar to those which the Government of Great Britain now seeks to have renewed. If the Government of the United States is asked to assist the creditors of Central American states, it feels that they should be willing to consider favorably whatever equitable assistance it is most convenient for the United States to render them.

The Federal Government, however, must consider not only the interests of the foreign bondholders but also the general situation which involves, in addition to the bondholders, its own important interests and its convenience, as well as the future of Guatemala and her people. As the Embassy was informally advised through Mr. Kerr, this Government takes the keenest interest in the consummation of a loan involving a broad plan for the financial rehabilitation of Guatemala, provided it equitably disposes of the British claims now being pressed upon the Government of Guatemala and is duly considerate of American and other pending claims. Mr. Kerr was also informed that the Department of State would suggest to the American bankers that they immediately cable their representatives at London to lay before the British interests concerned the outline of their plan so far as it concerns those interests and to seek a tentative agreement whereby those interests will be satisfied.

This the American bankers at once did, thus creating a situation very different from that described in the British Embassy's note of November 13th as having occurred in the past, wherein it is stated that after previous negotiations had failed, it had been subsequently learned that the terms which it was proposed to lay before the British bondholders were most unfair. The terms now offered by the bankers to the bondholders appear to the Government of the United States to be not only reasonable but more advantageous to the bondholders than the restitution of the coffee revenues would be.

According to the information of the Federal Government, the American bankers have offered the bondholders at par of their present holdings new 4% bonds to an amount equal to the principal of the old debt; the new bonds to be a part of a larger issue in connection with the refunding of the entire debt of the country and, through the establishment of a bank, replacing the present fluctuating and unsecured paper currency by one on a stable metallic basis. The new bonds would be secured by all the customs revenues. The customs would be administered by an agent to be named by the bankers, the duties being payable only in customs certificates which the agency alone may issue. These provisions of the proposed arrangement would seem to guarantee the regular payment of the interest on the new bonds and to insure the maintenance of their market value at a corresponding level, as the customs revenues are thus payable directly to the banker's agent and not merely pledged.

The Federal Government is convinced that the carrying out of such a comprehensive plan for the financial rehabilitation of Guatemala would materially benefit the bondholders and that it would be of the greatest advantage to Guatemala as well as to British and general commercial interests in that republic. In this view it would be the more surprising and regrettable if the apparently uncompromising attitude of the British Government, which is attributed to discouragement due to the repeated past delays on the part of Guatemala, should be definitely maintained.

The Government of the United States feels that the prospects for the early consummation of the loan would be excellent if the Government of Great Britain would cooperate for a short time with the United States in its present attempt to rehabilitate the finances of Guatemala. The bankers have stated that they prefer not to continue their negotiations with Guatemala until they have reached an agreement as to the terms that would be satisfactory to the British bondholders; and it is confidently believed that if the British Foreign Office would expedite an agreement between the American bankers and the British bondholders as to the terms to be accorded the holders of the present bonds, the two Governments would then be in a position effectively to work together. The Federal Government would, after the conclusion of such an agreement, be glad to use its best efforts to cause the loan agreement to be signed by the Government of Guatemala within a reasonable time thereafter, say fifteen days, and to be ratified within thirty days after signature, provided that the National Assembly should be in session during this period, and, if not, then within thirty days after the date for the opening of the next regular session.

If, under the circumstances above outlined, the Government of the United States should not secure that result within such period it would then be prepared at once to support the demand of Great Britain for the restitution by Guatemala of the coffee revenues to the service of the foreign debt.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

SIR: The Department encloses for your confidential information a copy of a signed memorandum delivered to the British Ambassador on December 3, 1912, on the subject of the Guatemalan financial situation. A copy of the British Embassy's note of November 13, upon which the memorandum is based, is also enclosed.

The Department is now informed by the Guatemalan Minister that Guatemala and the bankers are now in accord as to the terms of the loan contract; that the contract will be ready for transmission to Guatemala by December 21st; and that President Estrada Cabrera intends to call a special session of the Assembly for its consideration.

Should such a course appear necessary or advisable at a later date the Department will instruct you by telegraph to make the contents of the memorandum known to the Government of Guatemala.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: A copy of your memorandum of the 2nd[1] December was duly communicated to the Foreign Office, and has received their consideration, and I am now instructed by Sir Edward Grey to inform you that the question of the conversion of the Guatemalan bonds is one entirely apart from the question with which the Foreign Office are at present dealing, and is in the opinion of His Majesty's Government a matter for the private consideration of the bondholders.

His Majesty's Government have not been asked to assist in any scheme of conversion, but have been asked for their support in obtaining the restitution of the rights to which the bondholders are entitled by contract and which have been unjustly withheld since the year 1899.

In spite of representations to the Guatemalan Government, the latter have, in a way the injustice of which has been admitted by the United States Government, refused to comply with the request made to them, and His Majesty's Government, in their wish that a method to which no objection can be taken should be adopted, have now proposed that the matter should be settled by arbitration, and what is now asked of the United States Government is that they should lend their diplomatic assistance in obtaining from the Guatemalan Government a compliance with this obviously moderate demand.

His Majesty's Government do not doubt that the bondholders will, once their rights have been restored to them, be willing to entertain proposals for the conversion of the bonds, should it appear to be to their interest to do so.

His Majesty's Government have continued to hope that the United States Government, recognising the reasonableness of the attitude taken up by His Majesty's Government, would be willing to use their friendly offices with the Guatemalan Government to obtain their compliance, and Sir Edward Grey still trusts that this assistance of the United States Government will be given, as His Majesty's Government desire to avoid the necessity of considering what other measures can be resorted to for the purpose of inducing the Guatemalan Government to comply with their request.

LEGATION OF GUATEMALA,
Washington, February 12, 1912.

MR. SECRETARY: This Legation has been given genuine delight in reading the notice published by the press about the visit of his excellency Mr. Philander C. Knox, Secretary of State of the United States, to Central America, and immediately transmitted by cable to the Government of Guatemala.

The presence of the eminent Chief of the American Department of State among us will without a doubt be of incalculable benefit, as it will be another demonstration of the sincere, frank and loyal friendship that the great Republic happily cultivates with my country; and in appreciating and acknowledging it I take pleasure in assuring your excellency that Mr. Knox and the distinguished persons who accompany him will find in Guatemala a reception marked by all the sympathy and affectionate respect that their high merits demand.

In the name of my Government I have the honor to express our deep appreciation of this act of most delicate courtesy and of the praiseworthy efforts of the American Government to bring into closer relations the peoples of the continent.

This wise policy—the logical consequence of the solidarity of the American countries—upheld as it is by the United States in the warmth of brotherly sentiments, will undoubtedly be productive of the best results tributary to the cohesion of all American interests.

No country is more desirous than mine to obtain these great results in ever growing numbers, and it will always be glad to contribute, as it has always done, to the more perfect harmony of our peoples, and for that reason witnesses with true pleasure and boundless satisfaction any act which, like his excellency's visit, makes for the realization of those generous aspirations.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
No. 231.] Guatemala, April 8, 1912.

SIR: I have the honor to make the following report, for the records of the Department, of your recent official visit to this country.

Previous to your arrival you were declared by presidential decree to be a "guest of honor of the nation". This action was taken with a view to the honor implied and also from the fact that according to the official etiquette of the country a visiting Minister for Foreign Affairs is entitled only to the same treatment as a Minister Plenipotentiary. * * *

[1] The identic letter printed under Panama: "Visit of the Secretary of State to the Republics of Central America and the Caribbean Sea, p. 1240.

Your arrival had been expected for the 18th or 19th of March whereas it took place on the 14th, thereby somewhat hurrying the preparations. * * *

At 6 P. M. you were received in solemn audience by the President, all the higher officials of State being present. A copy of your address to the President I have the honor to enclose herewith, together with a copy accompanied by translation, of the President's reply. After the exchange of these speeches you held a few minutes conversation with the President before retiring. * * *

At 8 o'clock the banquent given in your honor in the name of the Government by the Minister for Foreign Affairs took place at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. A copy, with translation, of the Minister's speech together with a copy of your reply, I beg leave to enclose herewith. * * *

On March 15 after a private luncheon you proceeded shortly after 4 o'clock in the afternoon to the Legislative Palace where you were received in solemn session by the Legislature. A copy, with translation, of the address of the President of the Legislative Power, together with a copy of your reply, I beg leave to transmit herewith.

Upon the termination of this ceremony the faculty of law of the University of Guatemala conferred upon you, in an adjoining room, the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws of the university. * * *

In the evening you attended the farewell banquet given in your honor by the President of the Republic, at which some 90 to 100 persons were present. A copy, with translation, of the President's address, together with a copy of your reply is appended to this despatch.

On March 17 at 9 a. m. you left the city by special train, preceded by a pilot train, for Puerto Barrios, stopping at Quirigua for one hour to inspect the ancient ruins of Maya civilization at that place and being afforded a view of an unsually good example of tropical Central-American forest. A few minutes after reaching Puerto Barrios you embarked upon the U. S. S. Washington and proceeded to Venezuela. * * *

Speech of Mr. Knox upon his reception by the President of Guatemala, March 14, 1912.

Mr. President: I received on the quarter-deck of the Maryland this morning the courteous message of welcome which you sent to me by the distinguished gentlemen whom I had then the honor to meet. From that moment to the present nothing but expressions and evidences of the most cordial and general hospitality have met my ear and my eye upon every side. I construe this to indicate, Mr. President, that you and your Government and your people accept in its true meaning the purpose of the President and people of the United States in sending me to your country as a messenger of friendliness and good will. The intimate relations and friendship that have heretofore happily existed between our two countries must necessarily grow closer and stronger as Pan-American civilization develops, and they will be much accelerated by the completion of the great commercial highway at Panama, which will in a peculiar sense draw the republics of this hemisphere closer together. I beg you to accept my thanks, the thanks of my party, and, through us, of the people and President of the United States for this dignified and courteous reception, and to assure you that I am encouraged to believe that our short stay among you will be most pleasant and profitable to us, and, I trust, likewise conducive to the closer union and better understanding between the peoples of the two Republics.

Reply of the President of Guatemala.

[Translation.]

Mr. Secretary of State: The cordial words I have just heard from your excellency's lips fill me with the liveliest satisfaction, since they express your appreciation of the sincere demonstrations of good will and affection which my Government, in the name of the people of Guatemala, has offered to you upon your arrival in this country, which is enjoying in these moments the great honor of being visited by the representative of a nation with which my country happily cultivates such good and friendly relations.

As the cradle and champion of American freedom, as the flowing fount of human progress and the potent arm of labor, the American Union merits the respect and esteem of every nation and the affection of those who can interpret the sentiments with which its statesmen and thinkers are inspired. From day to day it unfailingly makes new conquests in every branch of human activity. Its influence is bringing about closer relations between the nations of the continent, and the perfect harmony which has always characterized its relations with Guatemala justifies the enthusiasm with which the Government of this Republic welcomes your excellency as a messenger of concord and affection from the Government of the United States to the nations surrounding the Panama Canal, which, upon the completion of this gigantic work, will be more intimately linked with the great Republic of the north by new ties of commerce and culture.

In wishing your excellency and the distinguished persons who accompany you on your visit the most pleasant stay among us, I beg that you please give to His Excellency the President of the United States the thanks of the people and the Government of Guatemala for the honor conferred upon them by the visit of His Excellency the Secretary of State of that nation, and present to him my wishes for his personal happiness and the welfare and prosperity of the American people.

Speech of Señor Don Luis Toledo Herrarte, Minister for Foreign Affairs, at a banquet given in honor of Mr. Knox at Guatemala City, March 14, 1912.

[Translation.]

Gentlemen: The just rejoicing of the people and the Government of Guatemala in welcoming to their midst his excellency the Secretary of State of the United States is but the natural consequence of the brotherly love inspired by the powerful Republic of the north which for more than a century has been the paladin of American freedom, and constitutes a testimony of the great value we attach to the visit of so eminent a continental personality. Under such happy circumstances Guatemala can not forget the aid which her nascent sovereignty encountered a hundred years ago in the United States, nor the good and loyal friendship she has fostered for it during all her independent life and which is so brilliantly confirmed on the present occasion.

The American Union has won for itself the esteem and admiration of all the civilized world for its progress, which, marked with letters of gold in the world's history, demonstrates clearly the possibilities of the combination of liberty and labor. It is an exemplar in modern ages to the younger nations and worthy of study by even the older countries, which in things politic, as shown in the French Revolution, can adopt the principles of the assembly of Philadelphia and in industry, commerce, and science apply to their respective needs the product of the marvelous progress realized by this wonderful country in every branch of human activity.

A cyclopean work, as though the manifold ones already accomplished were not enough, will soon proclaim, with the opening of the Panama Canal, the greatness and the power of American genius. Thanks to the efforts of man, the obstacles placed by nature between the two great seas of the world will be demolished for the benefit of the peoples of both hemispheres and following this stupendous conquest of labor the activities of the universe will revolve as though around the axis and center of the globe, and the nations on each side will see the rapid development of their resources and of the numberless elements of life which nature so prodigally has lavished upon them.

In this proximate evolution a special place belongs to Guatemala, included, as it is, in the continental zone, where the influence of the Panama Canal will most be felt, and thus once more will American initiative and effort be the promoters of the growth of the industry and commerce of our Republic.

The trade relations of Guatemala with the United States have grown to such proportions, with the facilities offered by railroads and steamship lines, that during the last few years there is no nation with which our country has maintained more active commerce or a more valuable interchange of the products of the soil and industry.

The interest of American merchants and manufacturers in our Republic becomes keener every day, finding new outlets and new practical manifestations, thus giving rise to the most intimate and perfect relationship, which in this way effectively makes for a more binding intimacy, which both countries by mutual effort wish to bring about, since they happily are united by identic sentiments of cordiality and good understanding.

Men of peace and good will direct the Governments of the nations whose flags, now intertwined, symbolize their amicable intercourse, and a messenger of peace and cordial feeling is the illustrious statesman who honors us with his presence in this country, and whom the Government of Guatemala receives and welcomes with the heartiness and sympathy which is due the free American people and to the Government which so skillfully guides its destinies.

Gentlemen, while offering this homage in the name of the Government of the Republic to his excellency the Secretary of State of the United States and the distinguished persons of his party who accompany him, I ask you to drink with me to the uninterrupted greatness of the United States, to the personal happiness of its worthy President, and to the welfare of its eminent representative, who has come to make so eloquent a public demonstration of the friendship of the American people and Government for the people and Government of Guatemala.

Reply of Mr. Knox.

Mr. President and Mr. Minister: You may have thought it strange that, after the courteous toast of the Minister for Foreign Affairs, I did not rise during the playing of your national air. I wanted to arise alone and thus distinctively and by word of mouth to pay my respects to the beautiful strains of your noble national hymn. One can not travel long in this genial clime without exhausting his vocabulary of grateful expressions and thanks. I have much to be thankful for, much to be grateful for, since I came to Central America. From Panama, the most southern of the Isthmian republics, through Costa Rica, Nicaragua, at Honduras, Salvador, and finally here, where I am to say good-by in this beautiful country of Guatemala, I have received nothing but sympathetic kindness; and perhaps, Mr. Minister, one of the things I should be most thankful for is that when I was landed in your beautiful country in a basket in a not particularly dignified manner, when my legs were reaching for something firm upon which I might rest, and I was embarrassed by my own awkwardness, my eyes lighted upon your friendly countenance and that of your charming wife, whose acquaintance I had enjoyed in Washington, and I at once felt quite at home. My journey to this city to-day has been one of continuous delight. Your country surprises me with its beauty and its friendliness. The hospitality of your people cheered me. I was a stranger in a strange land, and nothing to a stranger in a strange land is so encouraging as welcome smiles from those who meet you along the highway. Not only did the adult population of your country greet us cordially, but what touched me most was the little children in their tidy costumes, whose countenances beamed with a genuine welcome, for there is no feigned hospitality in the countenance of the children; and here, Mr. President and Mr. Minister, permit me to say that in the education of your children you are laying an unperishable foundation for institutions of liberty. You are building for Guatemala a foundation upon which tyranny and oppression and injustice can never rest.

Mr. Minister, you spoke of the Convention at Philadelphia, referring, of course, to the Constitutional Convention, which constructed that great piece of statesmanship, the Constitution of the United States, which any American can say proudly and not immodestly is probably the greatest political instrument that has ever been constructed by man. The authors of our Constitution were not solving the problems of North America alone; they were solving the problems of the Western Hemisphere. To-day nearly one hundred and three score millions of people residing upon the Western Hemisphere (and that represents 90 per cent of its entire population) are engaged in trying to perfect the problem of popular government, and the men who worked out the first Constitution that has withstood the shocks of almost one hundred and twenty-five years were not only working out our problem, but they were working out yours. It was a great thing for the world that for fifty years prior to the Convention in Philadelphia, in the colonies of North America, the best talent of that day was given to the study of the principles of government. The works of the great writers upon political science of that epoch had been closely studied for fifty years prior to the American Revolution with a diligence and purpose unparalleled in any other country or at any other time. To illustrate: It has been said on the best authority that important political writings found a larger sale and closer perusal in the colonies of North America than they found in any part of Europe. You of Latin America have received, and you will continue to receive, the benefits of those studies and our experiment. You were not long behind us in demanding self-government, and when the time came when you determined to strike for freedom and to follow the example of your northern brothers we were instantaneous in our sympathetic recognition of your claims. We sustained you by recognition when the great powers of the world looked askance upon the American system of government, whose merits they now so frankly concede. We stood by you in your infancy; we have endeavored to encourage you in your rapidly maturing growth; and I am here in your country to-night to say to you, not only upon my own responsibility but speaking for the President of the United States and for the people of the United States, that we have but one thought for all of the sister republics of America, and that is that we want you to prosper, we want you to grow, we want you to be stronger, we want you to be always peaceful. That is the message that I bear to Guatemala to-night; that is the sentiment which is indorsed by the best elements of my country; and I want to assure the people of Guatemala, and I want to assure you, Mr. President, that in your efforts for your people, in your sincere endeavors to develop your country, in your desire to expand your friendship and to form closer and more binding ties with other nations of the world, Guatemala has the sympathy, as it will always have, where possible, the cooperation, of the United States.

Speech of Señor Don Arturo Ubico, President of the Legislative Assembly, to Mr. Knox on his reception by that body at Guatemala City, March 15, 1912.

[Translation.]

Honorable Mr. Secretary: It is for me a great honor and a great pleasure to present, in the name of the Legislative Assembly of the Republic, our most cordial salutation to His Excellency the Secretary of State of the United States of America and welcome him to the midst of this representative body of the nation, thanking him at the same time for the courteous deference with which he has accepted the distinction accorded in his honor, the only one of the kind in the annals of our parliamentary history, and which is due not only to the high personal endowments of so honorable a guest, but also because of his labors in favor of all America, and because he is now representing in this country the American people, who have given us proof of their frank and loyal friendship, and the Government of that illustrious nation, which has always treated us with the most intense and fraternal interest.

As nature has placed the republic of the United States at the head of the continent, so the intelligence of its sons and their constant endeavor have placed it at the head of the civilization of America, and, ipso facto, it is morally bound before the world to secure the peace, the union, and concord of all the American nations as a fundamental basis for the development of their culture and their prosperity and as an indispensable preparation to carrying out satisfactorially the high ends and important destinies which the futures holds in store for them.

Some years ago prominent men of America, inspired with the ideals of Monroe, strengthened still more the basis of an essentially Pan-American policy; and to-day we see this policy converted into a reality and raised to the category of a truly official institution, which has already given excellent results in the economic order of Latin America.

Moreover, a stupendous event of an interest absolutely universal, soon to occur—the interoceanic canal across the Isthmus—would in itself justify, without regard to the wonderful works of civilization the world already owes to the United States, special manifestations of the good will and the gratitude of the nations of the Caribbean Sea, which are so especially benefited by that gigantic work.

From this is to be deduced that, although separated from the United States by ethnological influences, that country is beloved and respected by us, and our geographical position in the center of the Western Hemisphere binds us by ties that are strong and firm and of great practical importance in the strenuous life of modern intercourse; and well-understood patriotism advises us, therefore, that, without forgetting our firm friendship for other nations, we should nevertheless always maintain with the United States a policy of preferential and especial harmony, good understanding, and intimate cordiality, founded, quite naturally, on reciprocal justice and loyal frankness; and I ask your excellency, in the name of the people of this Republic, please so to inform the Government and people of North America, and that you also deign to receive the sincere wishes we extend for their welfare and for the personal happiness of your excellency.

Reply of Mr. Knox.

Permit me, Mr. President, to acknowledge and to thank you for the unprecedented honor the National Assembly of Guatemala has accorded me in receiving me in its midst to-day, thereby furnishing an additional evidence of the high regard in which the people and Government of Guatemala hold my country and its people.

Your felicitous reference to the great doctrine announced by President Monroe nearly a hundred years ago, which has since that time been solicitously, scrupulously, and unswervingly adhered to by the Government of the United States, has been a source of great satisfaction to me, and leads me, on passing through the last Central American Republic, to reiterate what I said on landing at Panama, and that is that "in my judgment the Monroe Doctrine will reach the acme of its beneficence when it is regarded by the people of the United States as a reason why we should constantly respond to the needs of those of our Latin-American neighbors who may find necessity for our assistance."

Guatemala is to be highly congratulated because of her appreciation of the fundamental fact that in many things the highest interests of the State can be advanced by friendly coordination with other sovereign states in relation to matters of international common concern. Guatemala's friendly participation in the centennial celebration of her neighboring republics and highly valuable participation in the conferences and congresses dealing with matters affecting Pan-American interests and her prompt ratification of the conventions providing for the unification of currency, weights, and measures, and the improvement of the consular service of Central America, are evidences of high international purposes and show an appreciative realization of the fact that intelligent international cooperation tends to advance the brotherhood of nations. This has been one of the high purposes and most consistent policies of the United States, and we have endeavored in such matters to act in concert with the other powers and to recognize the same high duty. Not only does such international cooperation advance civilization and improve the relations between States, but, as I have heretofore ventured to observe, will hasten the time, which I sincerely believe the future holds in store, when war shall cease; when the nations of the world shall realize a federation as real and vital as that now subsisting between the component parts of a single state; when the deliberate international conjunction of the strong shall universally help the weak; and when the corporate righteousness of the world shall destroy the habitations of injustice still lingering in the dark places of the earth.

Those ends so much to be desired, and so beneficial to humanity, are accelerated by the recognition of national interdependence and such international coefficiency as the statesmen of your country have encouraged in the matters to which I have alluded.

Speech of Señor Licenciado Don Manuel Cabral, Dean of the University of Guatemala, when conferring a degree upon Mr. Knox, March 15, 1912.

[Translation.]

Your Excellency: The significant fact of having among its members the most eminent personalities in the divers branches of human wisdom has ever been an honor and a glory to scientific and literary institutions, and because of this the most learned universities of Europe and America have been proud to have inscribed in their registers the most illustrious of the wise men of the world. This is a pride all the more legitimate, inasmuch as science and letters do not recognize frontiers and are the bonds which unite in fraternal intellectuality the minds which, by their culture, nobly represent their respective countries.

To-day one of the most notable figures of the great American Nation arrives upon Guatemalan soil, and this institution of learning, heir of our ancient and glorious university, the true alma mater of Central America, feels immense satisfaction and considers the inscription of the enlightened name of your excellency in the catalogue of the persons already there an event of inestimable value, and I have the honor to clothe you with the highest of our academic titles, with the grade of Doctor of Laws of the Facultad de Guatemala. At the same time this center of science wishes to tender you its homage of sympathy, respect, and admiration for the great qualities which adorn you, and which make you one of the most distinguished citizens of the most populous of democracies and an illustrious lawyer who, at home and abroad, adds so much brilliancy to the American forum.

Guatemala and the United States, your excellency, have always conserved the most perfect friendship. Never has even the lightest cloud arisen to darken the clear horizon of our countries, and these relations of cordial amity have been strengthened of late, thanks to the frequency of our intercourse, to the better understanding of our peoples, to greater mutual intimacy owing to their common ideas and aspirations, to the daily increasing commerce, and to the wisdom and patriotism of our respective Governments, who, by the rectitude of their acts and the faithful performance of their international duties, have succeeded in maintaining between the two peoples an unbroken peace, which is the fountain of all happiness and all progress.

The Facultad de Derecho y Notariado, an important organism of the State, charged with arousing and fomenting among its citizens the love of institutions and of the study of law, which is the principal base of national felicity, is not, nor can it be, unconscious of this good understanding, and now that one of the most illustrious citizens of the great land of Washington and Lincoln honors our country with his visit it takes the keenest pleasure in proffering him this humble evidence of its affection and its respectful appreciation.

May your excellency deign to favor it with your acceptance as a souvenir of your visit to Guatemala. We, in our turn, shall ever guard your name with respectful affection among the members of our profession, and the day in which you honored us by permitting us to inscribe your name prominently in our register will be an imperishable memory.

Reply of Mr. Knox.

GENTLEMEN OF THE FACULTY: The unprecedented act of this ancient seat of learning in conferring upon me the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws, with notarial powers, is an honor of which I am indeed proud. If, as I understand my informants, at no time and to no one has the university extended so marked an evidence of its good will, it is a distinction of such an unique character that while I feel unworthy of receiving it I am sure I shall always bear it in grateful remembrance.

The law was my first love, and, although she has always been termed a "jealous mistress," yet, after a quarter century of devotion, I was lured away by the blandishments of political life, but I am not without hope that time holds for me the good fortune of a return to the profession.

Let me again express to you, gentlemen of the Faculty of the National University of Guatemala, my gratitude and my thanks.

[Inclosure 8.]

Speech of His Excellency Don Manuel Estrada Cabrera, President of Guatemala, at a banquet given by him to Mr. Knox, March 16, 1912.

[From Diario de Centro America of March 19, 1912.—Translation.]

It was indeed a happy thought of His Excellency the President of the United States of America to intrust to his worthy Secretary of State the mission of frank and loyal friendship which confers upon us, in addition to the honor of having him among us, the truly singular pleasure and satisfaction derived from the fact that one of the most eminent citizens of the New World bears to Guatemala a message of fraternity and good will from the American people.

The relations of intimate sympathy and mutual attraction which have always been carefully cultivated by both peoples and Governments tend each day to produce most flattering results through a reciprocal understanding in official matters, through the better acquaintance of their respective citizens with each other, and through the development of commerce, which not only consists in an interchange of products of the soil and industry but which also disseminates ideas of civilization and progress.

I value and take pleasure in the presence of his excellency Mr. Knox in this country to the fullest extent and he can not do otherwise than inspire my utmost appreciation of it. It constitutes a pledge of greater intimacy—which has always been my prayer, and I am happy to see it realized—between Guatemala and the United States, as the immediate result of geographic situation, of historical conditions, and of hopes for the future, which, combined, constitute a collection of facts and principles which controls the evolution of the twenty-one sister republics of the Western Hemisphere.

While experiencing the extreme pleasure of the moment, I am especially pleased to perform the grateful duty of expressing my sincere thanks to His Excellency Mr. Knox for his delicate courtesy in that he is accompanied by persons dearest to the sentiment of a highly cultured gentleman; and may I be permitted to render the homage of my respectful esteem to the distinguished Mrs. Knox, who, together with her estimable children, honors us by participation in the demonstrations which Guatemala is so happy to offer to the great Republic through its eminent representative.

It gives me honor and pleasure to drink to the ever-increasing prosperity of the United States of America, to the personal felicity of His Excellency President Taft, and to that of his eminent Secretary of State and Mrs. Knox.

[Inclosure 9.]

Reply of Mr. Knox.

MR. PRESIDENT, LADIES, AND GENTLEMEN: Permit me, in my own behalf and in the name of my countrymen, to thank you for the cordial welcome and bountiful hospitality you have extended to me and to my family.

Beginning for the fourth time the journey from ocean to ocean in Central America, it is with a feeling of regret that I realize that the brevity of the time at my disposal does not permit me to travel more extensively through these countries, to enjoy the pleasures of the wonderful scenery which so beautifully reflects the magic touch of the lavish hand of nature, and to gain the educational advantages which observation and friendly communication with the people so abundantly afford.

Guatemala, in its position of close proximity to the United States, where there is ever ready an eager market for its products, and with its dense population, occupies, indeed, an enviable position among the Central American nations. This position will be rendered increasingly desirable as time goes on and the development of your country's enormous possibilities is accomplished. And, Mr. President, I may here remark, without, I am sure, indulging any view not equally shared by yourself, that the continuous development and permanent advancement of the Republic depend on its stable economic conditions as well as upon its domestic content and consequent repose. The unvarying friendship of the Government of the United States for republican institutions in this hemisphere and its desire to see them conserved free from interference are too well known and understood to need words of reassurance from me. From the very inception of, and even before the independence of, the Latin-American nations the attitude of the American Government, which later was unmistakably announced by President Monroe, was well known and it continues undiminished to the present day.

In Central America the United States has a special interest not only because of the proximity of the five republics to the great commercial highway now nearing completion in Panama, but also because of its moral obligations under the Washington conventions. The maintenance of peace and stable conditions in these republics is a matter of first importance to my Government. The faithful observance of these conventions will, in the opinion of my Government, go far toward the elimination of the turmoil that has hitherto shaken the very foundations of some of the less fortunate and less tranquil countries.

It is the sincere and candid desire of the United States to maintain and advance to an even higher degree frank and cordial relations with all the republics in this hemisphere, and to that end the President directed my present mission that, by personal contact, I might become better acquainted with the men who direct the destinies of these states, in order thereby to promote better understanding and mutually advantageous relations. That the friendship of my Government toward these states is frank and sincere needs no demonstration other than a consideration of the record of the past, and no words from me can half so eloquently deal with the situation or manifest the true attitude of my Government as can its acts toward its sister republics. The United States, unfortunately, has many times been misrepresented in the past by those unscrupulous persons who, through an endeavor to promote their own gain, falsely represent the sentiments of the American people with regard to this or that nation of Central America.

It is a matter for rejoicing to everyone having faith in the great destinies of this continent to observe that in this Republic a large stretch of steel way which will at some time, in the not far distant future, connect the capitals of all the sister states of this continent with each other has been completed. The completion of the Central American link will be the first step in the grand project of the three Americas' trunk line from New York to Buenos Aires. With the proximate inauguration of the Guatemalan section of this system there will be through railway connection from New York to Guatemala City.

The effect of a through trunk line of railroad on the countries of Central America would be to sow the prolific seed of communication in rich districts and the consequent development of mutual commerce and the advantageous exploitation of boundless native resources. To this great central artery the transverse lines from the Atlantic to the Pacific, acting as feeders, would contribute to swell the international traffic.

In conclusion, Mr. President, allow me to indulge the hope that the relations between our respective countries may become increasingly cordial and close, to the mutual benefit of both, and for your warm welcome and your cordial and graceful hospitality and entertainment to sincerely thank you.

HAITI.

MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT, JEAN JACQUES LECONTE, TO THE CONGRESS, APRIL 1, 1912. REPORT OF THE MINISTER FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

File No. 838.032/8.

The American Minister to the Secretary of State.

No. 1093.] Port au Prince, July 5, 1912.

I have the honor to enclose herewith copy of the reports of the different departments of the Haitian Government submitted to Congress upon the opening of that body of April last.

[Inclosure 1.—Extract.—Translation.]

Message of the President to Congress.

Gentlemen. I have the honor, by this message, to hand to you the General Statement of the condition of the Republic. * * *

In reporting thereupon the Ministers have at the same time placed before you the efforts of the Government to ameliorate the conditions bequeathed to us by former administrations.

In the first place, I am glad to inform you that in the midst of this effort to better conditions the Republic is maintaining the most cordial relations with friendly powers. In proof thereof I need but cite the very courteous visit, at the beginning of this month, of the distinguished representative of the greatest Republic of the New World.[1]

In regard to the nation that is our nearest neighbor, the Republic is doing all that it can to strengthen more and more the friendship that unites us, which will always be the principal guaranty of our territorial integrity.

Report of the Minister for Foreign Affairs.

[Inclosure 2.—Extract.—Translation.]

Gentlemen: The examination of the numerous claims which we have found pending has absorbed and continues to absorb precious time. France had 38 of which 16 were for Syrians; Germany 14; American citizens 10; Great Britain 6; Italy 4; Denmark 1; Holland 1; Spain 1; Belgium 1; Dominican Republic 2. It was necessary to attend to them immediately, for certain foreign Powers had come to an understanding for the purpose of forming an international commission with a view of obtaining or imposing settlement.

In fact by a collective note dated December 22, 1910, which, nevertheless, was not signed by the American Minister, the Governments of Great Britain, France, Germany, United States and Italy proposed the formation of that commission, in which each one of them would have a representative. Haiti would have only one vote, since they gave her only one member. On July 4, 1911, a new collective note, bearing this time the signature of the Minister of the United States, was addressed to the Department of Foreign Relations by the representatives of the same Governments to announce their intention of organizing the commission if within a period of three months the difficulties pending had not been decided. It was a critical moment for the country. The new Government had scarcely been established when the Consulate General of Great Britain returned to the question. The Department hastened to state its intentions, and since then in interviews with the several signers of the collective note we have not failed by formal assurances to show our great desire to reach a prompt settlement. At the same time we refused even to admit the principle of an international commission.

[1] See infra "Visit of the Secretary of State to Haiti."

Faithful to its promises, the Government did not delay in giving proofs of its good faith. In fact, on October 14 last it granted, through the intermediation of the Legation of France, an indemnity of $8,000 to Mr. Prosperi, the father of that unfortunate young man who disappeared under the painful circumstances which are known.

On the request of the German Legation on October 20th we cleared the title to the bonds in the case of Mr. Samietz and likewise put an end to the dispute relative to the bonds of the Public Debt belonging to Mr. Ahrendts and to other German subjects.

On November 15th following, the American Legation collected at the Banque Nationale de la République d' Haiti the equivalent in principal and interest of the bonds delivered in the past in payment of the Heuvelman, Haven, Tecla Arci and Oaksmith claims.

Contrary to all expectation, the Department of Foreign Relations received December 8, 1911, a new collective note almost identical with the one of July 4. The period of three months was prolonged to April 4th. In a note as firm as it was courteous the Haitian Government protested against all attempt at forming an international commission; declaring ourselves willing, however, to refer to arbitration in the usual form all differences that it had not been able to settle otherwise.

This incident did not prevent us from continuing the examination of the claims presented by the citizens of the different foreign Powers. And on January 30 last the Department of Foreign Relations liquidated with the Consul General of Great Britain all the disputes pending up to that date. Hence it is that the Consulate General of H. B. M. took upon itself to indemnify Messrs. Julius Schama, Aaron Macnally, Samuel Lewison and Misses Idelie Angus, Elmiro Peters and Ellen Coban.

In the course of the same month of January, Doctor Terres, United States Consul, who had been previously chosen as umpire in the case of Mr. Ciplon, a Frenchman, rendered a decision in favor of Haiti. The claimant alleged that he had been the victim of a denial of justice. On the other hand, in carrying out two arbitration decisions against us by the same umpire, it was necessary to pay the sum of $7,000 to Messrs. Cauro and Massoni, French citizens.

In February our differences with Italy were ended by general settlement accepted by the Consul of that country. And the amounts granted by the Haitian Government were by its intermediary divided between Messrs. Francesco Paolo, Michel Senisse, Giuseppe Casale and Madam Gaetano Guadagnole.

We have, therefore, no differences with Great Britain and Italy. And if it is not possible to say as much of France and Germany, it is because the claims presented by the citizens of those Powers are more numerous or that they require a more careful examination. They will soon be settled, as well as those submitted directly to my Department by some citizens of the United States.

In the meantime the Syrian question presented itself. You know how much it has agitated public opinion.

On all sides, they called out energetically for the carrying out of the law of August 10, 1903. It was necessary to protect the nationals against the dishonest competition of the Levantines often of uncertain nationality; it was also necessary to protect the public health.

The Government, therefore, decided to act and refused licenses to a certain number of Syrians. At once the representatives of France, the United States, Dominican Republic, Great Britain, Cuba and Italy addressed to us identic notes tending to ask us to repeal the measure. Our reply was a precise statement of the question and an affirmation of our right to issue laws for the national protection. And we added that Haiti only followed the example of the United States, whose measures of exclusion against the Chinese are known to all. The Department maintained its views. However, the Haitian Government decided to grant licenses to persons of Syrian origin who, residing in Haiti, had obtained another nationality before the law of 1903.

While we were occupying ourselves with the Syrian incident, the question of our frontier limits absorbed the attention of the Department. Desirous above all of establishing on a solid basis the relations between the two peoples that divided the sovereignty of the Island, the present Government manifested from the outset the intention of again taking up the negotiations which were going on at Washington, and that had been interrupted by circumstances. Therefore, it hastened to furnish our new representative in the United States, Mr. Solon Ménos, whom it would be superfluous here to praise, full special powers, and to confer on him the mission of bringing to a good ending the negotiations which had already lasted too long.

The tragical death of President Cáceres happened to further delay the solution. As soon as this terrible news was confirmed, the President of the Republic hastened to cable his condolences to the Dominican people and to the widow of the unfortunate President. The election of Senator Eladio Victoria to the Presidency of the Dominican Republic and the sending to Washington of Mr. Peynado, the new Minister Plenipotentiary, permits us to hope that the examination of the frontier question will be immediately resumed.

In the meanwhile, it is our duty not to allow any attack on our rights. Therefore, we have occupied ourselves about reestablishing the statu quo before the Pedernales incident. And the Republic of Haiti has restricted itself to reorganizing the Posts at Bois-Tombé, Tête-à-l'Eau, Bois d'Ormes which have never ceased to form a part of its territory.

While deploring the civil war which is flooding with blood the neighboring Republic, we must not hide from you the sacrifices which we are obliged to impose upon ourselves with a view of preventing any hostile act being committed on our territory against a friendly Government. And we hope that the Dominican Government will finally be convinced that we have neglected nothing to that end.

Besides, the Blue Book, which my Department will publish soon, will give an idea of what we have done to defend our rights as well as to preserve and strengthen the good relations with all the friendly Powers.

These relations we can give you the assurance have remained the most cordial. And it is with pleasure that we particularly thank the President of the United States for having, on the 1st of January last, kindly shown his sympathy for the Haitian people by the telegram that he sent on that day to the President of the Republic. There is in that a delicate attention which the recent visit of Mr. Knox renders still dearer. That visit, of which the country preserves the best remembrance, cannot fail in strengthening the friendly bonds which unite us to the great Northern Republic.

ABROGATION OF THE RIGHT OF SYRIANS TO TRADE IN HAITI. RIGHTS OF AMERICAN CITIZENS OF SYRIAN BIRTH.

File No. 838.111/34.

The American Minister to the Secretary of State.

[Extract.]

No. 977.]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Port au Prince, November 25, 1911.

SIR: I have the honor to inform the Department that the Haitian Government has recommenced to attack the foreign merchants located in Haiti who sell at retail, which the law of October 24, 1876, prohibits.

During the Simon administration no effort was made to enforce the law which, in fact, has not been enforced for more than twenty years, though periodically former governments have attempted to do just what the present Government is endeavoring to do. During the Nord Alexis administration attempts were so frequently made to enforce the law that, upon request, the Department sent various instructions thereon.

At the commencement the campaign seemed to be directed against Syrians, and the Legation was not interested in it. However, during the last two or three days various American citizens of Syrian origin have been molested and I have promptly taken up the matter with Secretary Léger and have informed him that Americans in business in Haiti, though of Syrian origin, must have the same treatment as any other nationals, and unless the law of 1876 is strictly enforced Americans who sell at retail must not be molested.

The law of 1876 prohibits foreigners who are merchants in Haiti from selling except at wholesale and in amounts not less than Gds. 100., today about $23.00 gold. With the increasing poverty of the country this law has not been enforced until now there exist no stores in Haiti which comply with the letter of the law, nor few stores which do not sell at retail as we know it. In fact, practically all the important merchants sell in any quantity in accord with the purchasers' requests.

The stores here run by Americans are for the most part a credit to us. They are large dealers in American products. The fact that most of the proprietors are of Syrian origin is of no importance as they all are registered as citizens of the United States in our consulates by order of the Department. The law of 1903 against the further introduction of Syrians has nothing to do with the prevention of Americans of Syrian origin from enjoying the same rights as might be enjoyed by a native born American.

In presenting the cases of the American merchants to Secretary Léger, while I have been courteous, I have nevertheless been firm in stating that I would insist that American merchants have the same treatment as French or German ones without reference to parentage or racial affiliation, and I have been promised that the matter will be regulated to my satisfaction.

The American Minister to the Secretary of State.

[Extract.]

American Legation,
No. 989.] Port au Prince, December 19, 1911.

Sir: In further reference to my No. 977 of November 25, 1911, I have to say that the assurances given me by Secretary Léger as reported therein have not been realized. Instead there has grown out of the affair a very serious condition which necessitates the prompt attention of the Department.

Complaints of citizens of the United States of Syrian origin were so numerous, both by personal visits to the Legation and by telegrams from the more remote places, as to necessitate frequent visits to the Haitian Foreign Office to adjust matters. In some instances Americans were cited to appear at court to stand trial for selling at retail, in other cases armed guards were placed before stores and those entering to make purchases were arrested, and in still other cases our merchants were fined and sentenced to prison, but happily these judgments were not executed. As soon as I had arranged for the abatement of one kind of prosecution another kind was initiated and I was kept quite busy arranging affairs.

In every case I insisted that Americans be accorded the same treatment as the most favored of other nations. As Germans, French and others were selling at retail I insisted upon like privileges for my nationals. It was evident, however, that the campaign was being directed against only those of supposed Syrian origin.

On the 9th instant I called at the Department of Foreign Relations to inform Secretary Léger that the branch store at Gonaives of Messrs. Zrike and Company, American, of this city had been closed by the local government of that place and the custom house at Gonaives had refused to permit it to withdraw perishable merchandise. Secretary Léger said he would at once telegraph the officials at Gonaives to remove the restrictions. In the conversation which followed I stated that the campaign against foreigners selling by retail was very detrimental to the good name of Haiti and the annoyances to which the Americans had been subjected was very vexatious and caused an immense amount of unnecessary work for this Legation; that as he acknowledged it was impossible to force universal compliance with the law of 1876, in fact from the standpoint of the masses it was not desirable to do so, I hoped that the campaign would soon end, but that until it did end I could stand for no discrimination against Americans.

Secretary Léger stated that the Government had decided to stop further prosecutions and that an effort would be made in the coming Congress to modify the law so as to make it less onerous, if enforced.

I told Secretary Léger that I had heard the Government intended to refuse the licenses of those of Syrian birth. I reminded him of our naturalization law with which he is acquainted and of which he said he has copies. I stated that the fact that a man had been born Syrian was not taken into account by the Legation, neither was the fact that a man obtained his citizenship by naturalization of any importance; that all citizens of the United States were equal and when their citizenship was certified by our consulate the Legation must protect them. I stated that there are a number of Americans in business in Haiti and I would have to oppose the Haitian Government if an attempt be made to force them out of business solely because it is thought they were Syrian born.

In further conversation Secretary Léger also said that it was his recollection that when he was Haitian Minister at Washington he had an understanding with the State Department, after the passage of the Syrian exclusion act of 1903, whereby the Department agreed to admit the right of the Haitian Government to exclude even Syrians naturalized Americans. He thought I would find this in my archives. I stated that I had recently read everything from the Department subsequent to 1903 and had not noted it and I felt sure that the Department would not consent to discrimination as to birth of those who are now full fledged citizens.

I had arranged to call on President Leconte on the 11th for an informal talk. Before leaving the Legation the official gazette, "Le Moniteur," was handed me and I noted that it contained a long list of those who have been refused licenses and who must liquidate their business within an appointed time. I enclose herewtih copies[1] of the same. From this it is noted that there are included numerous American firms scattered over Haiti.

I stated to the President that this Legation had nothing to say as to Syrians, but that I should have to insist that all Americans in Haiti be given the same chance as is given to other favored nations. The President seemed to be impressed and said any objection to the denial of license would be considered by the Cabinet if addressed through the Department of Foreign Relations.

At the request of the British representative I, as Dean of the Diplomatic Corps, called a meeting on the 15th instant to consider what action, if any, should be taken relative to the refusal of licenses to our nationals. At the meeting the sentiment was strong against the attitude of the Haitian Government.

The other diplomatic representatives were very desirous of knowing what would be the attitude of this Legation on the different points. I explained that as no emergency existed, after full presentation of the case, I would await instructions before taking any decisive action. It was suggested that a joint note be sent to the Haitian Government. I stated it would be impossible to take part in a joint note without the consent of my Government, but that I was willing to send an identic note if such could be agreed upon. My suggestions as to the matter of the note were accepted, as was also the suggestion that the French and Dominican Ministers should draft the note for presentation at a subsequent meeting of the Corps which was set for the 18th instant.

On the 18th the Diplomatic Corps met and considered the note as presented and with a few alterations the note was accepted. The German, French, British, Dominican and Cuban representatives used the French text, copy of which is enclosed, while I used the English text, copy of which is also enclosed.

The only question of doubt in my mind is as to the status of such Americans of Syrian origin as may have been naturalized subsequent to 1903 and have come here. Relative to such I request instructions. It would appear to me that once we recognize a person as a full fledged American citizen he should have all the rights as such.

I am also desirous of knowing if the Department came to any understanding with Mr. Leger when he was Haitian Minister at Washington, whereby the Department consented to the exclusion of Americans of Syrian origin arriving in Haiti subsequent to the act of 1903, whether naturalized Americans prior or subsequent thereto.

Interior, making known to the persons named therein that the renewing of licenses requested by them for the fiscal year 1911–1912 have not been accorded them and enjoining these consignee-merchants to liquidate their commercial interests in Haiti as soon as possible within the time fixed.

This extreme measure is brought about by a series of acts for sometime successively undertaken by the municipal authorities against a certain category of foreigners, systematically done with the object of excluding them from exercising commerce in Haiti.

Such a decision, as severe as unexpected, creates for the American citizens to whom it applies a disastrous situation; it is of a nature to cause the ruin of a certain number of my nationals who are established in the country and have exercised therein for a long time, more or less, their profession, under the protection and with the assent of the Haitian Government; it is at the time causing much apprehension as to the interests of third parties, other nationals, who are supplying them with merchandise. Your excellency will permit me finally to observe that such an exclusion, if it is put in practice, will not conform to the spirit of justice and equity, neither to international treaties and usages which tend more and more to facilitate on the basis of an amicable reciprocity the commercial relations between people.

For these reasons and considerations and in view of the legitimate support of its nationals, it also becomes necessary for this Legation to render an account of this affair to the American Government, and I am obliged to request from your excellency the reasons for which the Haitian Government has decided upon the suppression of the commercial establishments of the Americans referred to above. Your excellency's attention is called to the matter in question and this Legation desires to point out to the Haitian Government the propriety of not maintaining the decision referred to and permit those interested to enjoy conditions which have existed up to the present, all of which will contribute to maintain the good relations so happily prevailing between our two countries.

Please accept [etc.]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Port au Prince, January 16, 1912.

SIR: In reference to my No. 989 of December 19, 1911, I have the honor to enclose herewith copies of further correspondence with the Haitian Government relative to the refusal of licenses to certain American firms.

There is also enclosed copy and translation of a note on the same subject which, under date of January 3, 1912, was sent to the Haitian Government by the representatives of Great Britain, France, Cuba, Santo Domingo, Austria and Italy.

I delayed sending my note until the 8th in the hopes that the mail from the States arriving on the 7th would bring me definite instructions from the Department.

I have [etc.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Port au Prince, December 26, 1911.

MR. MINISTER: I have had the honor to receive the note of December 18 current by which you advise me of the notice inserted in the "Moniteur" of the 9th of this month, relative to certain merchants who, being refused licenses, have been requested to liquidate their business in a given time. You add that such a measure was brought about by a series of acts tending to exclude a certain category of foreigners from exercising commerce, that it is of a nature to cause the ruin of a certain number of your nationals; that it does not conform to the spirit of justice and equity nor to international treaties and usages. Finally, you request me to indicate the reasons for which the Haitian Government has taken such a decision which, you assure us, it should have no interest to maintain.

In reply, permit me to affirm to you that there was not in the act to which you have been kind enough to call my attention, anything of a nature to make the slightest change in the excellent cordial relations which so happily exist between our two countries. And you will agree with me that every State is forced to protect its own nationals. Surely it is that duty of protection that has obliged the United States to adopt measures towards foreigners engaged abroad by contract, and towards the Chinese measures of exclusion which everybody knows of. And no one, to my knowledge at any rate, has up to now found these measures contrary to the spirit of justice and equity or not conforming with international treaties and usages. They have, rather, been considered as a strong means of defense against a competition judged prejudicial to the interests of their nationals. It is the same means of defense which the Republic of Cuba, inspired no doubt by the suggestions of the United States, has found it a duty to employ. You can not find it wrong, then, that Haiti in her turn seeks to protect her nationals against the Syrians. And, as you know, the Government of the United States only considers the origin of the Chinese, considering with reason, no doubt, that the latter would easily evade the laws of exclusion by means of naturalization which they would hasten to obtain to be allowed either to enter or to dwell in its territory.

To the preceding reasons I shall request permission to add that the license granted by the President of the Republic is, in the terms of the law now in force, good only for one year. All those who solicit this license know that they can be granted or refused; there is therein a contingency which they surely do not lose sight of. The obligation to request a license and the privilege of granting or refusing it are not peculiar to the Republic of Haiti; they are to be found, for some industries, in other bodies of laws, especially in the laws of certain states of the United States.

The Government brings, in the execution of the existing laws, all the spirit of justice and equity possible. I am pleased to hope that you will agree with me and, in the meanwhile, I take [etc.].

Identic Note of the Ministers to the Haitian Minister for Foreign Affairs.[1]

PORT AU PRINCE, January 8, 1912.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: I have received your letter dated December 28 [26?] replying to that which I had the honor to address you the 18th of the same month on the subject of the notice inserted in the "Moniteur" of the 9th, which constituted a general refusal to renew licenses to all classes of foreigners residing in Haiti among which are a certain number of my citizens.

I can not acquiesce in the manner in which it is set forth by your excellency, nor leave without reply that which, to me, appears to support the arguments presented.

Your excellency brings up the duty of every State to protect its nationals and cites in support of this ground of conduct the example of the United States and Cuba. Now, from my information, in these two countries the measures proclaimed with regard to certain foreigners and particularly to the Chinese treat only of the regulation of the conditions of admission of the new arrivals and does not in any way affect the situation of immigrants already established.

Likewise, in that which concerns the issuance of licenses, if this formality exists in certain States of the American Union, it is a simple mode of proceeding, intended to allow a control of the conduct of the industrials, but its refusal is never a capricious act on the part of the competent authority, it should be delivered in the regular way and based on special grounds setting forth the reasons for which it is opposed, in any case it does not invest it with a collective character and can only arbitrarily and without justified grievance be prejudicial to existing conditions.

[1] The American Minister's note is not inclosed with the despatch. The following is the inclosed translation of the identic note of the other Ministers.

No similarity can be drawn from these provisions to furnish support of the measure of exclusion, retroactive and in mass, published in the "Moniteur" of December 9th.

In principle commerce is free in the United States; it is equally so in other countries of which certain of the citizens are included in that act of ostracism. Haitians can freely carry on there like or such other commerce or industry. It is, therefore, really only a minimum of reciprocity to justify the respect of all the establishments set up by fellow-citizens working peaceably in Haiti.
